STATE LEGISLATIVE PLANS.

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS ON MANY SUBJECTS.

ASSEMBLYMEN FINDING THE COMMITTEES MORE ACCEPTABLE—DISCUSSION ABOUT ECONOMICAL PLANS—SOME OF THE BILLS INTRODUCED—THE SENATE'S WORK—SENATORIAL CAUCUSES ON MONDAY EVENING.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 17.—Having slept over their disappointment, the dissatisfied members of the Assembly were this morning in their places, feeling resigned to their fate, and inclined to regard the Speaker's work as creditable to him, if it was not exactly pleasing to every individual member. It was seen that the committees that needed strong men had got them, and that most of the best men had been furnished with all the work they could do, if they should fill the places conscientiously.

The session to-day was rather interesting than important. There was a good deal of talk about economy in the expenditures of the House, and it may be that the first step was taken toward a reduction in the force of employes for the Legislature. The discussion arose on the report of Mr. Beckwith, for the Committee on Expenditures of the House, favoring the appointment of Reuben L. Fox for Superintendent of mail and express matter. Mr. Skinner, rising to a point of order, that the appointment should not be made pending the investigation in regard to these employes, was overruled by the Speaker, when he offered a substitute for the report, ordering deputy clerks to be appointed and detailed for the duties of superintendents of mail and wrapping. He then spoke at some length and with great earnestness. His sole purpose was, he said, to carry out the pledges of the Republican Party to economize in expenditures. The Clerk has the power to appoint nine deputies, and he knew that many clerks were idle a great part of the time. He was opposed to paying clerks $9 a day and then employing men to do the work for which the men named in the resolution were mentioned. It had come to his knowledge that many clerks appointed never did anything more than to draw their salaries. "The man who would go into the State Treasury," said he, "and take money for which he rendered no service, is a thief." He urged the members to do their best to restrict the expenditures of the House to those necessary.

Mr. Brooks joined in Mr. Skinner's appeal to the Assembly to be economical, and produced a sheet containing a comparative statement of the expenses of the Legislature for several years. In 1845 there were 26 employes, costing $6,532 80. The number of employes and expenditures increased steadily up to 1872, when there were 323, to whom $121,893 45 were paid. The expense dropped to $75,228 22 in 1872, when there were 176 employes. In 1875 there were 104 employes, who were paid $70,947 40, and in 1878, 125, at an expense of $68,073 20. Mr. Brooks expressed his anxiety to get rid of many of the servants of the Assembly, and moved to refer the matter to the Special Committee on Expenditures. Mr. Stranan followed Mr. Brooks, and pointed out that the most expensive year in the list shown was that when the Democrats were in power, to which Mr. Brooks warmly replied that he was determined to correct the mistakes made in the past by Democrats as well as Republicans. Mr. Skinner went on, alluding in his remarks to the evil effect upon young men of the idleness encouraged by the appointment of men to places in which there was nothing to be done except to draw salaries. This year the pressure for places was greater than ever, and the evil tendency should be checked. Mr. Terry favored Mr. Brooks' resolution, and believed with him that the work could be done without increasing the force of the employes.

Mr. Beckwith, a new member, was heard for the first time in explaining why his committee had made its report as it did. He had been led to believe the officers were necessary, and in making the report he had acted conscientiously. He was furthermore willing to leave the matter in the hands of the older members, and was as fully impressed as any one could be with the importance of reducing expenditures. Mr. Sloan moved the previous question, in order to finish a debate that had been long enough, but before it was put Mr. Brooks managed to get one more explanation in, defending the Democratic Party, after which the resolution went to the special committee.

Mr. Langbein, who is not amiable about his appointment to the head of the Committee on Militia, was again provoked to-day. A committee was appointed to represent the Assembly at Bath, on Jan. 23, when the Soldiers's Home is to be opened, and the Speaker designated the Committee on Militia for the purpose, making Mr. Trowbridge, of Kings, Chairman of the committee for the occasion.

There were some curious bills and resolutions among those offered to-day. The United States Senate has been named in several resolutions presented, and the movers were evidently fearful that the Washington legislators were in need of suggestions. Mr. Fish started the fast to-day, and checked the disposition to multiply the number, by obtaining the reference of one of the resolutions to the Committee on Federal Relations. Another, offered by Mr. Sherman, of Kings, calling upon the United States Senators to urge the passage of the Eight-hour law was promptly tabled. Mr. Sheridan also had a bill to reduce the fare on the boats of the Union Ferry Company uniformly to 1 cent. Mr. Arnold's resolution urging United States Senators to procure the passage of the bill making legal-tender notes receivable for duties on imports, was adopted.

Mr. Terry's bill, introduced to-day, and read through from the desk at his request, is the same bill that was passed last year for the distribution of the funds now in the Insurance Department which stand to the credit of the National Life Insurance Company, of New-York, for the security of its policy-holders. It failed to become a law last year in consequence of the refusal of Gov. Robinson to approve it.

The adjournment was made until Monday evening at 7 o'clock.

In the Senate, Mr. Jacobs offered a resolution, which was adopted, requiring the Superintendent of Banks to report to the Senate the number of savings institutions in the State that have failed during the last 10 years, with the names of the institutions, dates of failure, and Receivers that have been appointed and are now acting. He also offered another resolution requiring the Superintendent of Insurance to report similar information with regard to the insurance companies of the State.

Mr. St. John called from the table the Assembly resolution congratulating the State and country on the resumption of specie payment, but, at the request of Senator McCarthy, its adoption was postponed until next week.

Senator Rockwell offered a resolution that the Senate go into the election of a Senator of the United States, to succeed Roscoe Conkling, on Tuesday next, Jan. 21. It was adopted, with a joint resolution, offered by Senator McCarthy, that the two houses meet in convention on Wednesday next to compare nominations.

The following committees was appointed on the resolution of Senator Goodwin to investigate the subject of expenses of the two houses of the Legislature, as well as of the State Departments, with a view to reducing the number and compensation of employes: Messrs. Goodwin, St. John, McCarthy, Hicks, and Davenport.

The bill appropriating $200,000 to complete the equipment of the National Guard was passed without opposition. Senator Robertson presented the annual report of the Astor Library, and a resolution to print 500 copies was adopted. The report, in addition to its usual fund of interesting information, rejoices in the addition to the library during the past year of the archives of the Sanitary Commission, some valuable manuscripts of the eleventh century, and a copy of a German Bible printed in the fourteenth century. The Senate adjourned to Monday evening.

Both parties will hold caucuses for the nomination of a United States Senator on Monday evening. The Democratic complimentary nomination will probably be given to Lieu.-Gov. Dorshheimer. No opposition to the re-election of Senator Conkling has yet been developed among the Republicans.

The Assembly Chamber will undoubtedly be crowded to its fullest capacity on Monday evening, when the Republicans will hold their joint caucus to nominate a United States Senator. The Assembly will meet at 7 o'clock, and there will be very brief session, after which the Democrats will withdraw and the Republican members of the Senate will march into the Assembly. The name of Roscoe Conkling will be presented by Senators Pomeroy and Harris, and by Speaker Alvord and Messrs. Sloan and Husted, of the Assembly. The desire to attend the caucus is quite as great among the ladies of Albany as among the sterner sex.

A SUIT BETWEEN POLITICIANS.

The remarkable local political campaign of 1872 was recalled by the circumstances of the suit of Julius Wadsworth against James O'Brien, which was before Judge Barrett, in the Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday. The plaintiff was the Apollo Hall candidate for Representative in Congress from the Tenth District, in that campaign, and was defeated by Fernando Wood. He sues to recover $2,500 on a promissory note made to him by O'Brien, for a loan, who sets up a counter-claim for $3,500 which he asserts he expended in the interest of Wadsworth's candidacy. The motion yesterday was by the plaintiff for a bill of particulars from the defendant. The counsel for O'Brien asserted that all the money claimed to be due him from Wadsworth was expended in the campaign, but the time was so distant that but few of the items could be recalled. Judge Barrett reserved his decision.

SINGULAR REMARKS FROM THE BENCH.

A rather singular outburst on the part of young Judge Joseph F. Daly yesterday morning provoked much comment on the part of a large number of persons present in the Special Term room of the Common Pleas. It seems that J. Adriance Bush, the Secretary of the Bar Association's Committee on Official Extortions, had some motion before the Judge. During a pause Assistant Corporation Counsel Miller handed up some papers on a formal application in an assessment case to obtain the signature of the court. Judge Daly said he thought Mr. Miller's papers might be sufficient, but at the same time he himself could not be too cautious in these days of official investigation. Looking Mr. Bush straight in the face, Judge Daly went on to say: "Anybody who would prefer charges of misconduct or of dishonesty against Judge Loew would not hesitate to prefer charges against anybody." These remarks, which were entirely uncalled for, excited some astonishment. As they were not spoken to Mr. Bush, that gentleman could not well reply. Mr. Loew, the present Register, was formerly a Judge of the Common Pleas with Judge Daly, and since he obtained his present fat office has been successful in begging references from his former associates on the Bench.

THE MILITIAMEN'S CONVENTION.

CLOSING SESSION—THE DRAFT OF AN ACT TO BE SUBMITTED TO CONGRESS.

The convention for the reorganization of the National Militia reassembled at the Seventh Regiment Armory yesterday morning, Adjt.-Gen. C. H. Barney in the chair. When the roll of delegates was called the following additional delegates responded:

Illinois—Capt. John S. Loomis.
Ohio—Adjt.-Gen. Meilly and Major Stible.
Missouri—Capt. J. R. Dougherty, Col. Charles W. Squire, and Col. Charles W. Hunt.
Iowa—Adjt.-Gen. W. L. Alexander.
South Carolina—Gen. E. M. Moise.
Louisiana—Gen. G. T. Beauregard and Gen. Dabney H. Maury.

The Committee on Legislation reported a revised copy of the act under discussion yesterday, and after it had been accepted, it was taken up, section by section, for adoption by the convention. Early in the day Judge Henry Hilton visited the convention, and was granted the privileges of the floor with much applause. Judge Hilton took a seat by the Chairman, and after thanking the convention for the very flattering reception accorded him, he said that the action of the convention, and the proposition to reorganize our Militia on a plan similar to that followed in Europe, and at the same time to maintain our individuality, met with his approbation. The convention continued its work of passing on the clauses of the new act. The result of the work was the adoption of a bill of which the salient points were as follows:

SECTION 1. The male citizens between the ages of 18 and 45 years shall constitute the Militia, which shall be divided into two classes—the National Guard and the reserve Militia. The National Guard shall consist of the uniformed troops, and shall always be first called on for duty. The reserve Militia shall be enrolled as the State Legislatures shall direct, and shall not be liable for active duty except in time of war. In time of peace the number of officers and men in the National Guard in each State shall be prescribed by its Legislature, conforming as closely as practicable to the regular Army. When called upon to enter the service of the United States the Militia, (when called by regiments,) may be organized by the President into brigades and divisions.

SEC. 5. The President shall appoint a board of seven officers, two of whom shall be officers of the Army, and five officers selected from the active Militia of the Eastern, Middle, Southern, Western, and Pacific States, for the purpose of selecting a suitable campaign uniform and equipments.

SEC. 6. Each State receiving a part of the appropriation shall cause its active Militia to be properly uniformed and equipped according to the provisions of section 5, no objection to be made to any organization wearing full dress of their own select on.

SEC. 7. Uniforms and equipments to be exempt from all suits, executions, and all debts and taxes.

SEC. 8. The President shall appoint a board of seven to prepare a system of rules for the discipline of the active Militia; the board comprising two officers of the Army and four from the active Militia from the Eastern, Middle, Southern, Western, and Pacific States.

SEC. 9. The sum of $1,000,000 shall be annually appropriated from the money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the purpose of providing arms, ammunition, and other ordnance and Quartermaster's stores for the active Militia. Such appropriation shall be apportioned among the several States and Territories in proportion to their regular organized and uniformed active Militia in service on Dec. 1 each year.

SEC. 10. The small arms and ammunition shall be of the pattern selected by the several States, but of the same calibre and chamber as those prescribed for the regular Army, and to be suitable for military service.

SEC. 12. It shall be the duty of the Adjutant-General of each State and Territory on Jan. 1 of each year to make and return to the War Department of the results of the annual inspections of Militia and military property.

Section 13 provides that an annual inspection of the several organizations shall be made by the Adjutant-General.

Section 14 provides that notice shall be given by each Adjutant-General to the Secretary of War of the time and place of the annual inspections, in order to give the President an opportunity to detail an officer to accompany the State Inspector in his annual inspection.

Section 15 provides that each State shall provide a rifle range, and section 16 authorizes the Secretary of War to offer annually to the regularly authorized and uniformed Militia a prize not to exceed $100 in value, for competition in rifle practice, and to offer annually a prize of $1,000 to be shot for by a team from the National Guard or Militia of each State or Territory and each of the three divisions of the Army.

Section 17 allows the Governor of any State or Territory to apply to the Secretary of War to assign from the regular Army officers from the active or retired list of the Army to act as Adjutants of regiments or Assistant Adjutant-Generals of brigades and divisions.

Section 20 provides that officers of the Militia, while actually serving upon any of the boards created by sections 5 or 6, shall receive the pay of their rank, not to exceed that of a Colonel in the Army, and mileage.

Section 21 provides that there shall be at least one annual encampment of the Militia of each State and Territory for purposes of instruction. On the application of the Governor of any State or more each of the annual appropriation as may be due upon its quota may be applied toward the subsistence and expenses of the troops encamped, not to exceed the rate of $1 a day per man, and for the purchase of necessary camp and garrison equipage.

At 4 P. M. a recess was taken, and the delegates took lunch with Col. W. C. Church, at his residence, No. 51 Irving-place. The rooms of Col. Church were elaborately decorated for the occasion, and the guests did ample justice to a well-selected ménu. The convention reassembled at 5 P. M., and passed resolutions of thanks to their officers and to the officers of the Seventh Regiment for their courtesy and attention. At a meeting of the Executive Committee, subsequently, Messrs. Heath, Molse, and Hammond were appointed a committee to lay the bill before Congress.

A WOMAN IN MALE ATTIRE.

THE STORY OF HER ARREST AND WHY SHE LEFT BOSTON.

Between 5 and 6 o'clock on Thursday evening Officer Cody, of the Western Steam-boat Squad, while on duty at the pier of the Fall River steamers, was accosted by a girl in male attire, who asked him to direct her to some place where she could procure decent lodging. The girl carried a small sachel in her hand, and though she endeavored to conceal her sex, her voice alone was sufficient to betray her. She was attired in a clumsily-made and ill-fitting suit, with overcoat, and wore buttoned gaiters and stout boots. Officer Cody took pains to learn from person who addressed him was a female, escorted her to the station-house, and yesterday morning took her before Justice Otterbourg, in the Tombs Police Court. The Justice had her taken into his private room, and after a short talk with her, temporarily committed her to the care of Matron Foster. She was again brought up in the afternoon, and Justice Otterbourg inquired at length into her history. The prisoner, who had by this time changed her clothing, submitted to the magistrate a written statement, which was an autobiography in brief, and which is substantially as follows: She said her name was Madge Rivers, and that she was born of English parents in Boston, 18 years ago. She was left an orphan at an early age, and was then adopted by a family named Worthley, who were friends of her parents. She graduated at the Boston High School last year, and she says her troubles commenced from that date. The Worthley family, who were living in Everett, near Boston, had many sons and Madge, who had always gone to school and was now idle, considered herself a burden on their hands. She says she looked for employment in Boston, but failing to get it she determined to come to this City, and chose male attire as the most fitting for her expedition. She took the 6 o'clock train from Boston to Fall River, on Wednesday evening, and from her story it would appear that she experienced a most unpleasant journey. At the request of Justice Otterbourg, she wrote yesterday to her friends in Everett. She will remain, for the present, in the City Prison.

YALE ALUMNI ASSOCIATION.

The New-York Association of the Alumni of Yale College held its annual meeting and election of officers last night at Delmonico's, about 100 members being present. Vice-President Henry Holt occupied the chair. Among the members in attendance were Brayton Ives, T. F. Wentworth, Joseph C. Jackson, E. C. Delavan, W. W. Phelps, and Rev. Dr. Clapp. The guest of the association for the evening was Prof. Thomas A. Thatcher, of Yale who was most heartily welcomed. The Treasurer's report showed that there were 196 members in the association, and that the balance of funds on hand is $1,384, against $1,153 at the last annual report. Prof. Thatcher entertained the association with some reminiscences of Yale College 41 years ago, when he began his official connection with it as a tutor. Prof. Day was at its head, and the faculty comprised Profs. Silliman, Kingsley, Fitch, Goodrich, Olmstead, Woolsey, and Stanley, of whom but one now survives. In 1838, there were 31 teachers and 561 students. Now there are 91 teachers and over 1,000 students. Mr. E. C. Delavan offered an amendment to the constitution, the effect of which will, if adopted, be to widen the aim of the association in promoting the interests of the university. The following gentlemen were elected officers for the ensuing year: President—Charles Tracy, '32. Vice-Presidents—E. C. Stedman, '53; William C. Whitney, '63. Secretary—R. W. De Forest, '70. Treasurer—Joseph C. Jackson, '37. Executive Committee—Charles Holt, '65; J. F. Kernochan, '63; Lyman H. Bagg, '69; William C. Gulliver, '70; Arthur M. Dodge, '74.

MRS. COBB'S LIFE SENTENCE.

CLOSING SCENES OF THE NORWICH MURDER TRIAL.

TO BE SENT TO STATE PRISON FOR LIFE—A MOTION MADE FOR A NEW TRIAL—THE DELIBERATIONS OF THE JURY IN FULL.

NORWICH, Jan. 17.—The closing scenes of the trial of Mrs. Cobb for the murder of her husband occurred this morning, when the prisoner was brought into court to receive her sentence. An area directly in front of the bench, hitherto occupied by lawyers and favored spectators, was cleared, and the prisoner, who, during the former sessions of the court, had been in a somewhat secluded corner, was seated here, opposite the Judge. Beside her sat her mother, brother, and two female friends, and upon the other hand the Sheriff, who, meeting her after the jailer brought her in, shook hands with her cordially, and attended her during the final scene rather from courtesy than duty. Judge Park had gone to New-Haven, where his brother lay at the point of death, and Judge Culver alone occupied the bench. The jury having been seated, and Mrs. Cobb's counsel, (except Col. Walt,) having appeared, State's Attorney Waller moved to postpone the trial of Bishop until the March term, when the State would be ready to proceed. This motion was based upon the ground that the Chief-Justice was needed in the Supreme Court at Hartford, that Judge Culver had already spared three weeks from his regular term in Bridgeport, and that Bishop's counsel, A. F. Park, was also in New-Haven. The court granted the motion.

Mr. Waller then moved that sentence be passed upon Mrs. Cobb. Judge Culver's remarks occupied only about 10 minutes, and were delivered in a very calm, dignified way. He was listened to with close attention. First he remarked upon the absence of Judge Park, then upon the painful nature of his duty, and thirdly, upon the fairness of the trial. The accused woman had enjoyed every advantage of law and counsel. It was most sad to see a woman of the unusual endowments of the prisoner and of her age in this situation, being a mother, a daughter, and a sister. He pitied the sorrowing mother, whose declining years were thus blighted, and he pitied her bright, innocent, and now more than orphaned children. But, as the Chief-Justice had said in his charge, "Justice cuts and cleaves without mercy or compassion, but not vindictively." The object of the law was to protect society, and it was especially noticeable that during the past 18 months there had been an extraordinary prevalence of this crime in Connecticut, "the land of steady habits." But it was wisely and mercifully ordained that most crime should be seen and punished. "Justice rides in a leaden coach, but she has an iron hand." All human tribunals and testimony are fallible, and she might be innocent; but the prisoner had been fairly tried, and one of her intelligence could not but see that the testimony against her was very strong. He pointed her to the one great and last source of consolation in impressive terms; told her that she would be cared for kindly in prison, and added: "The sentence of this court is, that you be confined in State Prison during your natural life."

The prisoner met with her well down. Its broad hem entirely concealed her lips and chin, but the thinner portion partly revealed her cheeks and eyes. During the whole address of the court she did not wince nor shed a tear. The allusion to her child brought a very decided flush to her cheeks and brow, but this was the only sign of animation. Her hands were crossed demurely in her lap, and her head was erect. After a moment's pause, Mr. Thresher, of her counsel, asked leave to move for a new trial, and for the customary 10 days in which to frame the motion. No objection was offered, and the permission was conceded. The Sheriff then offered Mrs Cobb his arm, and, contrary to the practice of the past few days, she was ushered out of the room before Judge Culver. The latter then briefly dismissed the jury from further service.

The jurors now talk with perfect freedom concerning their six hours' deliberations. The jury was composed of eight farmers, one boss-painter, one carpenter, one shop-keeper, and one manufacturer. They were all married men, most of them with children, and most of them church members. Their ages ranged from 40 to 70 years. All of them were intelligent, conscientious men. Several of them had lain awake nights through the trial, weighing the testimony and their own duty. There was also a very conciliatory disposition manifested, notwithstanding which differences of opinion kept an hour elapsed before the Sheriff brought in their supper, and during that time they decided that Cobb had been murdered. One man, partly to promote discussion and clearness of view, and partly because he thought that Cobb might have been taking arsenic to fatten himself, voted against the murder theory on the first ballot, but soon gave in his adhesion verbally. Soon after supper a general discussion began, and toward 9 o'clock a ballot was had on the question whether Mrs. Cobb had any share in the crime. The result was 10 yeas and 2 nays. Most of the 10 felt that the crime was murder in the first degree, but not all of them. Nearly an hour's debate, in which all joined actively, followed, and then another ballot was taken on the question of second degree. Four favored War to manslaughter. The eight were all first degree men. The others were two second degree men, and the other two doubted Mrs. Cobb's complicity. It was at this point that the jury was called into court and reported a disagreement. Argument began immediately when the jurors were again in privacy. The consideration of sex does not appear to have influenced any of the jurors. Aside from emphasizing theory, the other causes of doubt were Bishop's own unworthiness, and the haziness of evidence about exact days and hours of certain assignations. But these were soon overcome. A ballot was again had on second degree, and resulted—yeas 10, nays 2. The two were still firm for murder in the first degree. Finally, the spirit of harmony brought those two to unanimity with the others, and word was sent to Judge Culver. The closing scenes of last night's session have already been described.

An incident which greatly influenced some of the jurors was a discovery regarding the initials "M. A. R." on the pencil-case. One juror carried a powerful magnifying-glass. Before employing it in this matter, he called his associates' attention to the fact that, if a novice wanted to engrave initials, there were no three letters in the alphabet easier to scratch than these. He then applied the glass, and it revealed such unworkmanlike bungling and slips of the tool that the jurors all agreed that Mrs. Cobb had done that marking herself as a blind. This discovery and the motives of the act told heavily against the prisoner. Still another fact that had a strong influence was Mrs. Cobb's own admission that she went to Bishop's house for his soiled shirt alone and at night.

The verdict was something of a surprise to the community, as it had settled down into an expectation of a disagreement. A large element of society wishes that the verdict might have been murder in the first degree, for which penalty is death in this State, but most people are satisfied with the result. Very general satisfaction is felt, too, with the hearing and rulings of the two Judges. While thoroughly impartial, they seemed to recognize the peculiar necessity at this time for dealing sternly with crime.

There hardly seems to be much chance of a new trial of Mrs. Cobb. So strangely does public sentiment sustain the verdict that the chances are fully two to one that another jury would find her guilty of murder in the first degree, and her counsel will hardly advise incurring such a risk. The motion given is a customary formality, and does not indicate a distinct intention to move for the new trial. The possible grounds for the motion hinted at by Mrs. Cobb's lawyers are Judge Park's not attending the testimony of Floyd H. Crane and other conversations bearing on the case and certain features of the Judge's charge. It is claimed that the State was allowed to admit hearsay and conversation not connected with any act, and that thus the court was unfair. The defense has found new evidence of Cobb's calling his wife "pet," which might be of value. The State, however, has found several persons whose lips have been sealed thus far, who can testify as to rides and walks of Bishop and Mrs. Cobb together, not before mentioned. Another particularly disgusting but convincing piece of testimony, which cannot be fully described in print, has also come to the notice of the authorities. It is probable, therefore, that the State would make out a much stronger case on a new trial than it has thus far. With a view, perhaps, to checking the tide of public sentiment until it is decided whether or not to try the case again, or perhaps as a foundation to a future effort to get a pardon, the counsel for Mrs. Cobb have given to the press the letter purporting to have been written by her.

Mrs. Cobb has made the following statement to the public to-day, through her counsel:

NORWICH, Jan. 17, 1879.

To the Public:

In view of the fact that up to the present time I have kept silence, except when on the witness-stand, in regard to my connection with the crime of which I have been accused, I have been requested by gentlemen connected with the public press to make some further statement than I yet have with regard to the matter. I have only to say that, believing that the innocence of which I was conscious would be vindicated, and acting under the advice of my counsel, I remained silent until the time of my trial. At the trial I told, as my oath as witness bound me to do, the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. On the testimony of a perjurer, together with that of other witnesses against me, some of whom were mistaken in their statements, the jury have found me guilty. I do not call in question the honesty of this verdict. I can only say that it is a mistaken one, and protest most solemnly that I am innocent of the crime with which I have been charged, and of which I have been convicted.

BANK OFFICERS ARRAIGNED.

The affairs of the insolvent Mechanics' and Laborers' Savings Bank of Jersey City were again before the Hudson County (N. J.) General Sessions yesterday, when James W. Donellan, the Secretary, and Patrick Sheeran, a Director of the bank, were arraigned before Judge Garretson on an indictment charging them with conspiracy to defraud the depositors of the bank. The indictment sets forth that they and others, Directors and officers of the bank, made an examination of its affairs on Feb. 15, 1877, when they ascertained that the institution was insolvent, but that, instead of making the fact public, they conspired together to conceal it for the purpose of defrauding the depositors. Donellan was arrested by Constable Donavan at the bank, and Sheeran was taken into custody by Deputy Sheriff Pell at his residence. Both gentlemen expressed great surprise on being informed of the indictments found against them. They were arraigned together, and each entered a plea of not guilty. Judge Garretson said he would fix the bail at $2,500, which was promptly furnished, O. T. McDonald becoming security for Mr. Donellan, and Francis Lehane for Mr. Sheeran. Mr. Lehane is Mr. Sheeran's partner in business. It is expected that others of the Directors will be arraigned to-day.

SINGULAR DEATH IN ELIZABETH.

THEODORE PFEIFER'S SUFFERINGS FROM AN ANEURISM—THE BURSTING OF THE AORTA.

A very remarkable case of heart disease has recently been attracting the attention of the medical profession and others in Elizabeth. The patient was Theodore Pfeifer, aged 32, who was born in Hesse-Cassel, Germany. He came to this country in 1866, and has since been a tool-maker for the Singer Sewing-machine Company. A little less than a year ago he began to complain of pain in his chest, and after a while the pain became so intense that he was compelled to quit work. Several physicians by whom he was examined pronounced his ailment disease of the heart—or more properly, enlargement of the heart. Some time ago he told the physicians that he could hear and feel something snapping about his heart as if something were breaking, and that when this ceased the pain suddenly left him. Before this, however, a tumor had developed itself upon his left breast, and grew to a large size. On Thursday last the tumor began to enlarge very rapidly, the enlargement being accompanied with intense pain. Both the pain and the enlargement increased until Sunday, when Pfeifer's agony is said to have been terrible, and he died on Monday morning, after indescribable sufferings. A post-mortem was made on Monday afternoon, when the tumor was found to penetrate to the depth of 4 inches. The walls of the aorta had been thickened, so as to be an inch and a half thick, by constant accretions of fibrin from the blood. These constant accretions, and the enlargement of the aorta, producing attrition, caused the rupture. The walls of the chest led to the gradual destruction of the membrane covering the second, third, and fourth ribs, and the bones themselves were worn down until they were as thin as a knife-blade. The tumor worked itself through the ribs, pushed its way through the broken ends, and thus caused the great protuberance under the left arm. Dissection of the muscles showed that their apparent thickness was caused by ecchymosis of the venous blood oozing from the venous capillaries, and found deposited in small sacs lying between the layers of the muscles. The enlargements were very brittle. Death was caused by the bursting of the aorta, sending the blood which should have passed through the heart flow into the chest. Altogether, it is pronounced one of the most singular cases that ever came under the notice of the profession.

CLOSING UP A STATE BANK.

THE GRAND CENTRAL BANK RESOLVES TO WITHDRAW FROM BUSINESS—THE DEPOSITORS TO BE PAID IN FULL.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Directors of the Grand Central Bank, Third-avenue and Fifty-seventh-street, it was resolved that the business of the bank should be discontinued and its affairs wound up. Subsequently the action of the Directors was confirmed by a majority of the stockholders, and on Monday last notice was sent to the depositors informing them of the proposed action, and requesting them to present their demands and receive payment of the same on and after Tuesday last. Since that time the officers have been busily engaged in settling up the affairs of the concern and paying the depositors in full. They think they will have money enough lest after paying all the depositors to pay the stockholders from 70 to 80 per cent. of the money invested by them.

The Grand Central Bank was a State institution, and was organized in 1874, with a cash capital of $100,000. George N. Williams was the first President, and retired from office in 1876, and was succeeded by Frederick W. Loew, the present Register of the City. When the Bank was first started it was located at the corner of Third-avenue and Forty-seventh-street, where it remained until the failure of the Manufacturers' and Builders' Bank, when it removed to its present location. There it struggled along under discouraging circumstances, but was never able to make any money, and is said never to have paid expenses. The managers invested all its capital stock, $100,000, in Government bonds, two years ago, paying for them at the rate of 120. The value of the bonds soon afterward depreciated, and the bank lost about $15,000 by the operation. Other losses followed, the business continued bad, the stockholders became dissatisfied, and finally determined to close up the business, protect the depositors from loss, and save at least a portion of their original investment.

THE WILLSE MURDER CASE.

FRANK M'KENNA CONVICTED OF MANSLAUGHTER IN THE THIRD DEGREE.

The trial of Frank McKenna for the murder of William B. Willse, by means of a pistol-shot wound inflicted in a Mulberry-street row on the night of Sept. 21, was resumed before Judge Cowing, in General Sessions, yesterday. The court-room was thronged with the friends and acquaintances of the prisoner, and low-life in the Sixth and Fourteenth Wards was largely represented. At the opening of court, Assistant District Attorney Rollins commenced his summing-up address to the jury, and, in the course of an argument of two hours' duration, advocated with his accustomed ability the conviction of the prisoner, of whose guilt he had no doubt.

Judge Cowing, in charging the jury, said that, inasmuch as the District Attorney had abandoned the charge of murder in the first degree, he would not charge on that point. His Honor, however, entered into a clear and comprehensive analysis of the law of murder in the first degree and manslaughter in its various grades. He reviewed the evidence with much ability and clearness, and pointed out the inconsistencies which the jury would have to reconcile in order to arrive at a righteous verdict. He appealed to the jury to weigh the facts in the case with care, and do their duty to the community, irrespective of consequences.

At 3:15 P. M. the jury retired, and about 4 came into court for instructions. They again retired, and returned at 9 o'clock with a verdict of guilty of manslaughter in the third degree. The prisoner was remanded until Monday, when a motion for a new trial will be made.

STEALING FROM THURBER & CO.

Francis Kernan, of No. 110 Mulberry-street, Andrew O'Brien, of No. 59 Washington-street, and John Clifford, of No. 110 Mulberry-street, were arraigned yesterday in the Tombs Police Court, on the complaint of H. K. & F. B. Thurber & Co., wholesale grocers, who charged the prisoners with taking goods from their warehouse on forged delivery orders. The property in question consists of 150 barrels of currants, valued at $900. Kernan, who was employed in the warehouse of Graham & Gentsch, No. 51 Dey-street, where Thurber & Co. were in the habit of storing a portion of their surplus stock, made a full confession. He implicated Clifford and O'Brien. Kernan informed Justice Otterbourg that, at the urgent solicitation of O'Brien, who was accustomed to hang around the premises, and who held out to him tempting offers, he [Kernan] gave O'Brien a canceled delivery order which was on file, and the latter gave it to Clifford, who is a printer. Clifford counterfeited the order, and Thurber Brothers' signatures were subsequently forged to two blank forms. One hundred barrels of currants which were carted away on the first occasion were taken to the premises of Oliver Cantion, a produce dealer, at the corner of Morris and West streets. The goods were subsequently sold at auction. Kernan receiving $28 for his share. The other 50 barrels were sent to the auction-rooms corner of Mulberry and Chatham streets, and were disposed of there. Justice Otterbourg, on hearing Kernan's statement, said he would not proceed any further with the case, as he thought Cantion, the receiver, should be made a prisoner and arraigned with the others. Cantion was produced in court in the afternoon, and he admitted Kernan's statement to be true. Justice Otterbourg committed him in $2,500 bail, held Clifford and O'Brien in $2,000 bail each, and fixed Kernan's bail at $1,000.

ASSETS OF THE PACIFIC MAIL STEAM-SHIP COMPANY.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Referring to the statement of the affairs of this company recently published, it appears that the amount stated as cash assets has in some quarters been construed to mean the total assets of the company. In order to correct this erroneous impression I beg to state that the cash assets as stated simply include coals, stores, cash on hand, and bills receivable, and that the real property of the company consists of

Twelve first-class iron screw-ships, 32,354 tons, costing	$6,777,965 43
Iron screw-ships purchased from the Panama Transit Steam-ship Company, costing	1,080,000 00
Three wooden side-wheel ships, in good order, costing	2,145,420 81
Three steam-tugs and thirty lighters, costing	153,688 87
One store-ship	25,000 00
Real estate and improvements in New-York, Aspinwall, in and near San Francisco, Oregon, and Yokohama, costing	1,056,374 64

FUNERAL OF FIREMAN REILLY.

The funeral of John Reilly, the fireman, who was killed at the Broadway fire on Tuesday night, took place yesterday from his late residence, No. 273 Delancey-street. The body was taken from the house to the Church of St. Rose of Lima, in Cannon-street, where the funeral services were performed by Rev. Father Brennan. The Fire Department was largely represented, and after the services in the church the body was taken to Calvary Cemetery for interment.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

Mr. Ernest Greenfield was yesterday elected Vice-President of the Produce Bank.

Anna Newell, whose name was once familiar in connection with the Boardman will case, is to lecture on Jan. 27, in Chickering Hall. Subject—"Paris and the French People."

Judge Choate decreed discharges in bankruptcy, in the United States District Court, yesterday, to the following-named bankrupts: V. K. Stevenson, Jr., M. De Lavalette, J. P. Emmendorf.

There were 30 new cases of scarlet fever and 4 of diphtheria reported at the Sanitary Bureau yesterday, and during the 24 hours ending at noon yesterday 7 deaths from scarlet fever and 5 from diphtheria occurred.

The next lecture in the Cooper Union free course of Saturday night lectures for the people will be delivered this evening, in the great hall, by Prof. R. A. Witthaus, M. D., of the University of Vermont, on "The Production of Animal Force," illustrated.

Assignments for the benefit of creditors were filed in the County Clerk's office, yesterday, from Henry Zeltner to Joseph Kuntz, with preferred debts amounting to $14,122 21; and from Charles E. Wilde to Harmon P. Kreamer, with preferred debts amounting to $5,121 42.

An order directing George Merrill to file $2,000 additional security for costs in the action began by him against Cardinal McCloskey, Roswell G. Rolston, Moses Taylor, and others, Executors and beneficiaries under the will of Caroline A. Merrill, was signed yesterday by Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers.

The commission appointed by Judge Gildersleeve to inquire into the sanity of William L. Palmer, Jr., indicted for the murder of Officer Furniss, of the Fourteenth Precinct, in the Metropolitan Hotel, met in the District Attorney's office yesterday. After organizing, an adjournment was had until Friday next.

Owing to the professional engagements of several of the members of the Bar Association's Committee on Extortions, the presentation to the Governor of the charges against Sheriff Reilly was postponed from yesterday, which day was first fixed on by the committee, to some day during the coming week not yet determined on.

The performance in aid of the family of the late Patrolman Furniss, of the Fourteenth Precinct, who was shot at the Metropolitan Hotel on the 28th ult., and died two days after from his injuries, will take place on Thursday next at Niblo's Garden. The Police forces throughout the City are now engaged in selling tickets for the performance.

In the General Sessions Court, yesterday, Henry Gunther, proprietor of "the Pavilion," at No. 283 Bowery, indicted for violation of the Excise law, pleaded guilty, and was sentenced by Judge Gildersleeve to pay a fine of $25. John Perry, alias John Pearce, proprietor of the saloon No. 265 Bowery, also pleaded guilty, and was fined $25.

A return was made yesterday morning before Judge Barrett, in the Supreme Court, Chambers, to the writ of habeas corpus sued out in the case of Emile Wagener, a lad confined in the New-York Juvenile Asylum. It was shown that the boy was properly committed to the asylum in October last, by Police Justice Duffy. The writ was dismissed.

In the General Sessions Court, yesterday, Aaron Harris, aged 72, proprietor of a dairy at Nos. 195 and 197 Stanton-street, who was convicted of cruelty to animals, in ill-treating six cows which had been burned in a fire, was called up for sentence by Assistant District Attorney Herring. In consideration of the extreme age of the prisoner, Judge Gildersleeve imposed the mitigated penalty of $50 fine.

The dinner of the Alumni of Columbia College, held at the Union-Square Hotel last evening, was attended by about 75 invited guests, including Messrs. Goodwin, Sage, Ridabock, and Eldridge, who comprised the Lapsley Executive Committee. The assembly included Prof. Henry Drisler, President White, of Cornell; Bishop Seymour, of Illinois, and others. The massive silver cup won at Henley was exhibited, and several speeches, abounding in reminiscences, were made.

The hearing upon the order of Judge Barrett directing County Clerk Gumbleton to show cause why a mandamus should not issue to compel him to permit Mr. J. Adriance Bush to examine the books of his office, was to have taken place in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday afternoon, but Mr. Willard Bliss, the counsel engaged for Mr. Gumbleton, being detained in the West by a snow blockade, Judge Barrett adjourned the hearing until DEMOCRATIC REPUDIATION.

THE DISGRACED GOVERNMENT OF LOUISIANA.

HOW THE WHITE LEAGUE LEADERS TRY TO EXCUSE A SHAMELESS BREACH OF FAITH —FALSE STATEMENTS DETECTED AND EXPOSED—CARPET-BAG AND BOURBON RULE CONTRASTED—EFFORTS TO SWINDLE CONFIDING CREDITORS—HOW THEY MAY BE DEFEATED.

From Our Special Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Jan. 17, 1879.

There is now no doubt that the leaders of the Bourbon Democracy in Louisiana have fully determined to use every effort which promises to end in a repudiation of the State debt. With that object in view, their supporters and agents in Washington and elsewhere seek to palliate and excuse the maladministration of the Nicholls Government, which has led to the present financial difficulties, by a number of statements which, by those acquainted with the subject, are known to be willfully false, but which are nevertheless well calculated to deceive the general public. The first of these statements is to the effect that taxation in Louisiana, owing to long years of "radical misrule," is so onerous that the people are unable to pay the 5½ mills on the dollar secredly set apart by the State Constitution to meet the interest on the funded debt. Further, it is stated that a large proportion of the new consolidated debt, so guaranteed by the Constitution, but upon which the Nicholls Government has nevertheless failed to pay the interest, is of illegitimate origin, because it is represented by bonds fraudulently issued by "carpet-bag Administrations," and for which the Commonwealth received no adequate return. A few plain facts which will clearly demonstrate the utter falsity of these charges cannot fail to be of interest at this time.

In the first place, it may be well to refer to the nature of the debt represented by the new State consols, the interest on which has been allowed to go to default. From the official records I have gained the following information on this branch of the subject: The ante-bellum debt of Louisiana (contracted before "Radicals and carpet-baggers" were known in the land,) on Dec. 31, 1861, was $10,157,882. The Democratic Legislature of 1866, convened prior to reconstruction, authorized the issue of bonds to the amount of $530,800, and made large appropriations in excess of the revenue, which had to be taken up by, and, of course, helped to swell the apparent debt of, the succeeding Republican Administrations. In 1868, when the Warmoth Government went into power, the debt of the State was $14,347,051, and on Nov. 30, 1870, according to the official report of Auditor Graham, the public debt was $23,427,952. From this it would, of course, appear to the casual observer that the indebtedness of the State had been increased by the Warmoth Administration, in round numbers, from $14,300,000 to $23,400,000. But in reality this was not the case, for, of the apparent increase of over $9,000,000, bonds to the amount of $496,500 were issued in payment of past-due debts and coupons, and $1,595,000 to defray expenses of building levees incurred under an act of the Democratic Legislature of 1866, thus making a total of $2,091,500 for which the Warmoth Government was in no way responsible. Deducting this amount from the apparent increase, the actual increase still remaining is $6,989,401. This is the bonded indebtedness of the State chargeable to the Warmoth Administration, but of the bonds constituting this amount, $2,500,000 subsidy bonds to the Chattanooga Railroad Company, $750,000 second mortgage bonds to the same road, and $80,000 bonds issued to the Bayou Boeuf and Crocodile Navigation Company were questioned by the succeeding Administration of Gov. Kellogg, as having been issued without adequate consideration, and the case being carried into the courts as the instigation of the Governor, as ex officio President of the Funding Board, the Supreme Court decided against the validity of the bonds, thus extinguishing $3,330,000 of the bonded indebtedness incurred during Gov. Warmoth's administration, and leaving a net actual increase chargeable to his Government of only $3,659,401 27. During the four years of Kellogg's administration no act of the Legislature was passed which added one dollar to the indebtedness of the State. Second mortgage bonds to the amount of $125,000 were issued by him to the Mobile and Texas Railroad—being at the rate of $12,500 per mile upon the last 10 miles of road completed and put in running order to Donaldsonville—and bonds to the amount of $500,000 were also issued by him to the North Louisiana and Texas Railroad. Both issues, however, were authorized by acts of the Legislature passed under the previous Administration, and the latter was made obligatory by a decision of the Supreme Court, and a formal affirmative opinion of the Attorney-General. In this way the bonded debt of the State was increased $625,000 during Gov. Kellogg's term. The actual increase in the debt of the State during the administrations of Warmoth and Kellogg thus amounted to $4,284,401. Funded at 60 cents on the dollar, (the rate at which old bonds are exchanged for the new consols under the Funding law,) this amount represents but $2,570,640 of the $11,000,000 or $12,000,000 of new consols now outstanding, and upon which the interest remains unpaid.

In short, it can be stated that instead of the new Louisiana consols representing, in great part, bonds issued during the existence of the so-called carpet-bag Governments, those bonds form a very small proportion of the entire amount. An approximate statement of the elements which, funded at 60 per cent., make up these new consols, would readily be about as follows:

Ante-bellum debt.....	$10,000,000
Bonds issued by Democratic Legislature of 1866-7.....	530,800
Bonds appropriated by bolt-made Legislature, and issued by Gov. Warmoth...	2,091,500
Other liabilities incurred prior to Gov. Warmoth's Administration.....	1,700,000
Bonds funded by the Warmoth issue...	3,659,400
Bonds authorized by Warmoth Legislature and issued by Gov. Kellogg.....	625,000

A total of $4,284,400 of indebtedness incurred under "Radical" rule, against $13,791,500 of debt incurred under the Democratic Administration of "the native and best." Thus, the present net debt is in fact proportion of the existing State debt represents bonds illegitimately issued by Radical State Governments falls hopelessly to the ground.

As to the plea of onerous taxation, it must be conceded that in the City of New-Orleans taxation is onerous. For more than 25 years, ever since the consolidation of the old municipalities, in fact, that city, with the exception of one brief, and, as the event has proved, bright, interval, has been exclusively under Democratic control. Municipal taxes, under Bourbon rule, were increased year by year, till at one period they reached 3½ per cent. on a high assessment. In addition to direct taxation, licenses were, and are still, levied upon every conceivable trade, profession, and industry. Every man in the community—from the barber, who pays a license of $10, up to the pawnbroker, who pays $1,000—is thus indirectly taxed. Lawyers, doctors, midwives, druggists, all are, and have been taxed; and, last any one industriously inclined might perchance escape, the annual license ordinance usually contains a saving clause, taxing "all professions and occupations not included in the foregoing $10 per annum." Notwithstanding this oppressive load of municipal taxation, however, the debt of the city increased in a steady ratio of $1,000,000 a year, till at last it exceeded the debt of the whole State. During the brief Republican Administration of Mayor Flanders, from 1867 to 1872, a temporary check was placed upon this municipal misrule, but in 1872 the Democracy regained control of the city, and the accumulating avalanche of debt was only finally stayed by a constitutional amendment—proposed by "the Carpet-bag Governor" Kellogg, passed by a Republican Legislature, and ratified by a Republican majority of the people—limiting the city debt at the point then reached, and forever prohibiting the issue of any evidence of indebtedness by the City Council except against cash actually in the Treasury. Taxation in the Democracy-ridden City of New-Orleans has indeed been very high, and is still burdensome, though—thanks to Republican intervention—not as much so as it was.

In the State of Louisiana, however, taxes are not high, and although the statement may sound strange to those "liberal" Republicans who have lent a willing ear to the Democratic howls of fraud and Radical misrule in the South, it can be broadly stated, and abundantly substantiated that in no State of the Union is taxation so low in proportion to the value of the products of the land as in the State of Louisiana. The rate of taxation is fixed by constitutional amendment, adopted under the Kellogg Administration, at a limit of 14½ mills on each dollar of assessed value. Assessments are made throughout the State by local boards, one in each parish. No power is vested anywhere to revise or equalize these assessments. Each parish assesses itself, and every planter is, of course, interested in putting down the value of his land to as low a figure as possible. The result is that taxation in the country is merely nominal. For example, every body of visiting statesmen or distinguished strangers who of late years have visited New-Orleans have been taken to view the Magnolia Plantation of the late Ethingham Lawrence, in Plaquemines Parish. With its park-like domain, its noble mansion, its steam-plows and costly sugar-making machinery, it is one of the show plantations of the State. It is assessed at $30,000, and the crops sell on an average for $60,000 a year. Gen. Cyrus Bussey, President of the New-Orleans Chamber of Commerce, who is just now in this City, has an interest in a sugar plantation on the Teche, comprising about 1,900 acres of the most fertile lands in the State, from which he makes an average crop of $30,000. Yet his entire taxes amount to only about $200 a year. Senator Kellogg and his brother-in-law own a plantation of 3,300 acres a few miles below Gen. Bussey's, in the Parish of Iberia. Their crops sell for from $30,000 to $40,000 a year; their assessment is little more than half the value of the mules and personal property they have on the place, and their taxes are less than $250 a year. These are but samples of the low rates of assesment prevailing throughout the richest agricultural parishes in the State.

Notwithstanding this low rate of assessment, however, there is no doubt that the existing interest tax of 5½ mills on the dollar, if promptly collected and honestly accounted for, would suffice to pay the interest on the present funded debt, and to maintain the plighted faith of the State. The trouble is that the taxes are not collected. The Louisiana bull-dozer is a fighting animal, pre-eminently a voting animal, but he is not a tax-payer. The same spirit which incites him to overthrow constituted authority, to resist the laws and violate the Constitution of the country, makes him blind to obligations of honor and public faith, and unwilling to obey even the mandates of the Government of his own choice. In all the heavy Republican parishes, such as St. James, St. John, St. Charles, and (till recently) Tensas, where peace prevails, taxes have been promptly paid, and the delinquent lists have not averaged more than 5 per cent. In the wealthy white parishes, on the other hand, taxes have been evaded or resisted, and the delinquent lists have run all the way from 15 to 40 per cent. Caddo Parish—of unsavory notoriety—once achieved the distinction of returning 60 per cent. of its entire tax lists delinquent. The statute-books of Louisiana provide the most stringent means of enforcing the collection of taxes from unwilling property-holders. Every tax collector in the State holds office by appointment of the Governor, and is removable by a stroke of his pen. Gov. Nicholls has had the remedy for the present disgraceful condition of the State finances in his own hands, but, coming into power on the arms of revolution, he has not had the nerve to enforce the laws against those whose lawless violence placed him in the seat he occupies.

It would be difficult to frame a more binding pledge than that entered into by the people of Louisiana with the creditors of the State when those creditors agreed to abandon 40 per cent. of their claims. The Constitution, by solemn constitutional guarantee, to set apart 5½ mills on the dollar of all the taxable property of the State till principal and interest should be paid. It was this constitutional guarantee which induced the creditors to acquiesce in the funding of their bonds in the new 7 per cent. scrip. But not content with the State authorities failed to carry out their solemn agreement and collect the 5½ mills interest-tax, but a joint resolution is even now pending in the State Legislature—and will be carried, unless the weight of public sentiment in the North help the few Conservatives and the handful of Republicans whom "conciliation" has left to defeat it—calling a Constitutional Convention for the avowed purpose of absolute repudiation. When all these things are considered it will be hardly possible for any fair-minded man to claim that Louisiana has been benefited by Democratic rule. When Nicholls went into power after "the carpet-bag Kellogg," he found the debts of the State and city reduced and limited, taxation lowered one-third, the taxes collected, the interest on the debt paid, and a balance of $300,000 in the State Treasury. To-day, after one year and eight months of Nicholls and Democratic Government, the Treasury of Louisiana is empty, the taxes uncollected, the State $400,000 in debt to its Fiscal Agent, the interest on the sacredly guaranteed public debt in default, all the pledges of protection and free suffrage to the freedmen grossly violated, and the State itself hanging on the verge of shameless repudiation.

TESTIFYING ABOUT MAJOR RENO.

A SCOUT'S STORY OF THE CUSTER MASSACRE —A WITNESS WHO WILL NOT SUPPORT RENO.

CHICAGO, Ill., Jan. 18.—The scout Girard, who testified to-day in the Reno inquiry, gave a long account of the movements of the troops on the day of the Custer massacre. He described the condition and situation of the battle-field and mentioned the various orders given. The witness believed the fighting force of the Indians to be from 2,500 to 3,000 warriors; he heard several volleys, of from 50 to 100 shots each, on the other side of the village, at about the time the order was given "Every man to his horse." Reno's men at that word left the wood where they were stationed, and in 10 or 15 minutes they saw Custer's command, or what he believed to be that command. He thought the force of 750 men ought to have held the Indians in check some time. The rest of this witness' testimony related to the finding of bodies, &c. The hearing was adjourned.

BISMARCK, Jan. 18.—Capt. French, of the Seventh Cavalry, who is credited with great bravery at the battle of Little Big Horn, and a coming witness before the Reno Court of Inquiry at Chicago, stated to-day that he saw nothing of Major Reno from the evening of June 25 until noon of June 26; that Reno was out of sight, and that he [French] could not find any one who did see him; in other words that Reno skunk away in a hole and left the command to Benteen.

SHOT WHILE TRYING TO ESCAPE.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 18.—Eight prisoners attempted to escape from the jail at Owenton, Ky., at noon yesterday. They knocked down the jailer's brother, Robert Moore, who had charge of the jail, and fled. But Moore regained his feet, drew a revolver, and fired, the ball passing through the body of William Saunders, as he was jumping out of a window. The wound proved fatal. In a short time Saunders had been confined for burglary.

FATALLY KICKED IN A FIGHT.

SACKVILLE, New-Brunswick, Jan. 18.—A short time ago a lad named Gaylor, age 14, and another were fighting. A boy named Deans, age 15, interfered, when Gaylor turned on him, brutally beating and kicking him about the head and other sensitive parts of the body. Brain fever ensued, followed by erysipelas, and this morning Deans died.

THE LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

EUROPE'S DISTURBING PROBLEMS.

THE DISAPPEARANCE OF COL. GOLA—ORGANIZATION OF EASTERN ROUMELIA—MATTERS IN TURKEY.

ROME, Jan. 18.—In the Italian Chamber of Deputies yesterday, Signor Depretis, President of the Council, in reply to an interrogation by Signor Ercole regarding the disappearance of Col. Gola, and what steps the Government had taken in the matter, recapitulated the facts. Col. Gola, the Italian member of the Servian Boundary Commission, went from Belgrade to Bucharest with Major Wilson, of the same commission. The latter left Bucharest on Dec. 3, and was to rejoin Col. Gola at Russchuk, when they were to proceed together to Constantinople, but Major Wilson has not seen Col. Gola since he left him in Bucharest, and no trace has been found of him, though official inquiries have been made in every direction. Signor Depretis stated that, notwithstanding the most diligent efforts of the Italian Government and its agents, nothing had been ascertained throwing any light on the mystery. He said he trusted that the Roumanian Government would not fail in the duty incumbent upon it of making a searching inquiry in the case. Signor Ercole was dissatisfied with the reply. He insisted that the Roumanian Government was responsible for the disappearance of Col. Gola, and declared that if the Italian Government did not make itself respected in the matter, and take such steps as appeared to him sufficient, he should move a vote of want of confidence in the Government.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 18.—The Agence Russe says: "The proposal to extend the functions of the commission for the organization of Eastern Roumelia has received the assent of all the powers, and such prolongation does not constitute a violation of the treaty of Berlin. The Russian administration of the Government of Eastern Roumelia also is thus prolonged until the labors of the Organization Commission are concluded."

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 18.—It is said that Mukhtar Pasha has resigned the military command of Janina. If his resignation is accepted, he will also be replaced as Commissioner for the delimitation of the Greek frontier. The negotiations will thereby be delayed.

BERLIN, Jan. 18.—The Post, (semi-official,) in an article upon the commercial distress in England, after enumerating the recent successes of England in her foreign policy, says: "To maintain her rank in the world she must now enter upon a commercial struggle. Protective agitation has already commenced in England."

Other journals state, under reserve, that as soon as the Socialist Democratic Deputies come to Berlin for the opening of the Reichstag they will be expelled, in virtue of the existing petty state of siege.

POLITICS IN FRANCE.

THE POSITION OF M. GAMBETTA—POSSIBILITIES OF A NEW MINISTRY.

LONDON, Jan. 18.—The Paris correspondent of the Times thinks that M. Gambetta makes the rejection of Gen. Farre and the appointment of Gen. Gresley as Minister of War a pretext for separating himself from the Cabinet, rather than to risk sharing its defeat. He fears that the majority would trample over him if he endeavored to protect the Ministry. The correspondent thinks that M. Gambetta underrates his own strength, and that if he made a resolute and courageous stand against the extremists, he would have the support of the majority in the Chamber and in the country. He will probably not figure among those who will ascend the tribune to assail the Cabinet, for in so doing he would run the risk of being compelled to accept office, which prudence counsels him to avoid. But if he confines himself to a laisser faire attitude nobody will be mistaken as to his motives, and it will be said that he stood by at its defeat without wishing to incur the consequences and responsibility. If, on the other hand, he does join the assailants in next week's debates, it will be because he has decided to accept office.

The correspondent, summarizing the various Ministerial possibilities, are being discussed in political circles, says: "The most improbable is that M. Dufaure will get a majority. The next in the order of improbabilities is that M. Gambetta will undertake to form a Ministry headed by himself. This solution would gratify France and M. Gambetta equally, as it would be the reign of Liberal Europe. Next is the retirement of M. Dufaure, M. De Marcère succeeding him, and M. Lepère succeeding M. De Marcère as Minister of the Interior. The other suggestions are, the reconstruction of the Cabinet under the Premiership of M. De Freycinet, Minister of Public Works, or M. Grévy, or M. Duclerc, retaining M. De Marcère, M. Waddington, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and Admiral Pothuan, Minister of Marine, in their present positions." The correspondent thinks it increasingly improbable that President MacMahon will resign in any circumstances. The Paris correspondent of the Standard adheres to the belief that M. Dufaure will get a majority.

PARIS, Jan. 18.—A meeting to-day of the Republican Left, numbering 242 members, again discussed the Ministerial programme, and declared it unacceptable; adding, however, that it would wait for the Government's explanations to the Chamber before pronouncing a final decision.

ENGLISH TRADE AND COMMERCE.

MINCING-LANE MARKETS STILL DULL—RECOVERY IN THE STOCK MARKET—FAILURE OF AN IRON COMPANY.

LONDON, Jan. 18.—The leading markets in Mincing-lane are in the same dull state as last week. The very large assortment of produce brought to auction has further tended to weaken quotations. There have been numerous public sales of tea, which have gone in favor of buyers for Indian, and also for some fair to medium Foo Chow and Congou. There has been a moderate amount of business in China by private contract. In coffee there is no new feature. There has been a strong demand for Colourg new crop plantation Ceylon at advanced rates. Cocoa has fallen 2 to 6 shillings a hundred-weight, but is still far higher than usual, owing to the small stock. Crystallized West Indian sugar continues readily salable in quantity of the home trade, although the trade is quiet in the absence of Clearing arrivals. A few cargoes of Burmah rice sold for Spring shipment at the slight recovery last quoted. Black Penang pepper realized an exceptionally low price.

The Economist says: "Bank bills are quoted at 2⅞ to 3 per cent., discount and trade bills at 3¼ to 3⅜ per cent. On the Stock Exchange business was fairly active, and prices, as a rule, more than recovered from last week's relapse. The political situation in France renders the Bourse very quiet and sensitive. Hence foreign stocks are not so active as cheap money might otherwise have rendered them. There has been a partial recovery in Brazilian in consequence of the Government's proposal to apply monastic property to the redemption of the national debt."

Silver is quoted to-day at 50⅜ pence an ounce.

The Middlesboro, Rosedale and Ferryhill Iron Company has failed. Its liabilities are £280,000, and assets £350,000.

CURRENT TOPICS ABROAD.

LONDON, Jan. 18.—The Coroner's jury in the case of the late Edward Matthew Ward, the painter, whose death was announced on Thursday, have found that he cut his throat while temporarily insane from ill-health.

Edward Payson Weston, the American pedestrian, started from the Royal Exchange, London, at 12:05 this morning, on a walking tour of 2,000 miles over the country roads of England, having undertaken to walk this distance, and also to deliver 50 lectures in towns on the way, in 1,000 hours. His first day's journey is to Folkestone, a distance of 81 miles. The judges travel in a conveyance. A bicycle rider is also of the party. Weston passed through Chatham at 8:30 o'clock A. M., when it was snowing heavily.

Early this morning rain fell, which, as the atmosphere became colder, turned to half-frozen sleet, and about 9 o'clock this gave place to snow which continued falling heavily throughout the morning. The traffic in the streets is greatly impeded.

STOCKHOLM, Jan. 18.—The branch office here, of the Gottenburger Commercial Company, has suspended payment.

CAPE TOWN, Dec. 31.—The Zulu King, Cetywayo, has expressed his willingness to surrender some persons demanded by the British ultimatum and to pay a fine, and had stated that he would consider the other demands if time were allowed. Sir Bartle Frere replied that the word of the English Government could not be altered. The term for Cetywayo's reply expires on Jan. 1. He is now massing his troops.

VIRGINIA DEMANDS PROTECTION.

ALLEGING USURPATION OF STATE RIGHTS BY UNITED STATES JUDGE RIVES—THE CIVIL RIGHTS BILL AND THE ENFORCEMENT ACT ASSERTED TO BE UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 18.—The Senate Special Committee and the House Committee on Federal Relations, acting jointly, to-day submitted a long report and a series of resolutions in regard to alleged usurpation of State rights by Federal Judge Rives, of the Western District of Virginia. The resolutions declare:

First—That the Constitution of the United States is in as full force and vigor as when adopted and ratified.

Second—That Virginia, in re-entering the Union after the civil war, resumed all her relations to the Government on perfect equality with every other State, and is entitled to the same rights and powers and is bound by the same duties and obligations as every other State, and that her citizens are equal in every respect, under the Constitution, with all other citizens of the United States.

Third—That the United States can only exercise the powers delegated to them in the Constitution. Within the scope of these powers the Government is supreme; beyond them it has no existence.

Fourth—That preservation of the States and maintenance of their Governments are as much within the design and care of the Constitution as the preservation of the Union and maintenance of the Federal Government, and separate and independent autonomy of States is necessary to the Union under the Constitution.

Fifth—That the essential and fundamental right reserved by the people of the States is to organize each State as a separate and distinct political society, to constitute therein such government as best suits their will and pleasure, and to change the same whenever their convenience requires it, subject only to the Constitution of the United States, and laws and treaties made in pursuance thereof.

Sixth—That the necessary and inherent condition of this reserved right of local self-government is the right and duty of the State to protect life, liberty, and property within her jurisdiction by laws of her own creation, and by officers of her own selection.

Seventh—That the Constitution of the United States grants certain powers and imposes consequent duties upon the United States which they are bound to execute and perform, and that the rights reserved to the States are equally bound to perform functions and duties which they are equally bound to execute and perform, and the United States can no more rightfully interfere with, and attempt to execute, the powers and perform the functions of, the States than the States can those of the United States, and any attempt by either to interfere with the rights of the other will be usurpation and unconstitutional and void.

Eighth—That the United States have only the right to prevent the exercise by the States of powers prohibited to them by the Constitution by pronouncing such forbidden action void through the judiciary power, but in no case can the United States undertake to perform any duty which is in incumbent upon the State to perform.

Ninth—That, therefore, all acts of Congress, and particularly those known as the Civil Rights Bill and the Enforcement act, which attempt or profess to attempt to provide for the performance by the United States of duties and obligations belonging to the States, are unconstitutional and void.

Tenth—That therefore the action of the Judge of the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Virginia in assuming jurisdiction of the cases of Lee Reynolds and Burwell Reynolds, persons charged with violating the laws of this Commonwealth, and held to answer therefor, is an attempt to execute the laws of this Commonwealth and to regulate her internal policy in the courts established by officers of her own creation, unwarranted by the Constitution, is destructive of the rights of people of each State to protect life, liberty, and property in their own way, by their own courts and officers, and ought at once to be remedied by proper judicial action, and any recurrence of the same prevented by appropriate legislation.

Eleventh—That proper provision by law ought to be made for the prompt and effective supervision by the Supreme Court of the United States of all proceedings of the Judges of the inferior courts of the United States.

Twelfth—That the Governor is instructed to direct the Attorney-General to institute proceedings in the name of this Commonwealth before the Supreme Court of the United States, and demand such protection and redress as that tribunal can afford in the premises.

COAL MINERS IN REVOLT.

UNPAID WAGES OR THREATENED REDUCTIONS THE OSTENSIBLE CAUSE—INFLUENCE OF THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

POTTSVILLE, Penn., Jan. 18.—The situation at the mines looks more alarming now than it has at any time since the long strike of 1875. No more collieries have struck since those reported yesterday, but there are many threats made, and an uneasy feeling is observable everywhere. The Reading Company's men threaten to strike for their wages, which are two months in arrears. Some of the miners employed by individual operators in the Shamokin region are out because of a proposed reduction of wages, and it is seen that a strike is threatened in the Lazarne region, but for what object is not known.

The real cause, however, is to be found in the secret organization known as the "Knights of Labor," which has been trying for nearly a year to foment disturbance, and it is intimated now that a general strike, to involve the whole anthracite coal field, is imminent. At the meetings of miners held at Girardville on Thursday night, it was resolved "that it was necessary, for the protection of those working in the anthracite coal region, that they combine throughout the whole anthracite coal field, and act together for mutual benefit," and also, "that the hand of fellowship that has been extended by the men of Luzerne County be accepted and that measures be taken for intelligent co-operation." The officers of the Reading Company say that they do not think the strike in the Girardville district will extend any further. They expect to finish paying November wages at the collieries by next Saturday, when they will immediately begin paying December wages. It is feared, however, that next week will bring further trouble.

ICE-GORGES IN THE RIVERS.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Jan. 18.—The moderate weather of yesterday and the rain of last night caused a break-up in the Monongahela and Youghiogheny Rivers. In the latter the ice broke last night, and formed a heavy gorge above West Newton. In the Upper Monongahela the ice broke this morning, and will probably run out to-night. The river men say they do not anticipate much damage, as unusual precautions have been taken to prevent a repetition of the destructive ice flood of two years ago.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 18.—The steamer Wyanoke finished her work of forcing a passage through the ice-gorge this morning at 11 o'clock, occupying over three days in the undertaking, which had been pronounced by everybody, except the company's officers, impossible. A short gorge above Varina was broken up by the steamers Wyanoke and Old Dominion working from each end. The ice at that point was 12 feet thick. The Old Dominion reached this port at 1:30 P. M., and will call on her return trip to-morrow noon. The bark Pepita and schooner Oakes Ames, which have been imbedded in the gorge since its formation, are as yet safe, though their situation remains unchanged. A sudden thaw or giving way of the ice would greatly endanger them.

GUILTY OF VIOLATING ELECTION LAWS.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 18.—In the United States Circuit Court, Judge Bond presiding, in the case of William A. Forewood and Thomas Cook, Judges of Election in the Seventh Ward of this city, at the election held for members of Congress in November last, and indicted for interfering with the United States Supervisor and a United States Deputy Marshal in the performance of their duty, the jury rendered a verdict of guilty. The particular act complained of was the refusal of the Judges to admit the Deputy Marshal to the room where the polls were held when he had been called in by the United States Supervisor to keep a tally of the votes. The defendants were sentenced to pay a fine of $25 each, and costs, amounting to about $150. The trial of a number of other persons indicted for violating the United States Election laws will follow.

WARREN COUNTY'S THIEVES

NINE OF THE SEVENTEEN TRIED AND CONVICTED.

UNEXPECTED CONVICTION OF EX-COUNTY COLLECTOR TEEL—SKETCHES OF THE MEN WHO HAVE BEEN FOUND GUILTY—TRIALS OF THE PHILLIPSBURG OFFICIAL ROBBERS.

BELVIDERE, N. J., Jan. 18.—At a late hour last night the jury in the Teel forgery case came into court and rendered a verdict of guilty against the defendant. This was almost entirely unexpected, and by none more so than Teel, who confidently looked for an acquittal. He felt the blow keenly and was visibly affected. Previous to this conviction, he had pleaded non vult contendere to the charge of conspiracy and hoped, by so doing, to escape with a light sentence or perhaps only a fine. But being now also convicted of forgery—and particularly, as his counsel put it, for so small a sum as $30, which his previous wealth and respectability rendered the more disgraceful if proved—his prospects for a term of imprisonment in the State Prison are now almost certain.

Up to this date nine of the most prominent public officials of this County have been convicted on 15 charges of conspiracy and six of forgery. There yet remain eight more defendants to be tried, while the aggregate of remaining indictments against the entire 17 convicted and unconvicted officials is over 30. Originally there were 19 men indicted, but one—ex-County Steward Frome—has been fortunate enough to be acquitted. Three have turned State's evidence—Dean, Osborn and Carhart—but they do not hope to entirely escape punishment, and will probably be tried as soon as the cases of the others are disposed of. Then are to follow the trials of about 15 officials and ex-officials of the City Council of the Town of Phillipsburg, indicted for forgery, conspiracy, and unlawfully taking the public moneys, and thus the time of the court promises to be fully engaged in these cases for several weeks to come. Chief-Justice Beasley can only give his presence during the coming week, as he must be in the Mercer courts on Jan. 27, but it is thought that Gov. McClellan will appoint, next week, a law Judge for the county, in the place of Judge Vliet, who died last week, and the trials will then be continued before the new Judge.

It is a noticeable fact that of all the 17 public officials now under conviction or indictment only one is a man of means, and even his property will not be large enough to meet the demands for the return of stolen moneys which the county will undoubtedly make in civil suits. Yet scarcely a year ago there was hardly a man among them but was believed to be worth a great deal of money, and the word of most of them was as good as their bond. In the past three years they divided among them at least $50,000 of the county money, and not a year and a half ago some of their number took from $500 to $1,000 at a time, and that not unfrequently. When the frauds were exposed in May last, the two chief conspirators, who had received the lion's share of the plunder, had not money enough to take them out of the country, and one of them was forced, by his lack of money, to enter into negotiations with the Prosecutor to turn State's evidence. He had not enough money to keep him from starving in New-York, where he was hiding.

Simon Cummins, the ex-County Collector, is the only man who can leave behind him, when he goes to prison, sufficient means to support his family, and what may be left to them, after the State has collected from his estate what he and his conspirators robbed the county of, is not likely to be very much. Cummins was born in the county, is now nearly 60 years of age, and his reputation has heretofore been beyond reproach. A leading member of the church at Vienna, where he lives, he is also a Director in the Hackettstown bank, guardian, Executor, and Trustee of several estates, Director and shareholder in two or more large manufacturing companies, and was worth, a few years ago, fully $50,000. But since his indictment one company has failed in which he had $11,000, several of his ventures have proved unsuccessful, and now the claim of the county for the sum of $10,000, which it has been proved, was unlawfully paid out by him, and that loss he has paid, as he never dared to charge the false notes in his accounts. Another $10,000 claim will be filed next week, and there are a great number of petty forged orders which he allowed the conspirators to draw, and which his bondsmen and estate must make good, as the others are without means. Until the beginning of the year 1877 Cummins carefully avoided politics, and never held an office. But he saw younger and less influential men obtaining positions of honor and trust, and he then determined "to show the boys," as he said, that he could also be elected if he so desired. Caleb Swayze, an old neighbor, and the man who afterward exposed the frauds, urged him not to go into politics, as it was known that there was a ring of corrupt officers in the field. Swayze warned him that they would certainly entrap him. But Cummins boasted that he would be too smart for them, and claimed that his best efforts would be turned toward discovering and exposing the plunderers.

Up to this time there is no doubt that Cummins was perfectly honest in his intentions, but he unfortunately took for his confidential friend and adviser one E. Stewart Morrison, who was persuaded to spend about $1,500 to obtain his election. As the Board of Chosen Freeholders, numbering 23, elect their Collector, it follows that this money was used corruptly among some, at least, of them. The office is worth about $3000 a year, and is generally held for three years. Three months after his election Cummins told Swayze that he had already been approached by bad men in the board with proposals to rob the county, but that he indignantly refused to do so, and threatened to expose them. In less than two months after that he was in their toils, his first crime consisting in first partly cashing an old note of a previous board without looking into the validity, and then in paying it himself. Mr. Morrison was then made a bank. From that time his downfall was rapid, and to-day he is under two convictions for conspiracy, with a third still to be tried, and is held in $8,000 bail. The penalty in the State is a fine of not more than $200 or confinement in the State Prison for not more than two years, or both, at the discretion of the court. Cummins' family consists of his wife, Laura, and a daughter.

Dr. John V. Mattison, Clerk of the board, connected on four indictments for forgery, and with nine more yet hanging over his head, was the most accomplished of them all. A physician in good standing in the Western part of New-York, he first moved to Stroudsburg, Penn., and then came to Washington, in this county, where he settled about 35 years ago. He married there, had an excellent practice, and when the Civil War broke out received a commission as Assistant Surgeon and served for two years, until some unpleasant transaction caused his discharge in disgrace. He then became a substitute broker, and in a short time had made $2500,000. Col. Baker, of the Secret Service, arrested him at one time and kept him a prisoner, but he managed to obtain his release, although he claimed that it cost him some of his money. After that Mattison bought several farms in Washington, and built a house for himself which cost $50,000. He was in Wall-street at the same time, and claims to have lost $60,000 in Lake Shore at one time. From that time his downfall was speedy, until he had lost all his land, property, and money. Then he opened a small drug store in Washington. He was elected to the Board of Freeholders as a member, several years ago, and then the doubloon saw the opportunities for thieving. Three years ago he secured his election as Clerk of the board, a position only legally worth about $75 a year, but generally increased by fees and extra salary to from $200 to $300. As custodian of the old notes and vouchers of previous years, Mattison was able to pick out those which suited his purpose for altering, and then obtained repayment of them. To what extent he has robbed will never be known, but in the three years of his clerkship he secured fully $15,000, and, perhaps, much more. Mattison's flight to New-York, his arrest there, confinement in the Tombs, trial, escape and rearrest have already been published. He is nearly 60 years of age, and has a wife, one daughter, and one son. An elder son hanged himself a few years ago. When first arrested, Mattison's family refused to believe that he had been a companion of low women, and his wife assisted him with money in his escape from jail. But his rearrest, in company with a woman, turned his family against him, and they now have nothing to do with him. With the exception of a few hundred dollars, his family are penniless.

Charles S. Strader, late Director of the board, was a merchant at Washington, N. J., and was once a man of some means. Lately he has been the agent of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Express Company, but was discharged upon his frauds becoming exposed. He is a man of little education, and his 52 years did not bear a very good reputation. Fifteen indictments were found against him, and of these he has been found guilty of two for conspiracy and one for forgery. His wife refused to believe that he was guilty until he was convicted, and she has since been so ill that it is feared she will literally die of a broken heart.

John N. Givens, Attorney to the board, is a lawyer who, before these disclosures, had an excellent practice. He was a Captain of volunteers during part of the war, and was never supposed to be in the ring. Two indictments for conspiracy were found against him, and he is to be sentenced on both. His fresh his disgrace keenly, and the fact that, if sent to State Prison, he must leave his family unprovided for, is telling gravely upon him. He will be disbarred from ever again practicing in the courts of New-Jersey.

Edmund Teel, the ex-County Collector, resides in the finest house in Phillipsburg, and was once considered one of the wealthiest citizens of that town. But speculations have made him poor, although his wife and step-sons are in comparatively good circumstances. He moved in the best society, was a highly educated and accomplished man, and his pleading non vult in one case and being found guilty in the second is a matter of great surprise.

Dr. Henry M. Cox, of Port Murray, was a member of the Finance Committee and has had 11 indictments for fraud and forgery found against him, on three of which he has been found guilty. He is a young man who received his diploma to practice medicine from Michigan University, and had one of the largest practices in the county. When the frauds were discovered, his patients refused to call him in, and as he had lived very expensively, he is now utterly without means. He takes his position with the most composure of all the convicted men, and laughs and jokes about it.

John B. Sliker, who kept a small canal store at Rockport, was given many profitable contracts by the Ring, and has been convicted of the two indictments for conspiracy found against him.

Edward E. Bulgin, Cummins' intimate friend and his go-between with the other members of the Ring, was originally a carpenter and builder, but made some money in speculations, and bought largely of mineral lands. These have become almost worthless, and will not bring the amount of the mortgages upon them, so that his wife and family will be left without means. He has been convicted on two of the three indictments for conspiracy found against him.

John W. Dean, the first to turn State's evidence, and who yet remains untried, was once a merchant in Phillipsburg, worth at least $100,000, but was one of those good-natured men who indorsed everybody's note, and is now without a dollar. He is yet a young man, and was for some years Secretary and Treasurer of the Phillipsburg Agricultural Works, which paid large dividends, but went into bankruptcy. As Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Board of Freeholders he used his opportunities to plunder the county right and left, and has had seven indictments found against him. He openly admits his guilt and has been very useful to the State in informing against the others, but his present position as informer is not a pleasant one, and the feeling is largely against him. He has no promises from the State that he will escape punishment, but hopes against hope that it may take a light form.

The above are the principal men already convicted in these trials, but there are several men equally prominent who are to be tried next week. Among these are ex-State Senator Cornish, on an indictment to defraud, who is preparing a vigorous defense, and will be defended by Counselor Robert S. Green, of Elizabeth, and other prominent lawyers. Several other men besides Cornish are included in the same indictment, and a strong effort will be made to defeat the evidence and arguments put forth by Prosecutor Harris and Attorney-General Stockton, and thus make a break in the regular verdicts of "guilty" which the juries of Warren have been rendering against the exposed officers.

OVER THREE MILLIONS LOST.

THE GREAT DRY GOODS FIRE.

SCENES AT THE RUINS YESTERDAY—CROWDS VIEWING THE BURNED DISTRICT—THE LOSSES ESTIMATED AT $3,529,000—THE INSURANCES, $2,783,500.

The scene of the great fire at Worth and Thomas and Church streets attracted a large number of business men on their way down town to their offices yesterday morning. A pall of dense black smoke covered not only the burning and burned area, but blocks around it as well, and the flames from portions of the buildings still burning were reflected from the steam of the engines which had been left to complete the task of extinguishment. Groups of firemen, blear-eyed and haggard from loss of sleep, still held the pipes which were pouring streams on the masses of unburned pine flooring and iron pillars and girders which occupied the space which had been the warerooms of silk, woolen, and cotton goods valued at over $3,000,000. The Police, who had been given a temporary relief early in the morning, were again summoned to duty, and wires were stretched so as to keep the ever-increasing throng back from the streets immediately surrounding the burned space. It required considerable decision to prevent the curious from passing the lines and obstructing the labors of the firemen. Around where the engines stood were small lakes of coffee-colored water, which the snow dammed back. Broadway, from Worth to Thomas street, was closed to vehicles, and stages crossed to Centre-street on the way up and down town. The lines of cars whose track lay through Church-street, were compelled to go up town by way of West Broadway. This embarco as to both means of slow transit was raised later in the day.

The burned stores formed a part of nearly a block of iron warehouses that were built upon the ground formerly occupied by the New-York Hospital. That corporation still owns the ground, which was let upon long lease to the New-York Real Estate Association, of which Mr. Jarvis Slade is the Treasurer. The buildings were five stories in height, with iron fronts and pillars, that made a very imposing appearance. The buildings were said to be fire-proof, and the windows were furnished with heavy iron shutters. The trouble seems to have been the collection of vast stocks of cotton goods in light pine boxes on floors and cross-beams of Georgia pine. When the fire got well under way the only objects that furnished even temporary obstruction were the thick brick walls. The Captain of Engine No. 11, one of the earliest on the ground, says that he had his men at first on the third floor of No. 62 Worth-street, where, as far as is known, the flames first broke out. They had hardly had time, he said, to direct a stream when a portion of that floor gave way, and as the firemen went down a flight they saw the fire rapidly approaching the stairs by way of the packing-boxes on the second floor. The firemen could not even halt there, so rapid was the progress of the flames. After the firemen had been forced out of the burning building their chief efforts were directed to the saving of adjoining warehouses, as all hope of saving that threatened was abandoned.

The corner building on Church, Worth, and Thomas streets, is the only one which is not owned by the Improvement Company, and was the best of all in its fire-preventing equipment. J. F. White & Co. own it, and occupy the fourth and fifth floors as their cotton goods warerooms, while the second and third floors were designed for and largely occupied by the buyers of Southern and Western dry goods firms. The store and offices of White & Co. were on the first floor. Theirs was the only considerable stock in the building, and it was hoped until late in the morning that the heavy party wall would prove a sufficient protection against the encroachment of the flames. The employes stood manning the hose, which connected with the street mains, on every floor. Between 2 and 3 A. M. the wall gave way on the north-west corner of the top story, and an aggressive head of fire communicated with the cotton goods. The firemen at once turned their streams on the threatened spot, and before they were satisfied that they were complete masters of the fire the building was drenched from roof to basement, and offices and warerooms were thoroughly soaked.

Chief Bates, who was absent from the City when the fire broke out, resumed charge of the fire force at about 3 A. M. yesterday. The galvanized iron forming the coping was then threatening to topple over, and as soon as the heat permitted, men were sent aloft to disengage it. After it had fallen it was seen that all danger that the iron fronts would tumble also was past, and the lines of hose that had been removed for safety were enabled to do more effective service at a nearer range. Commissioner Farley and Chief Bates were on the ground all day. Commissioner Chamberlain and Chief Green, of the Boston Fire Department, watched the New-York methods of fighting fire for several hours, and might have closed his fine had not the fire extinguished, and only four companies were left to play on the smoldering ruins. Broadway was then opened to general traffic, and Worth and Thomas streets were closed to the public.

The loss sustained from the fire is something that will not be accurately ascertained for days to come. Many of the firms sold on commission, and carried large stocks in other warehouses beside those burned. Until they have opportunity to submit their books their estimates of loss can only be approximate. Nenss, Hesslein & Co., in whose warerooms the fire started, were able to send their list of insurance to the Board of Underwriters almost with the opening of business. The Secretary of the board declined to furnish them for publication. "My orders is not to give out anything of that kind to the reporters, and I am going to do it. I'll give it to you to-morrow—if you can find me here," he added, with a significant wink at a rollicking young underwriter who seemed to be enjoying the conversation. Nenss, Hesslein & Co., among other insurances, had $225,000 in the Liverpool, London and Globe, and $17,500 in the Imperial and Northern, of England.

Upham, Tucker & Co. occupied the main floors of the building Nos. 74 and 76 Thomas-street, having therein a large stock of dry goods. They were separated from the Worth-street fire by a heavy rear wall, and by strong iron shutters, which withstood the heat for nearly 20 hours. They were also well separated from the store occupied by Walkinshaw & Voigt by a thick party wall. The iron shutters were warped out of shape by the heat, and through fissures in the party wall there was found to be some ashes of the firm, and soaked the boxes of dry goods. Further than this no damage was done, and those representing the firm were unwilling to hazard even a guess at the amount. The Insurance Patrol, however, estimates it at not more than $20,000, which is amply insured.

Bottum, Phipps & Spencer, manufacturers of machine-twisted No. 64 Thomas-street, lost $1,000, on which they had $5,000 insurance in the Manufacturers', of Boston. George & William E. Trull had offices at No. 50 Leonard-street, in which samples worth $5,000 were damaged $1,000; fully insured. The tenants of the adjoining buildings suffered considerably from water. The soil was sandy, and through it the water percolated into the cellars and sub-cellars that were not guarded by thick corrugated walls and floors. In many of these underground ware-rooms were stored valuable stocks of goods, which soaked to the top bolt almost as soon as the bottom one had been covered by water. White, Payson & Co. had a stock of cotton prints in their sub-cellar, No. 65 Thomas-street, upon which the water began to pour soon after the fire broke out. They estimate their loss at $15,000, which is fully insured. John S. Holden, of No. 69 Thomas-street, loses $5,000, and had besides $70,000 worth of goods stored in the burned buildings, on which he has $49,500 insurance. C. H. Townsend, of No. 99 Thomas-street, was damaged $30,000 on stock in his cellar and in the burned warerooms, on which he had $30,000 insurance. Wright, Bliss & Fabyan, Nos. 71 and 73 Thomas-street, lost $15,000 by water. Case, Leland & Co., Nos. 77 and 79 Thomas-street, lose $50,000 by water, with $400,000 insurance. Hunt, Ustlin & Co., of Leonard-street, had a stock of hosiery and prints in their basement on which $10,000 was lost. William Turnbull & Co., of No. 59 Worth-street, lost $10,000 by the flooding of their cellar. Goodwin, Smith & Co. lose about $10,000; amply insured. Although many of the cellars in Worth and Leonard streets, between Church-street and West Broadway, were more or less flooded by water, E. B. Claflin & Co.'s building escaped. Other firms in the immediate neighborhood were, however, less fortunate. The sub-cellar rented by Low, Harriman & Co., of No. 65 Worth-street, was slightly flooded, but the damage was trifling. Joshua D. Sally & Co., and Williston, Knight & Co., of Nos. 74 Worth-street, had stored in their cellars large stocks of jeans and cotton goods, which were damaged to the extent of from $5,000 to $10,000. Wheelwright, Anderson & Co.'s stock, at Nos. 74 and 76 Worth-street, was damaged about $5,000 by water.

THE LOSSES.

LESSONS FROM THE WORTH-STREET FIRE.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your very detailed and graphic account of the fire on Worth and Thomas streets last night suggests to a casual visitor to this City that there were grave defects in the construction of these, which are supposed to be the latest and most approved examples of store-building in this City. Speaking of the fire in the first building, Nos. 62 and 64 Worth-street, you say: "The floors and beams fell in with a crash. * * * The partition wall between this and the adjoining building, Nos. 58 and 60, suddenly fell in, and the flames sprang into the still uninjured building, instantly setting fire to the pine flooring, and the ceiling of the top story." Either the party wall must have been very weak, or the floor must have fallen before it was materially burned with all its load upon it. The latter seems most likely to have been the case, and could only be caused by the giving way of the iron columns. For these were all double stores, and depended upon these fragile supports to carry fully one-half of the weight. It is well known, and painfully evident to architects in the West, that iron columns, without fire protection, are of little value, even in buildings constructed of ordinary materials. Therefore, fire-proof columns have been used in some of the latest constructions.

But this hole in the wall of Nos. 58 and 60 Worth-street was also assisted by an elevator hole, which carried the fire down to the basement in full view of all the spectators. You say "a blazing beam, falling through the hatchway with a reverberating echo, opened the way to the floors, and they quickly worked their way downward, floor by floor, until they reached the ground floor. These beams and flooring fell, as in all buildings constructed on the same plan. To avoid this danger they use, in some places in the West, as well as in Boston, hatch-closers, which are automatic, and do not remain open when not in use. I doubt not that this morning many have found in the ashes numerous timbers which fell before it was burned. This falling before burning shows bad construction. Fire-proofing is a science of recent development, which process construction. Had the partition walls of Nos. 62 and 64 Worth-street, and reached the roof of Nos. 66 and 68, which at once became ignited." Also, that "on Thomas-street the flames from Van Volkenburgh & Leavitt's, ignited the roof of the adjoining building," and three floors of this were consumed. How high, let me ask, was the fire-wall? and what sort of fire-proof roofs could these buildings have had? Roofs covered two tiles, or with one inch of cement under the tin, would have saved these buildings at very slight cost. A little thoughtful attention to these points would have saved much damage; but a system of fire proofing, the use of incombustible coverings throughout such structures, and an effectual division into horizontal compartments by the closing of all vertical openings will make such disasters next to impossible. VIRGINIA'S FINANCIAL DISTRESS.

A POOR SHOWING FOR THE HOLDERS OF THE STATE'S BONDS—PLANS OF THE "READJUSTERS."

RICHMOND, Jan. 16.—The multiplicity of telegrams sent from here about the public debt have no doubt confused even the sagacious financiers who have watched the proceedings of the General Assembly with care, and have probably hopelessly muddled many others not so well informed. In 1871 the creditors, or many of them, surrendered their old bonds; relinquished one-third of the principal for West Virginia's share, and took for the remaining two-thirds "consols," with coupons receivable for taxes. The coupons, not being provided for, have come in as taxes and overwhelmed the Treasury. All efforts to invalidate the coupons have been stopped by the courts. But such is the distress of the State and the fear of ultimate repudiation that many of the creditors have proposed to relinquish their 6 per cent. "consols" for 4 per cent. gold "consol" bonds.

The General Assembly has declined this proposition and invited a conference with the bondholders, which the Governor will arrange for Jan. 30, it is said to-day. But in this invitation the General Assembly has given notice to the bondholders that it can do nothing we desire. It proposes therefore to vote for a constitutional convention, by which the whole debt, or so much as is necessary, may be swept out of existence. No one of respectability can be found in Virginia who will admit that he is for repudiation. "Readjusters"—those who want the debt reduced to the debtor's ability to pay, with the present rate of taxation—are, however, plenty. No forcible readjustment measure will pass without being vigorously opposed by "the debt-payers," but that the "readjusters" are in the majority in the State seems admitted.

ANCHOR-ICE IN THE MAINE STREAMS.

From the Lewiston (Me.) Journal, Jan. 14.

Anchor-ice was never half the pest that it is this season. It continues greatly to give great annoyance to water-racks in this city. The cause of the unusual abundance of this kind of ice this season lies in the fact that the river is very late in freezing over, due to the fact of the late freshet and the constant change in the body of water. The river is not yet frozen over at all points, and at few points is it yet possible to cross with teams. Anchor-ice is formed in this wise: The whole body of water is cooled below the freezing-point, but under conditions of quietness exposed to the formation of ice. The substances at the bottom serve as points of freezing. It gathers in cold nights when the surface of the water is not frozen, and its temperature is at the freezing-point. As the air being still lower, one or more thin layers of ice are detached from the bodies which hold them down they rise to the surface. At some points above the dam the water is found to be full of floating ice to a depth of 10 or 12 feet. Men and teams are constantly at work at the gate-house racks clearing away the ice.

DEATH OF A FORMER ARMY OFFICER.

The Westminister (Md.) Sentinel chronicles the death in that city, on Monday, Jan. 13, of James Lowe Dawson, at one time a Lieutenant-Colonel in the United States Army. Col. Dawson was born in Baltimore in 1799, graduated at Emmittsburg College, and afterward at West Point, and entered the Army in 1816. He served in the Florida Seminole wars, also in the early Indian wars in the West, and rose to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, serving six years as Chief of Staff under Major-Gen. Jacob Brown, then in chief command of the Army. He left the Army in 1845 to attend to business interests in the South and West, and, engaging in land speculations, was overwhelmed with financial reverses. For many years he had lived a very retired life, generally in Carroll County, Md. Gen Dawson, who was a man of rare conversational powers, was the father of Major L. L. Dawson, of the United States Marine Corps.

MISCELLANEOUS CITY NEWS.

ANTI-TAMMANY ORGANIZATION.

A PLAN FINALLY AGREED UPON TO USE THE KNIFE AGAINST [illegible]—A WARNING TO THE STATE DEMOCRACY.

The General Committee of the Irving Hall Democracy met last night at Irving Hall to receive and consider a report from a special committee of its own body on a plan of permanent organization. Chairman James B. Morrison called the meeting to order and presided. There was a large attendance of the delegates, and the utmost harmony prevailed. Nelson J. Waterbury, as Chairman of the Select Committee, reported orally as to the plan adopted after frequent consultations between conference delegations from the united Irving Hall Democracy, the City Democracy, and the County Democracy. This plan has also been adopted by the General Committees of the three organizations named. It had been agreed to invite all Democrats to join this united organization, who are opposed to the control of any secret society in political affairs or to any irresponsible power. That was to be a governing principle in their action, and on Jan. 27 and 30, and Feb. 3, 6, 10, and enrollment meetings are to be held, between the hours of 7 and 9 o'clock, of each evening, the enrollment to be directed by three Commissioners of Enrollment in each Assembly district, and in the two new wards, who shall enroll the names and residences of all Democrats who present themselves. The powers and duties of the enrolling officers will then cease. On Monday, Feb. 17, the voters so enrolled will meet at 7:30 P. M. to elect three inspectors to hold the primary elections in each district, and on the following Thursday, Feb. 20, the primary elections will be held between the hours of 7 and 10 P. M., or until every enrolled voter present at the closing of the polls shall have had the opportunity to vote. At the primaries there are to be chosen three Commissioners of Enrollment for the ensuing year in each district. It had been proposed to make the General Committee to consist of two delegates from each election district in the City, but the Executive Committee had suggested that the representation should be the same as that which constituted the present General Committee, and the suggestion was adopted. The Assembly district committees are to consist of three delegates from each election district in the Assembly district. The report and plan of organization were adopted unanimously and without debate. The present General Committee is composed of one delegate for every 100 votes polled for Tilden in each Assembly district in 1876.

Mr. Robert B. Roosevelt offered a resolution providing that the organization will accept no union with Tammany Hall, except on condition that the Tammany Society surrender its assumed control of politics, and that Tammany Hall be opposed to the use of all Democrats, and that no one man, founding his power on patronage or otherwise, shall exercise exclusive rule over the party in this City. The resolution also warned the Democrats of the State that a continued recognition of a secret society as the only regular Democracy at the State Conventions would endanger the Democratic majority in this City. Mr. Roosevelt said that resolutions like this had been offered before in organizations hostile to Tammany Hall, and in some instances the movers had been among the first to creep back into Tammany. Even now Tammany was making great efforts to secure reunion, but all the fine promises made contemplated the domination of Tammany as it is now [illegible] ganized. All through the State it was reported that the Canal Ring and the Robinson Ring and the Tilden Ring were uniting to perpetuate this system of corruption and control; he contended that the whole principle of the control was wrong, and in order to put the organization on record against it he offered his resolution. He then sarcastically reviewed the incidents at the Lotos Club dinner recently, where Controller Kelly proposed that Hall and Cooper would bring about reunion, he and the Mayor might reduce the City debt $4,000,000, and after a short interval Mr. Kelly said he didn't know but they might reduce it $6,000,000—a flattering notification from the first suggestion, but about as rational as any of Mr. Kelly's financial figures. Mr. Roosevelt closed by saying that the rule of Tammany had ruin written in timbers which fell before it was barred. This falling before burning shows bad construction. Fire-proofing is a science of recent development, which process construction. Had the partition walls of Nos. 62 and 64 Worth-street, and reached the roof of Nos. 66 and 68, which at once became ignited." Also, that "on Thomas-street the flames from Van Volkenburgh & Leavitt's, ignited the roof of the adjoining building," and three floors of this were consumed. How high, let me ask, was the fire-wall? and what sort of fire-proof roofs could these buildings have had? Roofs covered two tiles, or with one inch of cement under the tin, would have saved these buildings at very slight cost. A little thoughtful attention to these points would have saved much damage; but a system of fire proofing, the use of incombustible coverings throughout such structures, and an effectual division into horizontal compartments by the closing of all vertical openings will make such disasters next to impossible. WESTERNER.

NEW-YORK, Saturday, Jan. 18, 1879.

Mr. Mills said subsequently that his difficulties were caused by trying to pay off his debts too quickly. He was largely short of the market on the Granger and coal shares, and the recent successful bull movement caught him financially too much weakened to protect his interests. His liabilities are estimated at between $30,000 and $45,000, and he hopes to effect a settlement and resume operations within the next few days. Much sympathy is expressed for the firm, especially in view of their candour touching their previous failure, and it is believed that their creditors will grant them every assistance.

Nearly all the vessels arriving at this port continue to report having experienced very severe weather. The bark Verity, which arrived from Hull yesterday, fell in with the schooner Grace Davis in latitude 35° 40', and longitude 63° 50', on Dec. 26. This vessel left Pernambuco for

CURRENT LITERATURE.

A SAD SONG.

Love once kiss'd me,
Unfolded his wings, and fled.
Hath friendship miss'd me?
Is faith in all friendship dead?
If a spell could summon
These phantoms that come and go,
Of men and women,
Their very selves to show,
I might find (alas me!)
My seeking both night and day.
But I pass them, they pass me,
And each on a lonely way.

Soul, art thou friendless,
A loser, sorrowful, weak?
Life is not endless,
Death is not far to seek.
Thou sailest ever.
Each moment, if sad or kind,
Down the great river;
It opens, it closes behind;
Far back thou seest
The mountain-tops' faint azure;
Below, as thou fleest,
The ripple, the shadow's erasure.

Why dost thou, weeping,
Stretch forth thine arms in vain?
It breaks thy sleeping;
O drop into trance again.
In dream thou may'st go where Child's Island is flowery grass'd,
Deep skied,—it is nowhere
Save in the Land of the Past.
Time is dying,
The World too; forget their moan,
The sad wind sighing
Let murmur, this alone.

LADY CHARMEIGH'S DIAMONDS.

I.

Sir Peter Charmeigh had warned his wife more than one that she would be robbed of her diamonds if she was not more careful to lock them up. The newspapers were chronicling great jewel robberies at this time, and Sir Peter one day emphasized his warnings by bringing home from London a fine ebony strong-box, with the most adorable of gold keys attached as a pendant to a bracelet.

This pretty gift quite delighted Lady Charmeigh, who convoked all her acquaintances to the Hall to see her wonderful anti-burglar safe. A description of it somehow got into the county papers. It was of globular shape, about the size of a big school-room globe, and mounted in the same fashion on a stand with a pivot. An ingenious mechanism, which had to be wound up every morning, kept it spinning round all day at the rate of thirty revolutions a minute, and any attempt to check it in its course resulted in the ringing of a loud alarm. The way to stop it was to press with the foot a knob on one of the legs of the stand, and when it had ceased revolving, to form a word with some movable letters set in a circular plate at the top of the globe. After this it was all plain sailing. You had only to insert the gold key in a cavity of the middle letter, which formed a key-hole, to give one turn to the right and two to the left, and then the box opened of itself into halves, each forming a receptacle full of compartments lined with blue velvet. There was a place for rings, another for bracelets, a third for tiaras, one for money, and so forth; and all were perfectly adapted to their special uses. In fact, it was a beautiful box, and Lady Charmeigh spent a most amusing week in experimenting on it before her friends, who knew not whether to admire it most when it spun round and round, making its steel incrustations flash in the light, or when it stood open revealing a wealth of trinkets almost unmatched, for the "Charmeigh diamonds" were famous from London to Amsterdam.

Unfortunately, Lady Charmeigh was one of those persons who soon tire of a new toy. A pretty little woman, with large, earnest blue eyes and a smiling mouth, she had in many things the ways of a petted child, and could not bear trouble nor contradiction. So long as her safe gave her amusement she scrupulously locked up her jewels in it, but when the novelty had worn off, and it became a questian of touching a knob, forming a word, and turning a key once to the right and twice to the left every time she wanted to get out a ring or a locket, she began to find the process troublesome. Sir Peter made things worse by solemnly winding up the mechanism himself every morning and lecturing upon its perfections. He was as proud of the safe as if he was the inventor, and took an altogether professional pleasure in polishing its steel work with a piece of wash-leather, and explaining how the key should be turned, with a little push forward to start some hidden spring, about which he was very learned. Sir Peter was a rather fidgety middle-aged gentleman, with a fat face, and there were times when, hearing him prose about the beauties of machinery, Lady Charmeigh felt inclined to sit down and scream. Besides, there was another cause of irritation. The talismanic word necessary to open this precious strong-box altered every day of the week, so that Lady Charmeigh, who had a defective memory, was constantly making mistakes. She spelled "Jupiter" when it ought to have been "Mercury," and finding the box would not cease its spinning, tried to stop it with her small hands; whereupon it would set up a yelling with its alarum like that of a peevish beast molested. Any one who knows what a pretty woman's nerves are, will quite understand how, at the end of a fortnight, Lady Charmeigh came to hate her strong-box with an intense and unquenchable loathing. The very sound it made in revolving, a well-oiled purring sound, was odious to her. and if it had not been for her maid, who took as great a delight in the instrument as Sir Peter did, Lady Charmeigh would have left off winding up her jewelry in it, and practiced some little deceit towards her husband; but every time she forgot to lock up a trinket, Martha (or Patty) Raggles, her maid, would exclaim,

"O my lady, think of what Sir Peter would say if he knew you left those jools a-lyin' about, and he so afeard of burglars. O my goodness!"

Patty was herself very much afraid of thieves. She was a simple, good-natured country wench, who had lived a little while with Lady Charmeigh before the latter's marriage, and who, having spent five years in her service since, had become expert at hair-dressing, lace-ironing, and dress-making—more so than at speaking elegant English. Her colloquialisms were vulgar, but her heart was sound, and her mistress was very fond of her; for, indeed, Lady Charmeigh liked all people who were good-natured and did not tease her, and bore her occasional outbreaks of bad temper with philosophy. However, there were some matters between her ladyship and her maid respecting that strong-box. Lady Charmeigh thought Patty too officious about it, and reminded her rather tartly that when the box had first come into the house she—Patty—had been horribly afraid of it as of a live thing. This was perfectly true, but we grow accustomed to things we had at first disliked; and Patty had made friends with the "live" box, as she might with a snappish dog who had proved tractable on closer acquaintance. There was even something pathetic in her artless admiration of its strength and beauties; and as the girl was right to advise her mistress to be cautious about jewels of so great price, Lady Charmeigh had come to listen readily about the matter. Only it so chanced that Patty went home for a month's holiday to keep house for a married sister who was ill; and then Lady Charmeigh took an easy opportunity of removing all her trinkets from the safe, unknown to her husband, and restoring them to her drawers. Sir Peter continued to wind up the safe gravely every morning; but there was nothing in it.

Now it was about a week after this little daily farce had begun to be enacted—a week, that is, after Patty's departure—when Charmeigh Hall became the scene of a memorable burglary which furnished a month's table-talk to every mansion in England.

One November evening, while Sir Peter was entertaining some of his brother magistrates and their wives at dinner, Lady Charmeigh's dressing-room was entered by means of a ladder placed under a window that looked into the garden, and the safe, the famous safe, was broken open like a walnut. The burglars must have commenced operations very soon after the company sat down to dinner, and they must have been amazingly quick about their work; for it was no later than eight when a housemaid entering the room surprised them, and gave instant alarm by screaming and falling down in hysterics. The burglars decamped with alacrity, and the company, attracted by the noise, hurried up stairs, preceded by Sir Peter, with his mouth full and a napkin in one hand. It was a singular sight. Ladies shivering in their dinner-dresses, and huddling close to gentlemen in evening clothes; Lady Charmeigh herself, pale with terror, and crossing her hands over and over, front of her cerise dress, as if afraid that some robbers would snatch at the lovely pearl necklace which she wore round her throat; and then fat Sir Peter, who looked as if he wished he had brought a poker with him instead of the napkin, which was not much of a weapon to fight with in case of assault.

There was a moment's anxious silence when the door of the dressing-room was reached, and then a very shout of anguish escaped from Sir Peter, who tottered with sudden faintness: "Great heavens, the safe has been ransacked and all the jewels have been stolen!"

"The Charmeigh diamonds stolen!" This dismayed cry was echoed by the entire company, including footman, butler, cook, and housemaids, grouped at the top of the staircase in attitudes expressive of consternation. The butler felt so bad that he sat down on the stairs to compose himself, and the tallest of the pair of housemaids tried to soothe him.

"O dear, dear!" cried Lady Charmeigh; and she, too, being overcome, staggered into the room and sank on an ottoman.

"Poor thing!" exclaimed a certain Lady Villous, who was her best friend, and had always envied her the possession of these diamonds. "Poor dear! perhaps the thieves will be caught with their plunder. Let us hope so!"

"Never!" yelled Sir Peter, mopping the dew of emotion off his face with the napkin. "Those fellows are never caught; they get clean away, and have the diamonds recut in Holland. Think of that! Diamonds which have been in my family for two centuries, and worth a hundred thousand pounds at least!" Something like a sob accompanied these words.

"It is indeed a loss!" ejaculated Lady Villous, with a great show of sympathy; but there was a gleam in her eyes. She was a mincing sort of lady, with thin lips and a cold glance. By this time everybody had crowded into the dressing-room. The chill night air blowing through the open window struck upon the bare shoulders of the ladies, the waxen candles flickered, some of the gentlemen craned out of the window, peering through the darkness for sight or sound of the retreating thieves. One of them hallooed because he espied a cat.

Most of those present, however, concentrated their attention upon the impenetrable safe which had yielded so ignominiously to a first attack. It had evidently been burst, and not left open accidently by Lady Charmeigh, as Sir Peter at first suspected, for it bore marks of violence. The thieves must have got possession of the secret for stopping its rotation, since the alarm had not been sounded, but they had failed to form the word which made the lock act, and so they had simply prised the two halves of the safe apart with their crowbars. There stood the globe open, and void of everything except a small portrait of Sir Peter on enamel, which the thieves had had the bad taste not to regard as valuable. For the rest, they seemed to have laid hands on every trinket, large or small; and thus the disaster was revealed as being so big that Sir Peter's visitors felt as if common expressions of sympathy would be mockery. Even the plumper and older squires, who were disgusted at having been roused from dinner between the fish and entrees, recognized that there were conjunctures in which a host may be pardoned for forgetting that there are still two courses to discuss. They surrounded Lady Charmeigh, whom they naturally imagined to be plunged in an abyss of grief—one of the worst griefs that a pretty woman can know; for diamonds are not only precious in themselves, but they are dew-drops on feminine beauty, and help to make it shine.

Judge, then, of the surprise of the assemblage when her Ladyship, who appeared to be sobbing with her face buried in her handkerchief, suddenly looked up, her features being aglow with merriment, and burst into an uncontrollable fit of laughter. Why, she glanced at one another, thinking she must have lost her reason; but when peal after peal had rung out from her pretty mouth, without evoking one responsive smile, she checked herself, and rose, blushing, but still amused.

"Excuse me, I know it's very wrong," she said, "but the fact is my jewels have not been stolen at all. See here," and, unlocking the glass door of her wardrobe, she pointed to a multitude of velvet and shagreen cases lying all unharmed upon the shelves.

"What, you had not put them in the safe, then?" exclaimed Sir Peter, divided between intense relief and annoyance that his orders had not been obeyed.

"No; I thought it would be unsafe to do so," said Lady Charmeigh, with a fresh laugh. "Everybody has been talking so much of my strong-box that I felt convinced its secrets must have become matters of notoriety; and I reasoned that if burglars broke into the house they would spend all their efforts on the safe, without exploring elsewhere. And it seems I was right."

"Bravo!" ejaculated Lady Charmeigh's cousin, Dick Lyster, a hussar. "By Jove, that's what I call good tactics, cousin," and so said all the other gentlemen, with applauding murmurs.

"And do you mean to say there was nothing whatever in the box?" asked Sir Peter, who could scarcely believe he had a wife of so much wit.

"Nothing of consequence; I had removed all my treasures," answered my Lady.

"You forest your husband's portrait, my dear," remarked Lady Villous, who had been smiling yellow, as the French say.

"O, I left that in the box, so as to be able to say truthfully that it did contain something precious," replied Lady Charmeigh, with ready tact; but she mentally scored down her good friend for reprisals on the earliest opportunity.

"Well, all I can say is that you deserve to be made keeper of the Crown jewels, cousin Amy," cried Captain Dick, with genuine admiration. "You have found out the true uses of safes."

"Yes, to put nothing in them," smiled Lady Charmeigh. "And now let us go back to dinner; I am really ashamed that our appetites should have been spoiled for nothing."

They did return to dinner, some with appetites rather renovated than impaired; and the talk at table was all about the ingenuity and sense which the winsome hostess had displayed, not only in taking her measures against burglars, but in keeping her counsel about them. In the course of the evening servants were dispatched to give information to the Police, and detectives were sent afield, who, of course, discovered nothing, after the manner of their kind, though they took good care to work with sapient looks and handfuls of "clues." During a whole fortnight, however, the papers discussed the great burglary at Charmeigh Hall, and Lady Charmeigh was complimented on her "happy thought." She became quite a heroine, renowned among fair women as a type of the prudent chatelaine.

II.

All this was very fine; but Sir Peter Charmeigh did not feel much like a hero. He and the maker of the safe laid their heads together, and agreed that this triumph of mechanical craft ought never to have been burst open, and could not have been if the most ordinary rules of dynamics had been followed in forcing it. They were like the historians, enumerating the hundred and one reasons why Waterloo ought not to have been won by the English. The safe-maker wrote a letter to the Times on this subject, and Sir Peter gloomily recommended it to the perusal of his wife, who, however, preferred to read the leading articles, in which her praises were set forth. Since the burglary she had adopted rather a haughty-tolty attitude, as of one who has asserted her wisdom beyond dispute. Sir Peter was humiliated, and there came a day when he seriously began to think that his wife's pride required taking down a little.

One is sorry to say that these views, too candidly expressed, led to some disagreeable scenes. Sir Peter was a pompous man, who liked to play Sir Oracle in his own house, and his occupation would have been gone if he had been obliged to give up unasked advice and counseling. The first time that he heard Lady Charmeigh yawn over some wise saw of his, it was as though the knell of marital authority had sounded in his ears, and he expressed himself bitterly on this point to Dick Lyster, who was staying at the Hall. He could not have chosen a better confidant or a worse one: a better, for, Dick liked him and gave him ready sympathy; a worse one, for this same Dick was an incorrigible practical joker, who forthwith began turning over a plan for getting a good laugh out of the domestic situation.

"Look here," said he to the Baronet, as they sat together over their walnuts and wine. "You must teach Amy a lesson, or else she'll be losing her jewels from over-confidence."

"That's what I'm always telling her, but she won't listen," answered miserable Sir Peter. "Those wretched newspapers have turned her head. She has no consideration for my feelings nor for my experience."

"You must recover your prestige with a grand stroke," remarked the Hussar. "Suppose you prove to Amy that you are right by stealing all her jewels yourself."

"I steal my wife's jewels?"

"Yes; you can make a capital joke of it. You leave the Hall, saying you are going up to London on business for two days; you return quietly in the evening, enter the house without being seen, and carry off the jewels in the night to your own dressing-room. In the morning, after Amy has had a good scare, you come forward and explain the pleasantry. I'll be bound you are master in your own house after that!"

"You have queer ideas, Dick," said Sir Peter, amazed, but evidently tempted. "If I were ten years younger I don't say—"

"What have ten years to do with it? You are quite young enough to enter into a piece of fun. However, just leave the business details to me; I will be your confederate and help to mount this little comedy."

Sir Peter had not sagacity enough to see that a husband who plots how he may inflict a deep wound in his wife's vanity is playing a dangerous game. He looked only to the recovery of his supremacy, though, to do him justice, he really did feel very anxious about the Charmeigh diamonds, which were his family pride. When a family has nothing else to be proud of, it takes to being proud of its heirlooms; so Sir Peter, after a little more talk with Dick, went to bed early, and was busy chattering about his midnight adventure in the servants' hall. I am sure that jewelry will be lying about in heaps on all the tables."

"But how am I to act to-night?" asked Sir Peter, feeling a little of his valor ooze out of him.

"Why, we'll sit up until all the household are in bed, and then go into the garden and see if it isn't possible for me to effect an entrance through some window or unlocked door that will give you an opportunity of testing the vigilance of your servants."

"Isn't it rather a queer thing to do? I think I should look very foolish if caught climbing through a window with a ladder. Why, one of the servants might send a charge of shot into my back."

"No fear; we'll manage so as not to be seen."

"But, I say, don't you feel it's rather a cold night? Shouldn't we do well to put the thing off till we have matured our plans?"

Sir Peter was evidently trying to back out, but Dick Lyster would not allow him to do this. "No," said he, giving him a slap on the thigh; "I want to see you wearing the domestic crown again. I'll make a potentate of you in your own despite. No funking now."

A couple of hours later, when midnight had struck, and all Charmeigh Hall was hushed in repose, two figures might have been seen groping their way like malefactors in the obscurity of the garden. It was a very dark night, indeed, and Sir Peter's teeth chattered partly from cold and partly from nervousness, though he had sought to steady himself with pretty deep draughts. Dick Lyster was grinning like a Cheshire cat. As he made for the shed where the gardeners kept their ladders, he could not help laughing at the remarkable aspect of Sir Peter, who, to equip himself for his burglary, had put on a thick overcoat, furred gloves, and a flannel cricket-cap, which he had tied round his head with a silk pocket-handkerchief, intended to protect his ears. He could no more have run, if chevied, than a wine-tun can gallop. However, there were impulses of resolution in his demeanor, and he kept on repeating that he was doing all this solely to assert his dignity. "A man must be a man," said he dolefully, as his teeth chattered.

A ladder was soon found, and the two men carrying it across the garden with stealthy steps, planted it under the window of Lady Charmeigh's dressing-room. Dick, who was a nimble gymnast, then made haste to climb the ladder, and with ready tact; but she mentally scored down with ready tact; but she mentally scored down her good friend for reprisals on the earliest opportunity.

"A man must be a man," said he dolefully, as his teeth chattered.

A ladder was soon found, and the two men carrying it across the garden with stealthy steps, planted it under the window of Lady Charmeigh's dressing-room. Dick, who was a nimble gymnast, then made haste to climb the ladder, and on reaching the top tried the window, which by an almost miraculous coincidence proved to be open. This Dick announced, when he had slid down like a monkey, and the news exasperated Sir Peter, who saw in it another proof of his wife's incurable giddiness, for he never suspected that Dick himself had unfastened the bolt that afternoon.

"Now, then, Amy, Amy must be mad to act in this way less than a month after the burglary, and a window open in November, too!"

"Such a woman deserves to lose her jewels," concurred the hussar feelingly.

"She never deserved to have any, and I say when I've got them, I've a good mind to lodge them in the bank; that will tease her."

"Right you are; your thoughts are those of a sage. But look sharp now."

"That ladder seems a very tall one," observed Sir Peter, with his foot on the lowest rung. "But mind you, I am only doing this strange thing out of regard for my dignity."

"Of course; I'll hold the ladder below from the same feeling," laughed Dick. "Up you go."

The ascent of Sir Peter up the ladder did not prove such an easy and graceful affair as Dick's had been. It rather resembled the progress of a stout bear up a pole. Twice the corpulent Baronet paused and listened to the sad sough-ing of the wind through the chestnut trees of his park, for it seemed as though he heard voices mocking him. Once he uttered an exclamation on feeling the ladder creak; and when he got to the top and placed his hand on the cold stone of the window-sill a shiver ran through his limbs. Here a little piece of high gymnastics became necessary, for the problem to be solved was how to get into the room without any noise. To an agile man this would have been easy; but to a fat one it was a thing of trouble, causing wheezes and puffings, besides profuse perspiration. Intent on his dignified purpose, though, Sir Peter made the best exertions, and contrived somehow to land himself into the dressing-room on his back with a soft thump like that of a bag of linen for the wash. Luckily, the carpet was thick, and the noise woke no echoes. Crawling to his legs in the dim light—for there were embers of a fire still aglow in the grate—Sir Peter leaned out of the window, and signaled to Dick that it was "all right" by waving his handkerchief. Then he thrust a match against a red coal, and proceeded to light one of the candles on the chimney-piece. This was a delicate moment. If Lady Charmeigh saw the light through her bedroom door, which stood ajar, the whole enterprise would break down. But her ladyship was sound asleep. Sir Peter satisfied himself about that by entering her room on tiptoe and listening to her breathing, soft and regular as an infant's.

"Foolish woman," he repeated, as he stood by the bed. "Here now, if I were a real burglar, I could kill her outright."

The thought made him shudder, but it also impelled him with the desire to do his work quickly and to do it well. He caught sight of himself in a glass, and felt that he looked like a real burglar, insomuch that he was startled by the expression of rapine imprinted on his shrewd face. It is a fact that the countenances of men reflect their occupations pretty vividly. Sir Peter exhibited quite a burglarious dexterity of touch in running his hands over the toilet-table in the bedroom to find out whether there were any valuables there. He durst not bring a light into the room, and it was some moments before he could accustom his eyes to the semi-obscurity. When he did so he perceived that there were no trinkets at all lying about. The only thing on the table was a gold porte-bonheur, with the key of the famous safe attached to it by a chain. Sir Peter looked into the wardrobe, whose door was unfastened, and found the shelves full of the velvet cases. Here was a discovery indeed! Not an article of any sort that thieves would care to take was visible. "Why," soliloquized the disgusted Baronet, "I shouldn't wonder if, now that the secret of the safe is exploded, Amy has taken to lodging her jewels there just to spite me."

He returned noiselessly to the dressing-room, and there sure enough saw the globular strong-box standing in its appointed corner, and revolving with that quiet purring sound which Lady Charmeigh had lately abhorred.

Now the sight profoundly astonished Sir Peter, for he was not aware that the safe had been mended. It moreover incensed him, for that Lady Charmeigh should have entered into communication with the safe-maker without telling him anything about it was evidently a slight upon that marital dignity concerning which he was so sensitive. As Sir Peter seldom went into his wife's dressing-room, he had not seen the strong box for more than a fortnight, and he now began to walk round and round it, examining it with the stealthy attention of a caged animal inspecting some strange thing. It had been perfectly mended, and looked from its massiveness as if it could defy the attacks of any gang of cracksmen.

"Well, of all the perverse, incomprehensible, wayward creatures, women are the worst!" exclaimed Sir Peter. "Only to think of the jewels being in that safe now. Amy has forgotten to lock up her key, though, which is just like her. I'll open the box, and as sure as I'm alive every diamond shall be put into the bank to-morrow. We shall see what you think of your precious cleverness then, my lady!"

Sir Peter chuckled in malicious glee, and stole back to the bedroom. As he returned with the bracelet and key, he looked out of the window and saw Dick Lyster smoking a cigar patiently at the foot of the ladder. It had been arranged that Dick should remain at this post until the burglary had been consummated, and then go off to bed, leaving the ladder standing under the open window to frighten the servants all over the house. He was departing in the morning. Sir Peter, on his side, was to return to his own quarters without, of course, passing through the window again. So confident did the Baronet now feel of success that, to spare Dick the trouble of remaining out longer in the cold, he dropped his pocket handkerchief into the garden, which was the preconcerted signal that everything had gone off well, and that Dick might depart. Having done this, Sir Peter, who felt hot from perspiration and excitement, doffed his overcoat, coat, and gloves, and betook himself to business, key in hand.

"Let me see, to-day is Thursday," said he, "so 'Jupiter' will be the word." He touched the nob on the stand with his foot, and the globe became motionless. A few turns of the disk at the top of the globe brought up the letters of the word "Jupiter," and then Sir Peter inserted his key into a cavity between the body and the dot of the middle letter i. But at this moment an appalling thing occurred. A Roman candle starting up under the marauder's nose exploded with a defening bang, the alarm began to ring like mad, and at the same time Sir Peter felt his hand tight imprisoned in a steel loop which clutched him with bruising force.

"Help!" bawled the miserable man, for the clasp hurt him, besides which his hair and eyebrows had been singed by the powder of the Roman candle, and he was frightened out of his wits. "Help! murder! thieves! Hie, Amy!"

Lady Charmeigh, unable to distinguish the sound of her husband's voice, had jumped out of bed in a panic and run into the passage, where she was uttering piercing shrieks. These, joined to the maddened vociferations of Sir Peter, who was the more scarified from being in the dark, as he had upset the candle and could not understand what was happening to him, speedily roused the whole household. There was a stampede of feet down corridors, an opening and shutting of doors, and then presently Sir Peter heard the sharp, firm voice of Patty Raggles saying:

"Oh, it's a burglar caught in your ladyship's new trap. We needn't be afraid of him. Just let me teach him a lesson with this riding-whip. Come along, John, Thomas, Charles, all of you."

The door of the dressing-room was thrown back and a curious procession filed in—the butler and footman in shirt-sleeves and trousers, the maids in their smocks and flannel petticoats; behind all, Lady Charmeigh, wrapped in a peignoir, and trembling. But Patty Raggles, with a quite manly courage, strode in front, brandishing one of her mistress' riding-whips. Sir Peter had become silent and sheepish, expecting to be released, and he turned a bewildered countenance toward his servants, forgetting that it was impossible for them to recognize him with his blackened face, to say nothing of the cricket-cap and handkerchief which converted him into a villainous guy. Besides, the noise of the alarm, which continued to ring twice as loud as any telegraph bell, drowned the sound of his voice, when he piteously ejaculated:

"It's I!"

"You, is it?" answered Patty Raggles, roughly; and, to the horror and fury of Sir Peter, the strong-armed wench began belaboring the chubbiest parts of his lower man with terrific slashing cuts. "There, take that," she said, "and that, and that! Now a few on the hands to warm you, this cold weather. Ah, you don't like it, I see! well, try another dose on the legs—which, which?"

It was in vain that poor fat Sir Peter leaped, danced, yelled, cursed; the louder he roared, the more was the natural sound of his voice altered; and, meanwhile, his gambols were so ludicrous, he was evidently suffering such exquisite pain from his whipping, that the spectators could not forbear to laugh. Lady Charmeigh, whose risible faculties were easily stirred, was the first to set the example, and though she said, "Enough, Patty, enough," she could not check her tittering. The servants, emboldened by her conduct, fairly guffawed to see a rogue, as they imagined, get his full deserts, and so the comedy might have continued some time longer had not Dick Lyster suddenly appeared on the scene in a dressing-gown, and exclaimed—

"I say, what's all this uproar? Why, it's Sir Peter you are thrashing?"

"Sir Peter?" cried Patty, falling back, and she let the whip drop.

"Sir Peter?" chorused the other servants, in awe-stricken accents.

"Sir Peter?" exclaimed Lady Charmeigh, stupefied, and she advanced as if doubting whether this were not a hoax. "Why, how come you to be here?" she cried, as soon as she could recognize her lord.

"Loose me from this, will you?" roared the Baronet, ferocious from pain and rage.

"Why, how are you caught?" said Lady Charmeigh. "Let me see, I don't know if I remember how this catch can be unfastened. Do you, Patty?"

"Yes, my lady; I'll loose Sir Peter," said Patty, bustling forward. "And, Oh, Sir, I am so sorry for the whipping I gave yer. I do hope your poor body isn't sore?"

"Out of my sight, you drab!" thundered the Baronet, as soon as he was released. "Never let me see you again; and all you others clear off this instant. What are you all gaping at?"

Sir Peter was quite wild, and the room was cleared without more ado; but as soon as the husband and wife were alone together, Lady Charmeigh became grave, and said severely:

"Now will you please explain to me how you came to cause such a scandalous scene?"

"O, bother!" groaned Sir Peter. "Fetch me some arnica; I feel as if my wrist were coming off. And, Oh, mercy, look at my hands and legs!"

III.

From that hour Sir Peter Charmeigh was a subjugated man. Not that her ladyship made an ungenerous use of her triumph, for she was, indeed, very good-natured in trying to salve the wounds inflicted on her husband's self-esteem, nor less in her embracing those which his limbs had endured. Knowing how painful it must be to him to see in the house servants who had been witnesses of his discomfiture, she dismissed most of them, and would even have found a new situation for Patty Raggles had Sir Peter insis a queer tarot-card representing a man in a drunken sleep after dinner, and a woman lifting to her lips a flagon of half-gallon capacity—doubtless a pictorial stab at the vice of tippling. The suits from the very first appear to have been four in number. In Italian cards they have usually been called coppe, danari, bastone, and spade; that is, acorn-cups, coins, clubs or batons, and swords. Hearts and diamonds afterward superseded acorn-cups and coins. The French, so early as the middle of the fifteenth century, had cœurs, carriaux, trèfles, and piques, pretty much as at present; and these designations with the requisite translations in languages, gradually spread from one country to another; but Germany long retained herzen, schellen, laube, and eicheln—hearts, bells, leaves, and acorns. The names for our clubs have been more numerous than for any other of the suits—trèfle, flore, palos, kreuze, in France, Italy, Spain, and Germany. There was something like a distinction into two groups in the character of the suits: i. e. southern, comprising Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, and South German; and northern, comprising French, Swiss, and North German; but the classification is not very well sustained.—All the Year Round.

A LITTLE BIRD.

It was not in the blooming May,
It was not in the dimply Spring,
But deep in the leaden gray
Of the new year's bitterest day,
That a sweet little bird that had lost her way,
A tiny feathery thing,
Lightly perched on my heart's bare spray
(Poor little bird, she had lost her way!)
And folded her downy wing,
And shuddered and sang to my heart's bare spray,
Folding her soft wee wing.

Sitting alone and apart
Her notes rang clear and keen,
And lo! with a strange sweet start,
An exquisite shuddering smart,
Each unborn bud in my frozen heart,
Even in its dim sleep unseen,
Flashed to the light, a quivering dart
(Each yearning bud in my frozen heart)
And thrilled into poignant green;
And now the nests in my leafy heart,
Embowered in the shadowy green.

THE HUNTING SQUIRE.—The possessor of one of the finest seats in the country, most happily married, rich, well born, the Squire of Highthorpe Abbey has little cause to grumble at his lot. Genial, generous, hospitable, he is the first M. F. H. who has hunted his country to the satisfaction of its neighborhood. Before he took over the Slottesloe hounds, incessant were the squabbles in the district; master after master succeeded to the command of the pack, yet always came to loggerheads with the subscribers; the farmers wired their fences, and breathed threatenings and slaughter against all who dared to ride over their land; petty spites were at work, and permission was often refused for neighboring coverts to be drawn; the pack deteriorated; foxes were plenty, yet no sport could be got; and at last the question of selling the hounds was seriously discussed. At this juncture Ashby Folville stepped in. He had just succeeded to the paternal estates, and to a father who was as fond of chemistry as the son was of sport. He agreed to take over the hounds. He took a pleasure in their working and management, and he would pay keepers, stoppers, damage, everything, himself. Need we say so liberal an offer was gladly accepted? Young, wealthy, and known to be a venturesome rider, the country soon rallied round him. What was denied to crabbed elderly men was granted to him. Neighboring land-owners sank their jealousies; the farmers were won over, and became the most ardent of the supporters of the hunt: gorse covers, where the woodlands were deficient, were judiciously planted. At the end of some four years the number of hounds on the books reached 40 couples, boasting some of the best blood from the finest kennels in the Kingdom. Slowly the paddocks filled, and the pack increased. Hunting-boxes in the neighborhood were let at double their former rents. A large joint-stock hotel, with the most extensive stabling, was erected at Highthorpe. Men came down from London with their horses to hunt with the Slottesloe, as they went into the shires to follow the Pytchley or the Quorn. The name of "the Squire" became as a household word in the sporting circles of the country. It was known that he was no dandy master of hounds, with no more idea of the points of a foxhound than an otter has of flying, and that he did not leave all the work to his whips, as certain "Governors" of yachts have left the work to their "Captains." Mounted on his powerful brown horse, it must indeed be a quick thing which fails to see him close up at the finish. In spite of every obstacle that falls in his way to negotiate, he can tell you the name of every hound that was leading during any part of the run; he has an eye for country such as few cavalry officers possess; his nerve never fails him, and in an instant the course his hounds are taking, and, when sound is useless as a guide, he seems to have an instinctive knowledge of all the turns and dodges the fox is up to. It is not therefore surprising that when its master shows such sport "the Slottesloe" should be a great favorite with all who care to ride to, and that the right to wear the uniform of the hunt (olive-green with buff facings) should be much coveted.—London Society.

TALENTED ROYALTY.—The quality that is looked for in royalty is activity, readiness to take part in all that is going on, method in arranging the proceedings over which it is to preside, punctuality in carrying them out, and the power of seeing what works of public beneficence it can usefully promote, and how to promote them. In the discharge of this part of her duties the Princess Alice especially shone. The outbreak of the French war afforded her an occasion of showing how she could organize relief for the fainting, and care for the wounded soldiers; and the military hospital of Darmstadt was a model to Germany, not on account of the superiority of its scientific arrangements, for throughout Germany every arrangement of the kind was admirable, but because of the systematic superintendence of women under the guidance of the Princess. Lastly, nations like their royal families to be clever, to be alive to what is going on, to aid in the highest progress of the people. It may seem hard that so much should be asked for in the representatives and members of a few families. But as a matter of fact, as we have so often explained, an extraordinary amount of liveliness of intellect obtains in the royal houses of the present day. This is not the time to speak of the royal family of England; but if we look abroad it is astonishing how much personal ability is found in the very narrow circle of royalty. The Kings of Sweden and Portugal are authors, the Emperor of Brazil and the King of the Belgians, the Count of Paris and the Duke of Aumale, are all men who, if they were not of royal lineage, would hold their own in the first intellectual society. The Kings of Spain and Italy have yet to show what they can do; but they have, at least, passed through a better and more laborious education than most of the highest of their subjects. The Crown Princess of Germany shared with the late Queen of Holland the reputation of being among the few very clever women of any rank in Europe, and now she is pre-eminent. Last, but not least, Prince Louis of Hesse, the right intellectual life in Darmstadt, and steadily upheld the importance of learning, of knowledge, and of honest inquiry in the conduct of life. The patronage of clever men and women by royalty is only a small matter. The true service to the nation is rendered, as it was rendered by the Princess in Instice of her father, when royalty makes it felt, as its own deep conviction, that varied knowledge and the width of view which varied knowledge generally carries with it, are indispensable elements in the good guidance, not only of politics, but of every-day life.—The Spectator.

AN ENTOMOLOGICAL CLOWN.—In the midst of heavy professional work Grimaldi found time and energy to pursue a most fatiguing hobby—the collecting of insects. He had formed a cabinet which contained 4,000 specimens. There was a kind which came out in the month of June, called the Dartford Blue, for which he was particularly eager. His enthusiasm in this pursuit may be measured by the sacrifices he made for it. After the performance was over at Sadler's Wells he would return home to supper, then about midnight start to walk to Dartford, a distance of 15 miles. He would arrive there about 5 in the morning, rest and breakfast at a friend's house, then go out into the fields; sometimes a search for hours would be rewarded with only a single specimen. At 1 o'clock he would begin his return walk to London, reach there in time for tea, and hurry off to the theatre. On the same night, after the performance, he would again walk to Dartford, recommence his fly-hunt, return in the same manner as on the previous day, and play again without rest or sleep. On the third night the pantomime was played first, which enabled him to quit the theatre at 9 o'clock. Seemingly impervious to fatigue, he once more started on his 15 miles' walk, and this time, arriving at his journey's end by 1 in the morning, was able to obtain a night's rest before commencing his quest. The next day being Sunday, he had an opportunity of recruiting his strength, and he must have sorely needed it. A circumstance which had made him particularly eager on this occasion was that he was making a small collection for charming Mrs. Jordan. Some time afterward his entomological pursuits were brought to an abrupt termination; a band of thieves breaking into his house in Penton-place, whither he had by that time removed, wantonly destroyed the cabinet, flies and all, which, with his models and drawings, were worth about £200. So disheartened was he by the loss, that he gave his nets and all the débris to a friend, and thenceforth the flies had one enemy the fewer.—Temple Bar.

THE VENDETTA.—The vendetta, like the duel, does not make men less ready to take offense, as one might have fancied it would, but more ready. To be touchy, a bully, a swashbuckler, and to prove your mettle, becomes a point of honor, whereas, if you do not carry a weapon, and public opinion does not sanction personal violence, it becomes obviously better breeding not to offend and provoke, nor to be too easily provoked yourself, as also more convenient in every way. A Corsican, like an Italian, stabs a man on the smallest provocation, and, like an Irishman, thinks it no dishonor to shoot at him from behind a stone wall. Having killed his victim, he escapes into the maquis, the wild, open country, covered with impenetrable, odorous brushwood, and there lives supported by his sympathizing fellow-countrymen, practically safe from pursuit, for the gendarmerie do not care much to venture into the wilds on such an errand. So a Corsican gendarme in the French service, bound with others on a service of pacification in a disturbed district, and who climbed up behind our mule-cart, without leave asked, chatting affably, informed us. Moreover, the people of the neighborhood always give these "banditti" as they are termed, timely warning of the approach of the Police. Some of these gentry have killed quite a large number of men; and if only the murders have not been committed for purposes of robbery, the banditti are most popular, especially among women. But robbery and theft are counted dishonorable, and the Corsican banditti, therefore, justifiably object to be confounded with the banditti of Greece, Italy, or Sardinia. A traveler is perfectly safe, though the district through which he travels be infested with them; and when acts of pillage have been committed in their name, they have always executed summary vengeance on the offender who has thus dared to take their dreaded name in vain. A poor man was robbed on the mountains of all his belongings by one who said that he was Seraphino, a celebrated bandit; the poor man went on his way weeping; as he went, a respectably-dressed and kindly-mannered person came up to him and asked what was the matter. Upon being told, he took the direction in which the robber had just gone, and soon after the poor wayfarer heard a shot fired. This was followed by the return of his friend, who brought him back his goods and chattels, informing him that the thief was dead, and that he himself was Seraphino, the bandit. Honesty is a Corsican virtue; so are hospitality and generosity. Sexual morality does not appear to be their strong point, though any insult to an unmarried girl incurs the implacable vengeance of her relatives. I was told, however, on excellent authority, that the father of a distinguished Corsican having been murdered, the son, who was too enlightened to revenge himself after the approved fashion of his countrymen, handed the culprit over to French justice, which sentenced the man to only a few years' imprisonment, the result being that this lukewarmness, now at large, threatens to exterminate, not this son only, but all his family. It is difficult, one must own, to feel much liking for such a race of rascals. Yet I am disposed to think that a really good Corsican, when you do get hold of him, is a very noble person indeed. Such was Paoli, and such was, we believe, the coachman who drove us in all our subsequent expeditions from Ajaccio.—Fraser's Magazine.

THE MAGAZINE—ITS EDITOR.—You find a publisher, and you catch your editor—and catching the editor is easy enough. There are men and women of more or less literary reputation, who are ready enough to lend their names by way of puff for the sake of some additional notoriety. They will be powers in a small way—or in a greater; nor do they dislike the sense of authority involved in patronising or snubbing aspiring contributors. We fancy that in most cases the work of supervision sits easily on them. "All contributions may be carefully considered;" but we have a shrewd suspicion that we know what is meant by that. Distinctly written communications, like the fair face, or for any one who has the slightest critical or editorial qualifications can tell, on a very superficial inspection, whether the applicant, in sending in his testimonials, is craving a favor or laying them under an obligation. Generally speaking, there is some small, unique or coterie of little-ness, who have rallied round their chief, and undertaken to help him to work a monopoly. So the services of absolutely anonymous outsiders are at a discount; while very often the title of the proffered article may indicate as much as the name of the writer. Nineteen-twentieths of the packets that carry such a burden of hopes and fears are returned "with thanks," after having taxed the resources of the office to the extent of opening and making them up again. There are exceptions, we know, to that mode of editing. Magazines, like ancient families, must have a beginning somewhere; and there are editors who are determined to do their utmost for the new venture, which, at best, has to contend with long-established favorites, and who take a positive pleasure in unearthing undeveloped genius. And that is the editor to whom we should pin our faith, had we been rash enough to stake something pecuniarily on this enterprise. When he draws his chair round to the fire after dinner, and lights his post-prandial pipe or cigar, in place of taking up the evening journal, or some rival periodical, he helps himself to a heavy armful of papers. Lying back luxuriously on his cushions, with vague hopes of possible discoveries to soothe him, he flips his fingers through the pages of manuscript. A sample or two taken almost at random, suffices. With a shrug of the shoulders he throws a packet aside, and another and another follows in course, with what the unfortunate rejected would call most hasty judgment; when suddenly he draws himself together. There is something in the set and stiffening of the shoulders that might suggest a pointer drawing in a scent, or a spaniel cocking its ears in a cover, while a sparkle of dawning interest lights up his indifferent eyes. There is really something in this young man. That expressive picture by itself bears some evidence of original genius. There is talent in that scena, though it may be crudely conceived, and power in those characters, although they are sketchy and unshapely. The story may have to be revised or rewritten, but it contains the elements of a success, and the promise of a literary career. He sits down on the spur of a moment and dashes off a note. The novice receives it next morning with a throbbing pulse, and is elevated straightway to the seventh heaven. He keeps the momentous appointment in a mingled state of nervous excitement and irrepressible jubilation, for we may presume that he has the sensitive literary temperament. And in the place of the austere critic, whose approbation he has had the audacity to court, he makes a cordial and sympathetic acquaintance, who mingles advice with hearty encouragement, and welcomes him as a man and a brother into the aspiring guild of the penman.—Blackwood's Magazine.

DREAMS.—There seems no doubt that in sleep the imagination acts independently of the will and the conscience and the reason. Even passion or desire is incapable of producing a required dream; in the midst of intense grief dreams are frivolous and irrelevant, and the dearest images cannot be recalled at pleasure. The moral sense is non-existent; there is animal fear, but no remorse; there is personal anxiety, but no responsibility. The confused multitude of images destroy the orderly succession which constitutes the category of time; you know the numerous instances where the dreamer remembers on waking that he has gone through an almost interminable series of events, and yet it is proved by circumstances that he has only been asleep for a few moments. The image of a word will suggest by its sound a whole series of events in the most ludicrous connection. There is a story given by M. Maury in his work "Le Sommeil et les Rêves," where the word "kilometre," coming up in the mind of the sleeper, sets him walking an enormous distance counting the milestones; then changing to "kilogramme," placed him in a grocer's shop, in which he was put in a balance against a number of weights; then from a jumble of sound transported him to the Island of Gilolo, of which he did not remember ever to have thought; then to a garden full of the flower Lobelia; then to Cuxe with Gen. Lopez; and lastly to a game at Loto. In the same way, when the emission of the senses is not complete, the lightest impression suggests some curious analogous image. Descartes mentions that the bite of flies made him think himself wounded by a sword. Dugald Stewart mentions a dreamer with a hot bottle at his feet fancying himself going up Mount Ætna, and there may be some present who will remember an analogous effect of sounds, especially those of music. So far there is meaning in the expression of a noted physiologist, that sleep is a short insanity, and that you should never make any decision or calculation for some time after you wake, for you may be unconsciously still under the power of some dominant image which the normal action of the senses will clear away. —Lord Houghton, in Fortnightly Review.

THACKERAY'S "ESMOND."—"Esmond" is undoubtedly Thackeray's greatest work—not only because in it his story is told with the directest purpose, with less of vague wandering than in the others—but by reason also of the force of the characters portrayed. The one to which we will specially call attention is that of Beatrix, the younger heroine of the story. Her mother, Lady Castlewood, is an elder heroine. The term as applied to the personages of a modern novel—as may be said also of hero—is not very appropriate; but it is the word which will best convey the intended meaning to the reader. Nothing sadder than the story of Beatrix can be imagined—nothing sadder, though it fails so infinitely short of tragedy. But we speak specially of it here, because we believe its effect on the minds of girls who read it to be thoroughly salutary. Beatrix is a girl endowed with great gifts. She has birth, rank, fortune, intellect, and beauty. She is blessed with that special combination of feminine loveliness and feminine wit which men delight to encounter. The novelist has not merely said that it is so, but has succeeded in bringing the girl before us with such vivid power of portraiture that we know her, what she is, down to her shoe-ties—know her, first to the loving of her, and then to the hating of her. She becomes as she goes on the object of Esmond's love—and, could she permit her heart to act in this matter, she too would love him. She knows well that he is a man worthy to be loved. She is encouraged to love him by outward circumstances. Indeed, she does love him. But she has decided within her own bosom that the world is her oyster, which has to be opened by her, being a woman, not by her sword, but by her beauty. Higher rank than her own, greater fortune, a bigger place in the world's eyes, grander jewels, have to be won. Harry Esmond, oh, how good he is; how fit to be the lord of any girl—if only he were a Duke, or such like! This is her feeling, and this is her revolt. Then the serio-comic cap at a Duke, a real Duke, and almost gets him—would have got him only her Duke is killed in a duel before she has been made a Duchess. After that terrible blow she sinks lower still in her low ambition. A scion of banished royalty comes dangling after her, and she thinks that she may yet be queen. Stored to his royal grandeur, would fain become the mistress of a King. It is a foul career, the reader will say, and there may be some who would ask whether such is the picture which should be presented to the eyes of a young girl by those who are anxious not only for the amusement of her leisure hours, but also for her purity of youth. It might be asked also, whether the Commandments should be read in her ears, lest she should be taught to steal and to murder. Beautiful as Beatrix is, attractive, clever, charming—prone as the reader is to sympathize with Esmond in his love for this winning creature—yet, by degrees the coldness, the selfishness, the vile, the sickening sores are so revolting, the whited sepulchre is seen to be so foul within, that the girl who reads the book is driven to say, "Not like that; not like that! Whatever fate may have in store for me, let it not be like that." And this conviction will not come from any outward suffering—not from poverty. Illness, the loss of beauty or youth. No condign punishment of that easy kind is inflicted. But the vice is made to be so ugly, so heart-breaking to the wretched victim who has encouraged it, that it strikes the beholder with horror. Vice is heart-breaking to its victim. The difficulty is to teach the lesson—to bring the lesson home. Sermons too often fail to do it. The little story in which Tom the naughty boy breaks his leg, while Jack the good boy gets apples, does not do it. The broken leg and the apples do not find credence. Beatrix in her misery is believed to be miserable.—Anthony Trollope, in Nineteenth Century.

DISSERTATION ON DUMPLING.—In the collection of Arbuthnot's works, pronounced unauthentic by his son, we find "A Learned Dissertation on Dumpling," written in the Doctor's style, and not unworthy of his pen. The dumpling-eaters, we are told, were brought into Britain by Julius Cæsar, and, finding it a land of plenty, wisely resolved never to go home again. The "race" grew by what they fed on, and increased so rapidly that the whole island is overrun with them. The dumpling was of foreign origin; but, every generation growing wiser, the dumpling grew to be a pudding. One projector found milk better than water; another introduced butter; another plums and sugar; and yet, to the reproach of our historians, who eat so much pudding, the first professors of this noble science have no place in history. "The invention of eggs was merely accidental; two or three of which having casually rolled from off a shelf into a pudding which a good wife was making, she found herself under a necessity either of throwing away her pudding or letting the eggs remain. But concluding, from the innocent quality of the eggs, that they would do no hurt if they did no good, she wisely jumbled them all together, after having carefully picked out the shells. The consequence is easily imagined: the pudding became a pudding of puddings, and the use of eggs from thence took its date. The woman was sent for to make puddings for King John, who then swayed the sceptre, and gained such power that she was the making of her whole family." It can scarcely be doubted that this passage suggested to Charles Lamb his inimitable essay on "Roast Pig;" and, if so, it would be difficult to overestimate its literary value. As we can imagine Elia turning over the pages of this "Dissertation," and smiling as he read: "The head of man is like a pudding; and whence have all rhymes, poems, plots, and inventions sprung but from that same pudding? What is poetry but a pudding of words? The physicians, indeed, they carry out as much against cooks and cookery, yet are but cooks themselves; with this difference only—the cook's pudding lengthens life, the physician's shortens it. So that we live and die by pudding." In one form or another, pudding, according to this facetious writer, rules the world. The success of war and fate of monarchies are entirely dependent on pudding; "for what else are cannon-balls but military puddings, or bullets but dumplings? with this difference only—they do not sit so well on the stomach as a good marrow pudding or bread pudding.—The Cornhill Magazine.

A PAPER HOUSE.—Just as there are countries possessed of paper armies only, so there are theatres that seem greatly dependent upon paper audiences. In the eyes of the manager an empty house is the most distressing of spectacles; rather than that, he would seek spectators in the highways and byways, and compel them to come in. The audience, admitted gratuitously is in the nature of a decoy; it may lure a paying public into the theatre. The appearance of the house is an evidence of success, and the success of an entertainment—even its suppositious or rumored success—is a sure means of attraction. It has been estimated that some 30,000 orders are distributed weekly by the London managers, and that if one-half of the number now entering theatres gratis were required to pay for the privilege, the theatres would collectively profit to the amount of over £150,000 per annum. "To sow orders broadcast," writes one well informed on the subject, "has now become one of the most important of theatrical functions; and an 'acting' manager, who has a list of persons to whom he may send orders with a certainty of their being distributed, ranks higher than the best of actors." A manager whose origin had been humble, and who had scarcely moved among the socially distinguished, once described an acquaintance as his greatest benefactor, adding the explanation: "He gives away my private boxes to respectable people." At the same time it is indisputable that orders are bestowed upon many both able and willing, under a different system, to pay for their seats. The gift of an order is attended with a certain demoralizing effect; the recipient is thenceforward disinclined to pay for his admission, and finds an unworthy pride in his privileged state, flattering himself that he is much better off than his neighbors, he obtains for nothing what they would be required to pay considerably for. It is alleged, however, that a certain Nemesis waits upon the play-goer provided with an order. His sense of enjoyment is vitiated and numbed. The play is less pleasant seen for nothing than when properly paid for—the result of some effort to secure a place, and even of some sacrifice of personal comfort. And "orders" have the reputation of being a bad, an unsympathetic audience. They are said to be critical, cynical, hard to please. They undervalue the entertainment set before them; naturally—It had cost them nothing, and perhaps they have arrived at the theatre under conditions ruffling to the temper. The orders may have reached them at the last moment, disturbing their other arrangements, including those relative to dinner and digestion. The gentleman may have had no time to make due change in his dress; the lady may have hurriedly assumed a crumpled red opera cloak to hide the incompleteness or the unpicturesqueness of her toilet. It is not so surprising that they should survey moodily, with saturnine eyes, the transactions of the stage.—Belgravia.

S. S. "LUSITANIA."

I read in Dante how that horned light,
Which hid Ulysses, waved itself and said:
"Following the sun, we set our vessel's head
To the great main; pass'd Seville on the right

"And Ceuta on the left; then southward sped.
At last in air, far off, dim rose a Height.
We cheer'd; but from it rush'd a blast of might,
And struck—and o'er us the sea-waters spread."

I dropp'd the book, and of my child I thought
In his long black ship speeding night and day
O'er those same seas; dark Teneriffe rose, fraught

With omen; "Oh! were that Mount pass'd," I say.
Then the door opens and this card is brought:
"Reach'd Cape Verde Islands, 'Lusitania.'"

THE FIRST CLEARING-HOUSE.—Besides the constitution of the English corn market by Gresham, another financial reform is associated with the Grasshopper, and that is that the clearing among London bankers was first and for a long time held there. This institution of the clearing by London bankers has had an enormous influence on the London market, for it has enabled an extraordinary facility and rapidity to be given to transactions and an enormous economy in the use of money. It is this feature of the London money market, the small amount of actual money with which it is worked, which distinguishes the London money market from others. It was in its beginning a very simple expedient; that bankers, instead of paying separately, should exchange the checks they held against each other, and only pay once a day the balance in cash. This has since been greatly extended and improved, and in 1810 the bankers were obliged to take a clearing-house for themselves in Lombard-street, and also a working staff from the Bank. Upon the model of this banking institution the great railway clearing-house has been established here, and other like establishments in other countries. The tickets that pass over several lines, and the payment for which has to be divided among the companies in various proportions, are thus cleared. By this means not only is a passenger in this country enabled to take one ticket anywhere in these islands, but from London to St. Petersburg or Constantinople, or from New-York to San Francisco. Thus, one good principle receives various developments, and institutions dissimilar in form grow from a healthy root. The connection of the Clearing-house is held to be recorded here as so revolting, the whited sepulchre is seen to be so foul within, that the girl who reads the book is driven to say, "Not like that; not like that! Whatever fate may have in store for me, let it not be like that." And this conviction will not come from any outward suffering—not from poverty. Illness, the loss of beauty or youth. No condign punishment of that easy kind is inflicted. But the vice is made to be so ugly, so heart-breaking to the wretched victim who has encouraged it, that it strikes the beholder with horror. Vice is heart-breaking to its victim. The difficulty is to teach the lesson—to bring the lesson home. Sermons too often fail to do it. The little story in which Tom the naughty boy breaks his leg, while Jack the good boy gets apples, does not do it. The broken leg and the apples do not find credence. Beatrix in her misery is believed to be miserable.—Anthony Trollope, in Nineteenth Century.

CORNWALL.—No one of the dirt and blackness here of the coal districts of counties further north. The red earth, on the contrary, gives the landscape a warm and cheerful tinge, that a very little redeems its barren aspect—though its cheerfulness is almost as dismal and out of place as the smiles of a mute on guard. It follows that the miners, too, are red, and not black. The effect they create is only the more weird and startling. The blackness of the coal-miner conceals his pallor and any little eccentricities of form or symmetry of feature wherewith nature may have endowed him. The red tinge of the Cornishman but seems to render yet more conspicuous the pale, cadaverous hue of his countenance, from out which a pair of eyes shine forth with dull or brilliant lustre in a melancholy stare that at once appeals to your compassion. Watch them in groups, waiting for the hour to strike that sets the man-engine to work, and takes them down, one by one, to their daily tombs, and you will pity many a pale face as it disappears with a piece of candle grotesquely stuck in a lump of clay in the cap that covers the matted head. At the dinner or tea hour, they return to earth one by one, up the ladder that took them down a few hours ago. Other spots of Cornwall again are silent for ever; a death-like silence that makes itself felt. Shafts have been sunk here, and money too, only to bring forth ruin to some, disappointment to many. The pits are tenanted with the ghosts of departed hopes, and the atmosphere they breathe is made up of the sighs and lamentations that followed them. Here is that the image that should have been gold has proved itself nothing but clay. The silence of these districts is eloquent. The tall chimneys are monuments of man's ingenuity, but also of the vanity and uncertainty of many a worldly scheme.—The Argosy.

A QUEEN OF FRANCE IN PRISON.—Here are some particulars about the Queen. Her room was the third door to the right, on entering, opposite to that of Custine; it was on the ground floor, and looked into a court which was filled all day with prisoners, who through the window looked at and insulted the Queen. Her room was small, dark, and fetid; there was neither stove nor fire-place; in it there were three beds—one for the Queen, another for the woman who served her, and a third for the two gendarmes, who never left the room. The Queen's bed was, like the others, made of wood; it had a palliasse, a mattress, and one dirty, torn blanket, which had long been used by other prisoners; the sheets were coarse, unbleached linen; there were no curtains, only an old screen. The Queen wore a kind of black spencer, ("caraco,") her hair, cut short, was quite gray. She had become so thin as to be hardly recognizable, and so weak she could scarcely stand. She wore three rings on her fingers, but not jeweled ones. The woman who waited on her was a kind of fish-wife, of whom she made great complaints. The soldiers told Michonis that she did not eat enough to keep her alive; they said that her food was very bad, and they showed him a black, stinky chicken, saying, "This chicken has been served to Madame for four days, and she has not eaten it." The gendarmes complained of their bed, though it was just the same as the Queen's. The Queen always slept dressed, and in black, expecting every moment to be murdered or to be led to torture, and, wishing to be prepared for either in mourning. Michonis wept as he spoke of the weak state of the Queen's health, and he said that he had only been able to get the black spencer and some necessary linen for the Queen from the Temple, after a deliberation in Council. These are his sad details he gave me.—Memoirs of Count Fersen.

EQUAL TO AN EMERGENCY.—Readiness in unforeseen emergencies is of the greatest value to manager and actor alike. A word fails the memory at an important stage of the play, or some accident occurs to mar or even put a stop to all further proceedings. On such occasions fertility of resource is of the greatest moment, and has over and over again saved the credit of all concerned. In fact, the readiness of an actor or manager to turn an apparent disaster into a happy interlude is much on a par with the presence of mind that guides a skilful General to victory. This readiness was well displayed on the stage by Laguet, when playing the bearer of an important dispatch, on the contents on which the plot of the drama turned. By mistake the property-man gave Laguet a blank sheet of paper, which he handed to the mimic King, who, not having studied the words which ought to have been written on the dispatch, was in a quandary. He got out of it by handing the paper back to the messenger, with the command: "Read it to me, sirrah!" Laguet, however, was equal to the occasion, and responded: "Alas, Sir, born of poor but honest parents, I have never learned to read."—Chambers's Journal.

NOTES FROM OVER THE SEA.

CHRISTMAS IN PARIS.

MORNING MASS IN A HISTORIC FANE—SAD EVENTS OF THE SEASON—MEMORIES OF BAYARD TAYLOR—A PICTURE OF GEN. GRANT—AMERICAN ARTISTS, SINGERS, AND ACTORS.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

PARIS, Saturday, Dec. 28, 1878.

Nature, grown suddenly gracious, accorded us a beautiful Christmas day; otherwise, it would have been scarcely endurable for us two, alone in an alien land, with floods of domestic joy and all that flowing about us, and not a drop for us. Had it been "dark and dreary," as "some days must be," and most days are here, one would have been tempted to treat one's self to syrups of poppy and mandragora, and so sleep it over. We heard Mass that morning in the old church of St. Roch, in the Rue St. Honoré, where the music is especially fine. After the service, we wandered about, looking at the pictures and sculptures, and so came upon the tombs of several eminent personages. Corneille is buried here, and also Lenotre, the prince of landscape gardeners. The Tuileries gardens, those of Versailles and Fontainebleau, and the grand terrace of St. Germain, are his work. Louis XIV. offered to bestow on him a coat of arms, but he replied. "Sire, I have my arms. I hold to them—three snails crowned with a head of cabbage. Suffer me to add a spade, for to that instrument of labor I owe the favor of your Majesty." Surely, the manly pride of this "grand old gardener," whose memory still "smells sweet and blossoms in the dust," ought to rebuke the snobbish spirit of certain of our republican agriculturists and mechanists, who, disappointed in their hope of foreign decorations, still cry to heaven against the French Government and the American Commissioner-General, refusing to be comforted. There was that day a gorgeous display of priestly vestments, and altar treasures enough to astonish the Magi around a lovely life-sized infant Jesus in a beautiful crèche; there were thick clouds of incense and grand billows of music, with an all-pervading atmosphere of pompous worship, before which it would seem the most haughty and heretical spirit must bow and confess. Yet in the height of it all I noticed near us, leaning against a pillar, a poor working man, probably a smith, for he was grimy and grim to behold, who did not seem awed or subdued or softened. He was brawny and brutal, his face—hard, sullen, haggard and defiant—seemed to say: "What share have I in these pious chants; in this luxury of others; in this Christianity pampered with gold and silver, purple and fine linen, velvet and lace, wax, lights, and incense; in this dainty Madonna, in this pink and white Jesus?" The poor man may have been harmless enough, but he formed for me a dark, menacing shadow to the brilliant picture, and recalled the crowd of hideous men like him, and more hideous women, who stood on the steps of this same church on the morning of Oct. 16, 1793, to hurl maledictions and obscene insults on the head of Marie Antoinette. It was while the charrette was here arrested, to allow those fiends to take their fill of cursing, that the last likeness of the heroic Queen was taken—a pen-and-ink croquis—by the hand of David, who sat at an open window opposite the church. It is a rude sketch, but terribly faithful, doubtless far more true to the death-like life of that tortured, humiliated, wasted, blanched, yet royal creature than the beautiful, grand woman in the great picture by Delaroche. It was a satisfaction, when descending those steps, to think that only two years after that triumphant occupation by the sans-culottes and fishwomen Napoleon, under the orders of the convention, posted there his cannon and killed more than 1,000 of the Terrorists. Civilization and true liberty took a step forward over the dead bodies of these citizen savages and vulgar tyrants. St. Roch seems have been a historical rallying-point. Here, in July, 1830, the people, incensed by the reactionary and tyrannical course of Charles X., made their great stand against his troops, and finished up with the Bourbons—another step forward. An odd incident of the revolution of 1848 was the depositing on the high altar of this church, by the insurgents, of a large and rich crucifix found in sacking the Tuileries. They had actually paused in their grand frolic of destruction to bear the sacred symbol to a place of safety. St. Roch, like St. Germain l'Auxerois, has been violently broken into by an indignant populace, but not for the purpose of dragging the dead from their graves. It was to inter, with loving and reverend hands, in that consecrated place the body of an actress—a piece of human clay objected to by the church as especially unholy. It was Duchenois, the great tragedienne of the first Empire, and a true-hearted, generous woman, and the people carried their point against the priests—which was another step forward.

As I said, it was a triste Christmas Day. I must confess, republican as I am to the marrow of my bones, I felt a sympathetic sorrow with the Queen and the people of England for the sad death of the Princess Alice, that event of which the awful "Thames disaster" of a few months since was so terrible a portent. If there be one member less of the royal family for the English to pray for, there is one good woman less in the world to pray for them all. But this was a general sorrow, which had made already the sad circle of the globe. For Americans had a more particular, if not private, grief in the sudden death of that well-beloved and eminently representative American, Bayard Taylor. Surely, he "should have died hereafter." It must be that the prodigious amount of work he had done within the last 20 years had undermined a constitution which seemed peculiarly hardy and vigorous. For him, my friend of many years, I feel that commiseration is out of the question. To the loving wife, the young daughter, the father and mother, to fond sisters and brothers, is alone due our sorrowful sympathy. His life was too happy and rich and fortunate to be thought of sadly, even at its untimely close. "Time is not of years." He had lived and loved much. Yes, Bayard Taylor was an eminently fortunate man, first, in a happy and healthful organization, which fitted and inclined him to get the best out of life in the best sense; next, in his parentage and early surroundings. He was reared in simplicity and contentment, in love and uprightness; in his childhood and youth only subjected to such influences as go to make honorable, independent, thoughtful men and women. As Boston is a desirable place to be born in, for its atmosphere of "culture" and mental activity, Chester County, Pennsylvania, is an admirable starting-point in life, for a sort of primitive social purity, for a tone of philanthropy and neighborly friendliness, for a certain moral stamina, which has always distinguished that beautiful bucolic region. It was there, in his paternal home, that I first knew well Bayard Taylor, who then, for many miles around, was only "Bayard." It was shortly after his return from his first trip to Europe, while he was tasting the delights of his first fame as a traveler and a poet. He was then tall and slender; handsome, with a face as rosy-tinted as a young girl's, and blushing as easily; sincere, ingenuous and engaging in manner, with a quick smile, which always blossomed into a little laugh, half bashful, half benevolent. He was at that time full of fine ambitions and brave day dreams, which were to him already like realities. He seemed to have his hand on the neck of the winged horse of the muses, ready to mount and ride away into a land of wonders and strange adventures. It is not given to many men to realize so many of the wild dreams of young ambition. "At that time, and for several years, Mr. Taylor was also fortunate in a great friend; Horace Greeley, who had a hearty liking for him, and much faith in his perseverance and faithful and sturdy stability of character. These personal qualities, more than an impression of genius or remarkable intellectual gifts of any kind, inclined one to share the faith he had in himself and his future. His strong will was based on rare physical as well as moral strength. He thoroughly understood how to make the most of his powers, natural or acquired; he was an admirable intellectual economist. He trained his memory, he sharpened his observation, he put all his acquirements to good practical use, he stored nothing away in mental lumber-rooms, to be forgotten, he hoarded nothing rich and rare where moths and rust might corrupt. All the experiences of life, joys, sorrows even, were put out at interest. In short, he only gathered to send abroad, only harvested that he might sow. I do not know, but my impression is that he left no unfinished work except, perhaps, the great work for which he desired most a residence in Germany, "A Life of Göethe." I remember meeting Mr. Taylor in London in 1852, when he was first dipping into literary life there. He had just come from Athens and Egypt, and discoursed eloquently of Greek temples and battle-fields, pyramids and sphinxes. His enthusiasm was kindling and contagious; he took us with him, by many strange ways and conveyances, and landed us, now on the Acropolis, now on Ararat. That was before the "Innocents" had gone "Abroad," or "Thomas Cook & Sons" had conducted monster caravans across the mysterious deserts of Arabia and the sacred mountains of Palestine. Then the Nile still ran golden in the light of mystic romance; then the Sphinx was still awful and Cheops sublime, and freshness was yet possible in treating even of the Dead Sea.

After that we met only at such long intervals that we could easily see what tricks time was playing with us both; but I think we were always sure of each other. His was a constant heart, true to old friends, old faiths, associations, and scenes. He chose the old home for his home, and there he lived his happiest life, one of generous hospitality and sensible social intercourse with his old neighbors. Next to his own country, he loved the land of his dearest alliance, where he was loved and honored, and where he died. Gen. Grant, whom we met soon after hearing of the loss we had all sustained, seemed much shocked and saddened. He had heard, he said, that Mr. Taylor was in his office, actually attending to business, the very day of his death. But that was like the great worker, the "good and faithful servant."

Gen. Grant is about leaving Paris, with Gen. Noyes, for a trip into Ireland, the only country of Europe which he has not yet visited. This done, he will return here and prepare for his journey to India. He expects, also, to visit China and Japan, and to return home from his great wanderings through the Golden Gate. By the way, his recent change of plan was not brought about, as has been stated, by the influence of a certain honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, but by that of an older and nearer counselor, Mrs. Grant has been, from the first, most anxious to make the grand tour, the only grand tour nowadays, bent upon putting around the earth a girdle of marvelous memories. It will be for her, like all her other foreign journeyings, a sort of triumphal progress of wifely pride. Oh, the mended times, when Penelope goes everywhere with Ulysses! Oh, the mended manners, when honest Ulysses can wander anywhere, unmolested by sirens and uninveigled by Circes and Calypsos! The finest portrait I have ever seen of our great General is one painted by Mr. Healy, exh

THE GROWTH OF NEW-YORK

A DECADE IN THE METROPOLIS.

HOW THE TERRITORY AND BUILDINGS HAVE INCREASED DURING ELEVEN YEARS—SOME VALUABLE TABLES—THE TENEMENT-HOUSE AND THE PRIVATE DWELLING—RISE OF THE FRENCH FLAT—CHURCHES, SCHOOLS, AND TRADE BUILDINGS.

A series of carefully-prepared tables have recently been drawn up under the supervision of the Superintendent of the Building Department, which show the operations of that department from Jan. 1, 1868, to Dec. 31, 1878. It is the first condition on which a departure has been attempted from the routine annual report, in it is also the first attempt to show in a connected and condensed form the growth of the City for the period covered by the tables, and the characteristics of that growth. Since no building may be erected without plans and estimates filed with, and permit given by, the Building Department, we learn from these transcripts how many buildings are erected every year, the aggregate amount annually spent in building operations, the progress of building in each section of the City from year to year, the several descriptions of structures erected, and the number of each kind. The general and the particular growth of the City is thus exhibited, though from the rather rude classifications adopted by the department the information given is less specific than might be desired. At the same time, the form in which the tables have been drawn up renders them little available for presentation in a newspaper article, and makes the task of recasting them into more convenient shape one involving much tedious labor.

During the 11 years covered by the report, the City has greatly increased its area by the annexation of the Westchester district. This added to it a large territory which seemed to offer special inducements to the operations of the speculative builder; nevertheless, there has been comparatively little building done in the two new wards since they came in. During the same period the community has experienced the two extremes of commercial activity and distension; and the building trade seems to have felt the effects of both with great force, but not at the times one might expect. It will be surmised, perhaps, that certain political elements were not without their effect in producing some of the results exhibited by this report. Taking first the general results, it appears that during the past 11 years, plans were filed in the department, for proposed new buildings, as follows:

Total number of proposed new buildings	19,811
Total estimated cost of same	$284,328,495
From which we find—
Average number of buildings erected each year	1,801
Average cost of these	$25,848,045
Average cost of each building (above)	14,350

Estimates are commonly under the real mark, and it will be entirely safe to assume that fully $26,000,000 a year are spent for building and rebuilding in this City. The expenditure of so large a sum implies the employment of quite an army of workmen in many trades, for the erection and furnishing of a house calls for the services of iron-workers, masons, bricklayers, carpenters, painters, plumbers, plasterers, upholsterers, and cabinet-makers; or, indirectly for the aid and assistance of the many more trades dependent upon these. The figures given above include structures of all discriptions, from the vast and costly "office building" in the lower part of the City, the magnificent church or public library near the Park, to the little one-story frame building, barn, or stable in the most remote part of the Twenty-third Ward. Unfortunately, the returns do not distinguish between new buildings which are actual additions to the previous aggregate, and those which replace older structures torn down to make room for them. It may be regarded as certain, however, that all new buildings erected in the Nineteenth, Twelfth, and Twenty-second Wards, and the annexed districts, are erected on ground previously unoccupied; and that all erected below Twenty-third-street are replacements. This building done in the up-town wards will therefore represent the actual expansion of the City; that in the lower its improvement. But this will be better seen when we come to deal with localities.

Taking next the general aggregate of the particular descriptions of buildings erected during the past 11 years, with their estimated cost, the results are shown as in the annexed table. Under the general term "dwellings" are included first and second class, French flat, and tenement houses; under "stores," first, second, and third class, and office buildings. The "frame buildings" include every structure built of wood. They were not classified as such until the new wards were annexed. They are all in the most northerly part of the City. The abastion on the rocks are described under this title:

NUMBER, DESCRIPTION, AND ESTIMATED COST OF THE BUILDINGS ERECTED IN THIS CITY FOR 11 YEARS PAST, AND IN THE ANNEXED DISTRICT FOR FIVE YEARS.

Buildings.	Number.	Estimated Cost.
Dwellings	15,417	$199,606,030
Stores and office buildings	1,174	38,446,710
Factories and workshops	1,100	11,441,917
Churches	107	5,755,609
Hotels and boarding-houses	26	6,336,500
School-houses	90	3,993,972
Public buildings	160	12,789,750
Frame buildings	397	1,473,555
Stables	1,070	3,833,463

From the above it will be seen that the cost of the dwellings is about 70 per cent. of the whole amount, the stores and office buildings 13 per cent., and that we have spent more for the erection of public buildings than for manufactories and work-shops. A curious fact is that the expenditures of the whole 11 years for churches and for stables is nearly the same, each being about 2 per cent. of the aggregate sum. For schools are only 7-10 per cent.

Perhaps the most interesting feature for the whole period to the progress made year by year, some very interesting and suggestive facts appear. It will be remembered that the great collapse of the era of inflation and speculation occurred in September, 1873, and it might therefore be expected it would be in that or the next year that the heavy falling off in the building business would be found to have occurred. But this is not the case. The figures given below show that there was an increase year by year up to 1873, in which year the highest point was reached, with the exception of 1868, 1869, and being nearly 900 above the general average for the whole period. The next year (1872) the number drops down suddenly to 1,728, and to 1,311 for 1873. It will also be found that though this low number of buildings erected in 1873 was the least in the 11 years, their average cost was the highest. This appears to be accounted for by the fact that in that year 17 dwellings were erected at an average for each of $78,784, which is over $25,000 above the general average. Why there should have been such a sudden collapse in 1872 may possibly be seen in the figures given in another table, from which it appears that the house-building for the preceding year and the two before it had been carried to an enormous figure. It is well known, the jobbing operations of the Tweed Ring in up-town improvements greatly stimulated building in that section. The collapse of that unique institution doubtless had a discouraging effect upon the speculative builder. The number of dwellings, the average cost of the buildings erected, as shown by the annexed table, indicates, it may be assumed, not only the fall in the price of material and labor, but the adoption of a cheaper and less ornate style of building than was the fashion in the flush times of inflation:

NUMBER OF BUILDINGS ERECTED AND AVERAGE ESTIMATED COST OF EACH FOR THE PAST 11 YEARS.

Year.	Number Built.	Estimated Cost.
1868	2,014	$17,100
1869	2,849	17,100
1870	2,361	14,700
1871	2,782	15,300
1872	1,728	16,100
1873	1,311	19,700
1874	1,868	13,000
1875	1,406	11,900
1876	1,379	11,500
1877	1,452	9,300
1878	1,679	9,700

The Building Department makes the classification of structures which appears in the table below. In this table is given the average number of structures of each classification, with the average cost of each, erected during the past 11 years. First in the order of cost, as will be noted, and last in number, come the hotels, two of which were erected every year, at a cost of nearly a quarter of a million each. It will easily be seen that the hotels here referred to are not of that class which the casual observer might mistake for a dingy lager-beer saloon, were he not informed by a tin sign, of obviously recent manufacture, that it is a "hotel." Next for cost come the "office buildings," which include such structures as the Western Union, Equitable, and other like buildings, but also every $300 coal and wood office, which cuts down the average. The great difference in appearance in the street view of first and second class dwellings is partially explained by the fact that any building intended for habitation which costs less than $5,000 to erect must be so classed, and this has the effect of greatly raising the average. It is a very rude classification. Dwellings should be divided into at least five classes, and even then it will scarcely show the whole. In the three classes of stores assumed used, it appears that the favorites in the first class, there being more of these built every year than of any and $15,000 combined. Although the average cost of each of these five times the combined cost of a second and third class store. Public buildings, such as museums, libraries, and places of public amusement, are usually costly affairs, but the general average is brought down by the classification under this heading of engine-houses and cheaper structures:

AVERAGE NUMBER OF THE SEVERAL CLASSES OF DWELLINGS BUILT EVERY YEAR, WITH AVERAGE ESTIMATED COST OF EACH BUILDING.

Description of Building.	Average Number Built Every Year.	Average Cost of Each.
First-class dwellings	570	$16,000
Second-class dwellings	174	8,700
Tenements	640	12,000
French flats	44	18,800
Hotels	2 4-11	232,900
First-class stores	55	46,500
Second-class stores	16	5,600
Third-class stores	28	1,800
Office buildings	6 3-11	124,100
Manufactories and workshops	100	10,400
School-houses	8 5-11	44,900
Public buildings	14 6-11	79,900
Churches	9 8-11	53,700
Stables	97	4,900
Frame buildings (since 1873)	36	8,600

The time and cents are omitted.

FIRST-CLASS RESIDENCES AND TENEMENT-HOUSES.

It would appear that when the investor in real estate considers how best to lay out his money, the question he asks himself is whether he shall put up a first-class dwelling or a tenement-house. Second-class dwellings, intended for one or two families, have not been considered paying investments in a city where ground is so costly as it is in New-York. It is said that they are now coming into vogue, probably through the effects of rapid transit, but the statistics show they have in the past been quite as much out of favor with builders as second-class stores. For individual comfort a first-class residence, for profit a tenement-house, would seem to be the rule, and we have seen by a former table that the average cost of the two classes of structures only differs by one-fourth, the best residences averaging $16,000 each, and the tenements $12,000. Furthermore, it will be observed that the number of these buildings approximates pretty closely on the average for the 11 years, while the second-class dwellings erected during the same period are far behind; thus: tenements, 7,041; first-class dwellings, 6,271; second class, 1,920. It must not be forgotten that in the estimate of the cost of all the buildings, the cost of the lot is excluded. Of course, a vast number of houses classified as first class are structures intended for people of comparatively moderate means, in that we use the word in the subjoined table, pressed with so violent a contrast of the very rich and the very poor, as at first sight might be imagined. Yet this small number of cheap and compact houses, which a family in moderate circumstances could afford to rent, speaks volumes for the conditions of living in this City. Even in the nineteen hundred or so of these small dwellings, which are all the 11 years can show, every family is reckoned, while as late as 1875, when for the first time these were put into the classification of frame buildings.

In that year the last State census was taken, and from the returns framed for opponent there were in the Twelfth Ward 4,145 of these "dwellings," in the Twenty-second Ward, 1,892; in the annexed district, 3,668. Of dwellings of all descriptions in the whole City there were 67,126, at an aggregate valuation which was one half the aggregate value of all the dwellings in the State, although the City's proportion in numbers was only about one-eleventh of the whole. The average value of the dwellings was estimated at $1,196 each, including the lot. Turning to the returns of the number of persons to an inhabited house, we find that in this Twelfth Ward, so abounding in frame buildings, it was only 9.65, while in the Eighth, Ninth, and Tenth Wards, in the lower part of the City, those respectively (omitting fractions) 20, 25, and 26. For the City altogether the proportion is 15.90. For the City of Brooklyn it is 8.54. From these figures it will be seen that, taking New-York City as a whole, the dwellings of its inhabitants may be fairly divided into two great classes, first-class residences and tenement-houses, and the subjoined table gives their average cost in the aggregate, with their estimated cost (tens and units omitted) for the 11 years named:

TABLE SHOWING THE NUMBER OF FIRST-CLASS DWELLINGS AND OF TENEMENT-HOUSES ERECTED EVERY YEAR, WITH THE AVERAGE ESTIMATED COST OF EACH.

In connection with the topic of dwellings, the sudden increase of French-flat houses deserves to be mentioned. The tables show that from 1868 to 1874, inclusive, plans were filed for only 44 houses of this description, and the cost of each was estimated at $150,000. In 1875 a sort of French-flat mania seems to have broken out, and the number filed then and since has been as follows: 1875, 113; 1876, 115; 1877, 157; 1878, 99. The cost, however, of these houses was vastly reduced from that of the two former, the average for each house during the five years named ranging from $234,000 to $13,000. The falling off last year probably results from a sufficient experience on the part of housekeepers that the French flats are not the perfections of comfort, convenience, and economy they were at first rumored to be. As to the reduction of their average cost, this comes from the custom, which seems to have grown up, of calling buildings French flats which are, in fact, nothing but tenement-houses, containing from four to six families, and being the average tenement-house, and being erected in localities where the usual tenement-house population abounds.

A few words on the cost of church-building may have interest. We have built or rebuilt churches at the rate of nearly 10 a year, and the average cost of each has ranged from $126,466, at which rate six were built in 1876, to $53,400, at which rate seventeen five were built last year. The greatest aggregate amount spent in this way in any one of the 11 years was in 1873, when $1,396,000 was spent in erecting 17 churches. The smallest amount expended was during the year 1868, $27,000 only.

RATIOS.

The following ratios have been computed from the tables. They show the proportions which the numbers of the several classes of structures erected every year bear to each other. Under "dwellings," houses of all descriptions are included, under "tenement buildings" stores of the three classes, offices, factories, and workshops:

School-houses	1.00	Business buil'gs.	37.99
Churches	1.78	Dwellings	288.56

	Dwell-ings.	Tene-ments.
First-class dwellings to tenements	11	10
	First Class.	Second Class.
First-class dwellings to second-class dwellings	320	100
	First Class.	Second Class.
First-class stores to second and third class	330	100

	First Class.	Second Class.	Third Class.
First-class dwellings to second-class	320	100	170

The growth and improvement of localities will be shown in a subsequent article from the returns by wards.

THE GENEVA AWARD BILL.

WHAT THE HOUSE HAS DECIDED TO DO WITH THE MONEY.

A DEBATE IN WHICH MESSRS. HALE, M'MAHON, BUTLER, AND KNOTT TOOK PART—FRYE'S AMENDMENT AND THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE'S MINORITY SUBSTITUTE ADOPTED, AND THE BILL PASSED.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—The House resumed, as the regular order of business, the consideration of the Geneva Award bill.

Mr. Hale, of Maine, said the majority bill was for the benefit of the insurance companies, and no one else. Congress after Congress had declared that the insurance companies had no claim either in equity or law, and yet they had come again and again with their arguments and speeches, (even dogging members in their seats,) and would not be put down, hoping to weary Congress and get their claim through.

Mr. McMahon, of Ohio, supported the minority report. The error in the majority report was in supposing that national claims had been excluded by the tribunal and nothing passed upon but a bundle of private claims. On the contrary, the claims passed upon had been national claims. When private claims had been presented to the tribunal they had been presented as witnesses to show the extent of the damages sustained by the Government. The fundamental principle of the minority bill was that no indemnity should be paid to any one who was not an actual loser.

At the close of Mr. McMahon's speech the previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered, the understanding being that Mr. Butler, of Massachusetts, should be allowed 15 minutes, and that Mr. Knott, of Kentucky, should have as much time as he desired before the vote should be taken.

Mr. Butler, of Massachusetts, made a speech against the claim of the insurance companies, and in favor of that of the war premium men. He reviewed the history of the Johnson-Clarendon treaty and of the treaty of Washington, and said that it was agreed that national claims only should be submitted. When the matter, he said was in full before the tribunal, it was whispered around that one of the counsel of the United States was the retained counsel of the insurance companies. Whether that rumor was right or wrong it is not necessary to consider, but the effect of it was to bring from the State Department a peremptory order to its counsel and agents not to allow the Geneva tribunal to make any disposition whatever in relation to the classes of claims that should be paid. The tribunal awarded a sum in block which covered everything. "That money, in my judgment, belonged to the United States, without any trust, any legal duty, or any claim on the part of any one whatever. Such was my proposition in regard to it is to pay the money into the Treasury. I do not believe there is a Southern gentleman on this floor who will vote for that. The other proposition is to give it to somebody, I don't know who. It is as indefinite as it is proposed to give it to the insurance companies, or to give them some right to go into the court and set up what they call a claim of subrogation. They have no legal right to it now. They made $4,000,000 more! Now, who are the war premium men? They are the class of men who paid premiums, and who have got no redress for their property that they were obliged to pay 10 per cent. insurance to get their ships across the water."

Mr. Knott, of Kentucky, closed the debate. His position was one of absolute impartiality. He contrasted the bill of the minority with the bill of the majority, the former being a mere act of grace, the latter an act of claim-handed justice. He did not stand as the advocate of any one class of claimants, but as the humble attorney of parties. Even insurance companies might be the bloodless, soulless monsters they were represented; still they were composed of citizens of the United States and looked to the Government of the country to which they might petition, and the Government that refused justice to its humblest citizen was a despot to its despised.

Mr. House, of Tennessee, moved to lay the bill and amendments on the table. Rejected—43 in the affirmative; the negative not counted.

The next vote was taken on Mr. Frye's amendment to the majority bill, and it was agreed to on a standing vote—yeas 135, nays 50.

It provides that no claim by or in behalf of any insurance company shall be admitted or allowed by the Court of Claims unless such claimant shall show, to the satisfaction of the court, that during the late rebellion the sum of its losses in respect to its war risks exceeded the sum of its premiums or gains, and then the allowance shall not be greater than such excess. No claim is to be admissible in favor of any insurance company that was not lawfully existing at the time of the loss, under the law of some one of the United States.

Mr. Cannon, of Illinois, moved to lay the bill on the table. Defeated—yeas 96, nays 121.

The question was then taken on the substitute reported by the minority of the Judiciary Committee, and it was adopted on a standing vote—112 to 73.

It revives and continues the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims, fixes the number of Judges as three, requires the court to convene and organize as soon as practicable in Washington, and limits its existence to 18 months. The first class of claims is to be those described in section 1 of the former act, and claims for damages directly done by Confederate cruisers on the high seas, although within four miles of shore. The classes of claims to 10 per cent. additional is to be allowed in lieu of freight, and the same allowance is to be made (with 6 per cent. interest) on judgments heretofore rendered in favor of whaling vessels. The second class of claims is to be for 2 per cent. additional interest on former judgments. On all judgments heretofore rendered the interest allowed is to be 6 per cent. The third class of claims is to be for the payment of premiums for war risks, deductions to be made of any sums which have been paid back in diminution of such premiums, and also to pay 3 per cent. additional interest on all judgments heretofore made. Judgments rendered in the first class are to be paid pro rata, and then judgments in the second class, and if the money be not sufficient to pay all the judgments of the second class, they are to be paid pro rata, and the like rule is also to apply to judgments in the third class. No foreign person is to be paid, and if sailing vessels that may remain shall be a fund from which Congress may hereafter authorize the payment of other claims thereon.

This is the minority substitute as reported by Messrs. McMahon, Frye, Butler, Conger, and Lapham.

The bill as thus amended was then passed—Yeas 113, nays 93.

Mr. Smith, of Pennsylvania, reported back (from the Appropriations Committee) the Senate amendments to the Pension Appropriation bill, and they were concurred in.

The House then, at 5:30, adjourned.

SCARLET FEVER AND DIPHTHERIA:

DECREASE IN THE NUMBER OF NEW CASES DURING THE PAST WEEK.

The reports to the Sanitary Bureau during the past week show a marked decrease in the number of cases of scarlet fever and diphtheria, and also an increase in the deaths from the first-named disease. The following are the figures for the past week:

SCARLET FEVER.

	Cases.	Deaths.
Sunday, Jan. 12	6	6
Monday, Jan. 13	50	15
Tuesday, Jan. 14	27	12
Wednesday, Jan. 15	37	17
Thursday, Jan. 16	20	10
Friday, Jan. 17	24	7
Saturday, Jan. 18	15	7
Total	193	68

During the preceding week the cases numbered 274 and the deaths 54. The increase in the number of deaths is accounted for by the fact that a number of the cases reported during the preceding week reached the crisis of the disease during the past week and resulted fatally. It is believed that the disease reached its highest point during the week ending 11th inst. and the officials of the Health Department predict a gradual decrease for the future.

During the past week the cases of diphtheria and deaths from that disease were as follows:

DIPHTHERIA.

	Cases.	Deaths.
Sunday, Jan. 12	1	1
Monday, Jan. 13	14	1
Tuesday, Jan. 14	10	2
Wednesday, Jan. 15	4	2
Thursday, Jan. 16	10	1
Friday, Jan. 17	4	3
Saturday, Jan. 18	8	3
Total	51	23

The figures for the preceding week were 65 cases and 22 deaths.

THE EMPIRE MUTUAL LIFE.

The Empire Mutual Life Insurance Company, of which Mr. John F. O'Neill, of this City, has been recently appointed Receiver, was organized April 3, 1869, under the general laws of the State of New-York regulating insurance corporations, $100,000 being deposited with the Superintendent of the Insurance Department, in pursuance of such laws, as security for policies. The company continued in business until June, 1872, when it reinsured its outstanding risks with the late Continental Life Insurance Company, of which Mr. O'Neill was appointed Receiver in May, 1877. At the time of the reinsurance the Empire had outstanding about 6,300 policies, covering $12,500,000 insurance. These policies were lapsed or surrendered to the Continental, with the exception of about 630, covering about $850,000 insurance, which are still outstanding. The amount of the company's deposit with the Superintendent of Insurance is still in his hands, and with the accumulations thereon will, it is believed, nearly extinguish all policy claims. The Superintendent of Insurance will, it is understood, make the distribution to policyholders on a pro rata valuation of their policies at 4½ per cent., and the surplus, if any, will be paid over to Mr. O'Neill, the Receiver. All owners of the Empire Mutual policies should file their policies and last premium receipts as early as possible with Receiver O'Neill, at No. 20 Nassau-street, as proof of their claim. It is supposed that a dividend will be paid within six months.

JOHN N. STEARNS' DENIAL.

HIS REPLY TO THE CHARGES WHICH WERE MADE AGAINST HIM.

Mr. John N. Stearns, the Superintendent of the Greenpoint Presbyterian Sunday-school, against whose charges of immorality were recently made, has written a card in which he denies the charges, as follows:

"I absolutely deny that I have ever had any criminal relations with any woman, and believe the young lady named in connection with this matter—a girl without brother or father—to be as pure and virtuous as my own daughter. The accusations which have been made against her character are brutal and infamous. These accusations I never heard of until the 25th of November last, when I put in an absolute denial, and ordered the fullest investigation. I had determined six months before that to sever all connection with the church at the close of the year. These accusations had nothing to do with this decision. I determined to leave the church because I could not work in harmony with leading officials and members, and also because my health was so utterly broken that I feared that to continue would be to carry me into the grave. Another strong reason was that I could not feed the bills of the church and have no hearty co-operation in raising money. I resigned as Trustee and Treasurer in April, 1878. The church was then owing me over $2,500, besides $3,000 mortgage on property which I had been obliged to assume. Some two months after, at the written request of the Pastor and the urgent solicitations of D. A. Munson and G. P. Wilson, Jr., reluctantly consented to serve again. Upon re-election I raised $1,400 for interest and bills then overdue, on their solemn promise that in the early Fall they would help raise the amount. I borrowed a portion of the money and had notes discounted for the remainder and paid the bills. When Fall came, no effort was made to raise the money, and I was forced to have the notes extended. The middle of October I resigned again as Treasurer, and submitted a financial exhibit showing over $3,300 floating debt, money advanced by me, with the statement that I was unable to advance more money, though I did advance afterward $300 more before my resignation was accepted. There is now due me over $3,600, of this amount $600 is in notes discounted at the bank, for which I am responsible, and which fall due this month. The agreement, which has been published without my knowledge or consent, I signed because I believed they would keep every thing out of the papers, for the threat was made to publish it if I did not sign it. By inserting the word 'alleged' before the words 'criminal relations' and speaking to Talbot my moral character, I understood them to confess that the charges were not proved. The night I signed it I was unable either to sit up or fully comprehend the nature of the document which they had drawn up, and, lying there in my weak and weakness of body, my wife, who knows the infamy of this whole business, and who has watched over me so faithfully and devotedly in all my sickness, took the knife from my hand, and refused to allow me to sign it, believing that only in absolute rest could my life be saved. I had been in Florida less than a week, most of the time spent in bed, and had hardly begun to rest when, unmanned by my long sickness, I left for this city on New-York Thursday, Jan. 10, I that day demanded both of the session and the National Temperance Society an immediate investigation."

BUTTER FOR EXPORT.

A COMPARISON BETWEEN AMERICAN AND CERTAIN FOREIGN BUTTERS.

The following correspondence sufficiently explains itself:

I.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
WASHINGTON, Jan. 10, 1879.

Mr. J. B. Thompson, No. 54 Broad-street, New-York City:

SIR: In reply to yours of the 5th ult., transmitting samples of French, Danish, and Swiss butter for analysis, I inclose herewith the report of the chemist of the department, to whom the matter was referred. Very respectfully,

WILLIAM G. LE DUC, Commissioner.

II.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 7, 1879.

Hon. William G. Le Duc, Commissioner:

SIR: I have the honor to report the following results of analyses of the samples of French, Swiss, and Danish butters received from J. B. Thompson, of New-York. For sake of comparison, analyses were made of a specimen of Iowa butter of second quality, of New-York dairy butter of first quality, and of oleomargarine. The French, Swiss, and Danish butters, when received, were rancid, and would hardly count as third-rate butters in our market. The composition of each will be seen in the following table:

Name of sample.	Fats.	Caseine.	Salt.	Water.	Sugar.	Total.
Iowa, 2d quality	86.08	1.82	2.76	9.05	.13	99.85
New-York dairy	83.92	2.33	4.10	7.66	1.82	99.73
Danish	87.24	1.46	2.77	7.57	.12	99.94
French	87.36	.86	4.74	6.20	.19	99.84
Swiss	87.73	1.91	2.50	6.35	.85	99.14
Oleomargarine	84.92	1.19	6.65	5.89	.90	99.55

In the above analyses the presence of 1.82 per cent of sugar in the New-York dairy indicates beyond doubt the addition of saccharine matter to the butter, a practice not uncommon, and which has been imitated by some of the oleomargarine makers. The small quantity present in the other samples is probably due to the presence of decomposable cheese in the butters, which products deported themselves in a manner similar to sugar in their effect upon reagents employed in analysis. In the above analyses there is nothing which, to my mind, would indicate one sample as possessing greater keeping qualities than another, while, as a matter of fact, as already stated, neither of the three foreign butters had kept well. In animal fats the fatty acids form from 93.5 to 96 per cent., while in the Iowa butter the fatty acids average from 85.5 to 87.5 per cent. of the butter fat, and never exceed 88.6 per cent. In the sample of oleomargarine the fatty acids reported as 95.08 per cent. were separated and beten out at Holyoke on the Connecticut River, but it was of small account when compared with the sight of that pretty stream. I thought when I lay down to drink I would fill my mouth with water and just spit it out, but I could not, it went down too quick, so I took a dozen great gulps before I was through. Then I made the woods just ring with my laughter. I was in a good humor, and must have kept up drinking for about an hour.

After that I started on, and had not gone far before I killed a yearling buck. I cut off as large a piece as I thought would last me to eat while I was in the woods. It was a big chunk of venison—you may be sure of that. Soon it was night again. I built me another fire, turned in, had a good sleep, with nothing to disturb me. Next day I traveled until 3 o'clock, when I heard the sound of an axe. I followed up that sound, and found a man cutting wood to burn and make ashes. The man told me I was five miles from the road. He started me right, and I found it at last. It was night then, and raining. I rolled myself in my bear-skin, and went to sleep. About 3 o'clock in the morning I was awakened by wagons coming along, and so it turned out. I did not see anybody in the wagon guiding the horses, so I stopped the team, and, as it was going my way, I got in. To my surprise, in the bottom of the wagon lay a big man, sound asleep. The large man was full of some kind of liquor, and, as he was liable to sleep some time, I took the lines and kept the horses going. I had as much as 16 miles to go yet. Now, thought I, if I can get to my journey's end before that drunken man wakes, it would be ever so much of a help to me. If he wakes, may be he will tell me he isn't going that far, and I may be left to find my way as I can. So I kept pretty quiet, you may believe that, pushing the horses all the time. It was daylight after awhile, and I arrived at Port Huron before my sleeping friend awoke. I was getting out of the wagon as prudently as I could when the man awoke, and, as he said he wanted to go to Port Haven, it turned out all right after all. My two companions in Port Haven. They have no mighty uneasy about me, and said they were preparing to go back and have a look for me. They didn't go. SETH GREEN.

ROCHESTER, Saturday, Jan. 11, 1879.

LOCAL BUSINESS TROUBLES.

An assignment for the benefit of creditors was filed yesterday in the County Clerk's office, from Abraham W. Godfrey, of the firm of E. Godfrey & Sons, to Edward S. Andrews. The preferred debts amount to $3,037 63.

A schedule of the liabilities and assets of Marcus Marx, Isaac Marx, and Mayer Marx, composing the firm of Marx Brothers, assignors to Martin Lippmann, was filed in the Court of Common Pleas yesterday. The liabilities are $37,411 82; nominal assets, $73,318 59; and the real assets, $19,549 92. The schedule of Sarah May, assignor to Joseph Schwarzschild, was also filed in the same court. It shows liabilities amounting to $22,043 64; nominal assets, $20,027 58, and real assets, $3,077 70.

A COUPLE OF MAMMOTH ICICLES.

Two enormous icicles, weighing 300 or 400 pounds each, were formed on the roof of the Post Office by the freezing of the condensed vapor from the steam-escape nozzles. These masses hung from the inner walls over the rotunda, and about 70 feet above the glass-roof of that portion of the building. Yesterday morning, as the weather became mild, fears were entertained that they might fall. Capt. McAfee, Assistant Custodian, took a squad of men to the roof, slipped nooses of rope over the icicles, and broke them off, and, lifting them to the top of the dome, had them chopped to pieces and thrown to the street.

THE WEATHER FOR THE WEEK.

The following is an abstract of the report of the Central Park Meteorological Observatory for the week ending at 1 P. M. yesterday: Barometer—Mean, 30.005 inches; maximum, at 9 A. M., Jan. 17, 30.337 inches; minimum, at 1 P. M., Jan. 16, 29.689 inches; range, .768 inch. Thermometer—Mean, 29.97; maximum, at 2 P. M., Jan. 14, 57°; minimum, at 12 P. M., Jan. 15, 18°; distance travelled by the wind during the week, 853 miles. Remarks.—Jan. 15, snow from 10 P. M. to 12 P. M.; amount of water, 0.7 inch; Jan. 16, snow from 0 A. M. to 3:30 P. M.; amount of water, 1.05 inches; Jan. 18, snow from 5 A. M. to 7 A. M.; amount of water, .01 inch; total amount of water for week, 1.13 inches; depth of snow, 13½ inches.

SETH GREEN'S FIRST HUNT.

IN THE CANADA WILDS FORTY YEARS AGO.

KILLING A BEAR—THE CONVENIENCE OF HAVING A TREE HANDY—THE PACK OF WOLVES—HOW THEY CIRCLED AROUND THE HUNTER—LOST IN THE WOODS—PARCHED WITH THIRST—FINDING WATER—HOW SETH RODE HOME.

I have got a creek that has no fish in it. It is a crick in my back. As I am confined to my house, for want of something better to do I will try and give you an account of my first hunt for large game. During the Summer of 1837 I was fishing for salmon trout at Port Hope, Canada. In September two friends of mine, Marsh and Howe, proposed that I should go back with them some 20 miles from the clearing, to their shanty. The trail was mostly a blind one, marked here and there by blazed trees. After a long tramp we reached the shanty, and went to sleep by a roaring fire. Next morning we had a good breakfast of rabbits and partridges we had killed on the trip. Breakfast over, we made our plans for the hunt, and it was agreed that we should try and drive the game toward one another. We started then, traveling due west, with an interval of some 20 rods between us. I had not gone far before I lost sight of my companions. It was a fine morning, the sun was bright, and I followed the shadows of the trees, and supposed I was going due west. I did not know I was on the wrong track until I had gone many miles to the north of my comrades. If I had not met with some game, following the shadows perhaps as I had been doing, I might have come back in the neighborhood of where I started from. There was some game, however. At about 11 o'clock I saw a large black bear looking right at me. I threw my eyes up a small tree that stood near, and thought if I missed the bear, and he came for me, I would make tracks up that little tree. I had been taught to believe that a bear could not climb a tree, but I never was more misinformed in my life, for they can claw up a tree that isn't more than three inches through. I ran my eye along that tree and along my rifle-barrel, and pulled the trigger. The bear fell. I loaded up again right quick, took another look up that tree, and then went, cautious-like, toward the bear. Now, between me and the beast there were quite a number of small trees, but I kept my eyes on them all the time. Presently I got near the bear, and dead for sure he was. He had fallen between two small logs, and I had a hard time to pull him out, as he weighed fully 300 pounds. When I went to look at him, I found my bullet had gone square between his eyes, and that I must have killed him stone dead. The arrangement with my companions was, that if any of us killed any large game, we were to fire, as a signal three shots as quickly as we could load. I blazed away, but no answer came. The reason was that I was many miles to the north of my position, as I made it out just then, was pretty much as follows: Here was a boy of 19 years old, 30 miles from any house, with 300 pounds of bear on his hands, and only a jack-knife to cut him up with. I managed, however, took the hide and one of the hams, and started for the blaze-line we had gone out by. My load was dreadfully heavy, so I had to rest most every 30 rods. I kept on through, and thought I was going far enough to notice the blaze. But there was no sign of a blaze. "May be," I thought, "I have gone past it!" So I turned back to look for it, but with no better luck. Then I just made up my mind that I would go straight on course, and I did. I walked until it was most night, when I looked around for camping ground, I came across a big log which would make a first-class back fire. It was a pine-tree, full of dry knots which stuck out so that I could use them like rounds on a ladder and shin up the tree in case wolves were prowling around, for wolves were plenty in those days. I built a back fire, and broiled some bear's meat, and had a prime supper. I lay me down, and was soon fast asleep. How long I slept I don't know, but it must have been some time, as my fire was out when I awoke. I was not the kind of chilled with the cold, and set about raking in the ashes to get a brand to start a fire again, but before I had a blaze I heard some kind of an animal nigh me. This made me so uneasy that I guess I forgot that I was hungry, but left the meat and kept the other hand on the limb of the tree. Just then the animals began to snort and stamp their feet, and I knew that they were deer and that I need not be afraid of wolves coming along. They never might uneasy about me, and said they were preparing to go back and have a look for me. They didn't go. SETH GREEN.

LOCAL BUSINESS TROUBLES.

An assignment for the benefit of creditors was filed yesterday in the County Clerk's office, from Abraham W. Godfrey, of the firm of E. Godfrey & Sons, to Edward S. Andrews. The preferred debts amount to $3,037 63.

A schedule of the liabilities and assets of Marcus Marx, Isaac Marx, and Mayer Marx, composing the firm of Marx Brothers, assignors to Martin Lippmann, was filed in the Court of Common Pleas yesterday. The liabilities are $37,411 82; nominal assets, $73,318 59; and the real assets, $19,549 92. The schedule of Sarah May, assignor to Joseph Schwarzschild, was also filed in the same court. It shows liabilities amounting to $22,043 64; nominal assets, $20,027 58, and real assets, $3,077 70.

A COUPLE OF MAMMOTH ICICLES.

Two enormous icicles, weighing 300 or 400 pounds each, were formed on the roof of the Post Office by the freezing of the condensed vapor from the steam-escape nozzles. These masses hung from the inner walls over the rotunda, and about 70 feet above the glass-roof of that portion of the building. Yesterday morning, as the weather became mild, fears were entertained that they might fall. Capt. McAfee, Assistant Custodian, took a squad of men to the roof, slipped nooses of rope over the icicles, and broke them off, and, lifting them to the top of the dome, had them chopped to pieces and thrown to the street.

THE WEATHER FOR THE WEEK.

The following is an abstract of the report of the Central Park Meteorological Observatory for the week ending at 1 P. M. yesterday: Barometer—Mean, 30.005 inches; maximum, at 9 A. M., Jan. 17, 30.337 inches; minimum, at 1 P. M., Jan. 16, 29.689 inches; range, .768 inch. Thermometer—Mean, 29.97; maximum, at 2 P. M., Jan. 14, 57°; minimum, at 12 P. M., Jan. 15, 18°; distance travelled by the wind during the week, 853 miles. Remarks.—Jan. 15, snow from 10 P. M. to 12 P. M.; amount of water, 0.7 inch; Jan. 16, snow from 0 A. M. to 3:30 P. M.; amount

SHALL WE HAVE A PENSION LIST?

The Pension bill, almost the sole product of a week's labor in the House, should be sufficiently wasteful to satisfy the worst demands of the Congressional system. Everybody knows that it is a job, which certain elements in both parties agree to perpetrate for purposes unworthy of examination. And its adoption by a House controlled by the Democrats is rendered more characteristic by the failure to provide the twenty millions or more which the Government will be required to expend. A body that is not ashamed to facilitate the squandering of a vast sum, under the pretense of pensioning soldiers or their dependents, ought not to be afraid of voting the requisite money. But this is not the Democratic method of doing business. It is easy to cut down estimates one year by postponing appropriations until the next; and it is convenient to seem liberal in the matter of a Pension bill if the outlay it involves can be kept out of sight. How the Government will provide the money is of less moment to the supporters of the bill than the applause which in certain quarters may be elicited by the passage of the measure.

But the bill, scandalous as it is, does not open the Treasury doors quite wide enough to satisfy everybody. It is brought down to the level of the vulgar, and there are persons of a higher grade who imagine that they should be specially cared for on a scale suited to their antecedents and tastes. They are anxious to be made pensioners upon Uncle Sam's bounty in a manner that shall not derogate from their dignity. We acquit Gen. Shields, for whom provision was made last session, of this sort of nonsense. It is strange, nevertheless, that a plain and gallant soldier, who has had fine opportunities in three States, should not be content with the rewards they have bestowed upon him, or with his position on the nation's pension roll. Other men, being poor, do the best they can for themselves. In Gen. Shields' case, poverty became a pretext for conferring an honorary distinction as a means of securing him a more comfortable maintenance at the public cost. As the Democrats are responsible for the device, which Republicans helped them to execute, neither party can make capital out of it. The fact remains, however, that under the guise of a charitable act for the benefit of an old soldier, an evil tendency in our politics was materially strengthened.

For if Congress may allow personal considerations to assert themselves in the form of special additions to the pension list, where is the thing to end? Last session, Shields was put on the retired list, with a snug monthly provision; this session Averell is an applicant for a similar favor. In the Senate, a few days ago, a bill introduced by Gen. Burnside was read twice and referred, authorizing the retirement of Brevet Major-Gen. W. W. Averell, with the rank of Brigadier-General. The object, of course, is to relieve Averell of anxiety as to his living for the remainder of his days. There is no pretense of peculiar claims in his case. He left the Army years ago, and at a more recent date held the United States Consulate at Montreal. What reverses have overtaken him we do not know; but it is plain that the mere fact of a man's needing the pay of a retired Brigadier-General is not a sufficient reason for granting it. This, however, is the only plea on which the Rhode Island Senator can rely. Gen. Averell wants a pension, and therefore he should be pensioned. It is not a secret that there are many similar cases awaiting the success of Gen. Burnside's bill. Gen. Averell's title is as good, in equity, as Gen. Shields', and there are scores of hard-up heroes whose claims to participation in the nation's bounty are as legitimate as theirs.

It is time, then, that a definite understanding should be had upon this subject of pensioning men by special acts of Congress, and upon the subject of pensions generally. We are drifting unconsciously toward a practice hitherto condemned, while discarding the general principle which in other countries makes the practice defensible; England proceeds on the hypothesis that they who give to its public service their best days are entitled to public provision when their capacity for service ends. Soldier and civilian fare alike. There is half-pay or a retired allowance for one, a superannuation allowance for the other. In addition, there are pensions conferred upon occupants of certain high offices or upon individuals who perform exceptional public service. The American system knows few of these features. It provides for the soldier who remains in its service until he be disqualified by age or infirmity; and, subject to limitations, it does the same for Judges of the Supreme Court. But as regards the civil service it knows nothing of pensions, and it recognizes no claim on the part of persons who were once in its Army, save that which arises under general laws. The Shields case was an innovation which the Averell case is intended to enlarge. Some general rule is therefore desirable. Shall Congress go on granting pensions, without rhyme or reason, as capricious majorities may dictate, or shall a stop be put to the practice before it goes further?

Mr. Halstead's method of laying the third-term ghost illustrates the looseness that prevails in this connection. He would create the office of Field-Marshal, with a salary of $50,000, for the benefit of Gen. Grant, in order that he may be put upon the retired list with $25,000 a year for life. If the Republic must provide for its Shieldses and its Averells, why not for its Grants? If it may lawfully care for men who have had ample opportunities for caring for themselves, why may it not deal munificently with every candidate for office who stands in the way of somebody else? The questions carry their own answers. Several retired Presidents had the misfortune of being poor, but not one of them was pensioned. There are thousands of citizens, in old age struggling with poverty, who in other days served their country honorably, as civilians or as soldiers; but no member of either party in Congress has proposed to grant them pensions. What cannot be defended as a system ought not to be attempted for the benefit of individuals.

THE PATENT DEBATE.

In the debate on the Patent bill, the Senate has now grappled with the most difficult problem that Congress will have to solve in the revision of the Patent law. It is as important as it is difficult, and one which vitally affects that very large part of the public who are users of patented articles. The question relates to the extent of the pecuniary liability of those who are charged with infringing patents, and the amount which the owner of the patent may be entitled to recover for the wrongful use of his invention. Under the present law, this matter is left in general to the courts. This has been well enough in actions brought at law, where the plaintiff's recovery is limited to the actual damages which he has suffered and proves, and which in general are measured by the market value of his invention. But in suits in equity, the amount of the recovery is determined by a different rule. The plaintiff's claim is not restricted to the actual damages which he has sustained by the alleged infringement, but he may sue for the profits which the infringer has made by the use of the patented article, though such profits are immeasurably greater than the amount of damage or the market value of the invention. If patent causes were chiefly tried in courts of law, the complaints of the unjust operation of the law would be too few and feeble to move Congress to provide remedial legislation. But in practice, the law side of the court has been so completely abandoned for the equity that the entire patent litigation of the country may be said to arise in the latter tribunal.

Nor is it probable that Congress would now be called upon to regulate this matter if what jurists regard as the true and just doctrine of profits in equity were established in patent cases. But it is claimed that since the present statute was passed in 1870, the courts have bound themselves by a rule which is false in theory, and which must lead to hardships and injustice in practice. This rule was laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Mowry against Whitney, decided in 1871. The patentee there claimed the profits which the infringer had made by the use of the patented invention, and it was held that he was entitled to recover them. In applying the law to this case, the court stated that the profits to which the plaintiff was entitled were to be measured by the saving or the advantage which had accrued to the infringer by the use of the plaintiff's invention. This rule worked no injustice in that case, for the defendant had made a certain amount of actual profits which were due to the plaintiff's invention, and which were a fair measure of what should be paid for its unlawful use. But soon afterward this theory was carried to its logical results by the same court in the case of Meys against Conover. It was there shown that the user had split wood 75 cents a cord cheaper by the plaintiff's machine than he could have done without it; but in selling the wood he had made no profits, but, on the contrary, had lost money. The Supreme Court, applying the saving theory previously advanced in the case of Mowry, said that the defendant would have lost more if he had not used the patent wood-splitter, and held that he was bound to pay over the amount which he had saved by using it.

In many cases, as in that of Mowry, this general rule of measuring the profits claimed by the patentee will work no injustice or hardship. But it also compels the unsuccessful defendant to account for profits when his ledger shows losses, and lays the foundation for claims to immense sums of money which the patentee has not lost or the alleged infringer made. No more striking illustration of this can be found than that of the "cotton-worm" cases. A patent was taken out for a mixture of Paris green, flour, &c., prepared for killing cotton worms. As soon as the virtues of this discovery became known, hundreds of cotton-growers prepared and used the mixture without license, and thus saved vast quantities of cotton which would have been destroyed by the worms if the worms had not been killed by the mixture. Suits, it is said, have been begun for the infringement of this patent. If the saving to each planter is to be the measure of recoverable profits, the patentee may claim an amount a thousand-fold greater than he could have made by selling his mixture, and his suits may bankrupt every cotton-grower who has unlawfully used it. This case also forcibly illustrates what is claimed to be the fundamental fallacy of the present rule of recoverable profits. It has been estimated that in general the public get 90 per cent. of the advantage of every invention and the patentee not more than 10 per cent. Whereas, under the law as it now stands, the latter may claim the entire amount. Thus, in the cotton cases, it is obvious that the greater part of the saving went to the public; but, under the present rule of profits, the whole might be decreed to the patentee. The above, it is true, is an extreme case. But the immense sums often reported as profits by Masters in Chancery doubtless led the Supreme Court of the United States to say, in a very recent case, that the rule by which the courts are now fettered "has produced results calculated to suggest distrust of its universal application even in courts of equity."

The bill now before the Senate is designed to free the courts from the rule by which they have bound themselves. If it becomes a law, it will revolutionize the equitable doctrine of profits in patent cases. It completely abolishes the account of savings, and provides that no profits shall be accounted for in any case except those actually resulting from making for sale or selling the thing patented, or its product. When the invention or its product is not made for sale or sold, but the patent is unlawfully used in another way, as for instance a patent plow or reaper, or a railway switch, the amount of the recovery is to be measured by a license fee. If a license fee has already been established by a reasonable number of transactions, this is to be taken as the measure of the damage done to the patentee. In the absence of such a license fee, one is to be determined from all the evidence in the case. This proposed radical change in the law has already aroused considerable opposition in the Senate, where it has been objected to as being in the interests of wealthy corporations. On the other hand, the advocates of the measure acknowledge the practical difficulty of satisfactorily remedying the defects in the present law, but claim that the plan now proposed is, on the whole, the best solution of the problem.

NATIONAL WEALTH.

A recent work of M. Vacher, Vice-President of the Paris Statistical Society, on the wealth of France, has attracted considerable attention in Europe, as it goes to show that the French people are not only prodigiously rich, but that in spite of the enlargement in the taxes, caused by the war indemnity and the increased size of the standing Army, they are annually adding vast amounts to their acquired possessions. It is true that some of the estimates made by M. Vacher have been questioned, not only by foreign but by French economists, on the ground that his deductions are sometimes drawn with too liberal a hand; but after making reasonable allowances, the fact remains that France is perhaps the wealthiest nation in the world, her only possible rival for this position being Great Britain, and these two countries are so nearly equal in material resources, that it is hard to say which is in the ascendency. By taking the legacy and succession duties paid during a series of years, and ascertaining the proportion borne by the properties subject to these taxes to the whole number of deaths, a rough, but in the main a fair, estimate may be made of the average wealth of every citizen, and, of course, the aggregate of this would give the wealth of the country. Following out this plan, M. Vacher found that the value of real property possessed by Frenchmen was, in round numbers, $21,600,000,000, while they held personal property to the amount of $18,700,000,000, making the total wealth, as represented in money, the enormous sum of $40,300,000,000. A similar test was made not long ago by Mr. Giffen, of England, who arrived at the conclusion that the worth of real property owned by the inhabitants of the United Kingdom was $15,700,000,000, while the personal property held by them was set at $23,500,000,000, thus making a total of $39,200,000,000. This would indicate that France was the richer country, though for ordinary purposes of trade she does not seem to possess the financial resources of the British Isles.

But the method just given is only one means that has been taken of arriving at a result. The other has been to make a careful direct estimate of the worth of property of all kinds, taking as a guide local and general taxes returns, sales and leases of lands and houses, the profits of industrial pursuits, and the incomes derived from stock investments. The conclusions reached after this elaborate research may be more satisfactory to many as indicating that the property has been appraised upon a plan less subtile than a scale of averages. But the result is to increase the valuation of France about $6,000,000,000 over the sum given above, while Great Britain and Ireland gain under the same process more than $3,000,000,000. It must be said, however, by way of correction, that the French statistician includes in this last aggregate the probable worth of highways and other public improvements which find no place in the English classification.

The sums total given above are so large that even the most trained mind cannot grasp their real significance, though when it is said that either one of them represents more than what might be termed the assessable wealth of the entire world of a century ago, some faint conception may be formed of the industrial progress that has taken place during the last hundred years. And what is even more encouraging, the movement is still going on, for according to M. Vacher, during the past ten years the wealth of France has increased at the rate of $750,000,000 per annum. By what means this conclusion is reached we are not informed, but it seems to be partially if not wholly sustained by certain statistical statements which M. Vacher does not seem to have used. In a report of the work of the French fire insurance companies, published in a late number of Le Messager de Paris, it is shown that these institutions had at risk in the year 1870, $13,500,000,000. Since then there has been a constant increase in the value of property insured, so that in 1877, the last year of which a report is given, there was at risk $17,500,000,000, showing each twelve months an apparent gain in insurable property of nearly $600,000,000. Now, there is no reason for supposing that this augmentation was due to a growing belief in the advantages of insurance protection, as during this period the losses by fire throughout the country were tolerably uniform, ranging annually in amount from $6,000,000 to $8,000,000, with that natural increase to be expected from the growth of the risk involved, and hence no particular motive would exist for changing past customs in this respect. But besides this insurable increase in wealth, there must have been additions in value made in classes of property upon which no fire insurance would be needed, such, for instance, as lands, shipping, and stock securities. It thus seems apparent that the estimate of annual savings as given by M. Vacher is not an exaggerated one.

It is natural that Americans, on reading of the large accumulations by foreigners, should turn their thoughts homeward and ask what the financial progress of this country is? This is a question much easier asked than answered. Not only is there no general system of taxation by which our national wealth can be determined, but prices in countless instances have not yet followed our currency in throwing off the uncertainty caused by inflation. Judged on a gold basis, the wealth of the country must have advanced, even during the five last years of business depression, though it may safely be said that this progress has been slow when compared with that of France. At the close of the war it was estimated by some—we do not know on what data—that the gold value of assessable property in the United States was about $14,000,000,000, or five times the amount of the national debt as it then was. Most persons would say that in the last fifteen years there had been an increase in worth, though it might be hard to fix upon any sum which would command popular credence. A method of computation which the insurance figures we have referred to has suggested to us may be used for want of a better means, though we are not prepared to defend the results as being even approximately correct. Taking it for granted that property in France is insured to the same extent that it is with us, then the amounts thus protected must bear the same relative proportion to the entire wealth of the country. Now, in France, something like two-fifths of the property is insured, and if the ratio hold good here—a supposition rather favorable than otherwise to this country—our wealth would stand at $16,000,000,000, as the fire insurance companies doing business here protect property in the United States to the extent of about $6,500,000,000. To show how rapid is the progress of France it is only necessary to say that in ten years her citizens, if they go on as they have done, will be richer in increased worth by as much as the entire insured property of this country! While on this subject it may not be out of place to say that France each year saves at least $60,000,000 more than this country by putting up her buildings in such a manner that they cannot easily burn down.

TRICKERY AND STEALING.

The recent Wall-street incident of a customer taking up bonds he had ordered from a broker, and departing without paying for them has come up in the courts, and may be used as an illustration of the difficulty of distinguishing downright stealing from borrowing, cheating, embezzling and other ways of getting another man's property without paying for it. Years ago, when business ways were simpler, theft was thought to be pretty clearly defined and well understood. Unless the actual taking of the property was done against the owner's consent, the person could not be convicted as a thief. He might be tried for false pretenses, or for embezzlement, or arrested and imprisoned for a civil debt, but punished as a thief he could not be, if the property was willingly and knowingly put in his possession by the owner. But the increasing variety and ingenuity of attempts to get property by easier ways than paying for it have led to many refinements and niceties in the courts. In the bonds case, the story is that the customer called and asked if the bonds he had ordered had been purchased. The Cashier said "yes"; and he asked to look them over. The Cashier handed them to him, he examined them, popped them into his pocket, said he would go for a certified check, and departed. The next heard of him he was in Montreal. Over such a case as this the lawyers might get up a very entertaining argument—to lawyers. What can be done in such a case in the way of punishment might depend on very nice questions as to the intent; whether the Cashier intended to deliver the bonds as sold, or only to let the customer have an opportunity to examine them; and whether the customer intended to get them for nothing or really meant to go for and bring back the money, but found afterward he could not do so.

It has been decided that if two persons are negotiating in the horse market for a sale of a horse, and the owner allows the customer to mount the horse and ride him, to try his pace, and the customer rides away and keeps the horse, this is stealing; for the horse was not delivered to him—he only had leave to ride. But there was a case once in England where the customer asked the price of the horse, and the seller said £8, and told the groom to deliver the horse. The customer mounted, saying to the seller that he would return immediately and pay him. The seller answered "Very well," and the customer rode away, but never came back with the money. The Judge said this was not stealing, for the horse was sold and delivered as property, on credit.

There is a story of a landlady of a lodging-house who one day wanted a large bank-note changed, and she sent it by the servant-girl up stairs to a lodger, to ask if he would change it. He told the girl he had not gold enough in his wallet, but would take the note out to his bankers and get the change from them. She let him take the note away, and he never came back. This was decided to be stealing, because the landlady never intended to part with the note unless she had the change. The servant-girl had no authority to deliver it to the prisoner to take away with him, and so it never came to his possession as his property. So, there are two cases of messengers convicted of stealing things given them to carry to customers. In one a farmer sent his man with some pigs to show to a lady who wanted to buy a pig, but charged the man to bring the pigs back—he was only to show them, not to sell and take the money. In the other, a footman, came to a silversmith's with a false story that his master wanted to buy a silver pitcher, and the silversmith let him take two for the master to choose from. In these cases the messengers sold the pigs and pitchers and were sent to jail for stealing, for the Judges said the owners never gave the things to them as property, but only to carry back and forth.

A scamp called at a silk-dealer's and selected two pieces of silk and asked to have them sent to his house, where he would pay for them. The shopman took them there, accordingly, and the buyer deceived him into taking false bills in payment. Meantime, the goods had been charged to the buyer on the silk-merchant's books. The Judges held that this was not stealing, because the shopman was authorized to deliver the goods on receiving payment, and he had supposed the bills given him were payment, and had intended to deliver the silk as property.

A sharper in a Cincinnati railroad depot drew a passenger awaiting the train into conversation, and while they stood chatting a third man came up and accosted the sharper with, "If you want to go on this train you had better get your baggage and pay your freight bill." The sharper turned to the passenger and said he had only gold about him, and the railroad men would not allow him any premium on it, nor let him have his things until he had paid freight. "Will you," said he, "let me have $280 in currency, and I will give you this gold to hold as security until I can draw bills out of the bank and pay you." The passenger let him have $280 in bills and took what he supposed were gold pieces, but found on examining afterward that they were worthless. He complained of this as stealing, but the Supreme Court of Ohio said that as he intended to let the fellow have the bills and spend them, and pay him back in other bills, he had voluntarily parted with his property, and the case was not stealing, but swindling on false pretenses. In Illinois, a case very nearly like this was decided the other way. The accused were carrying on the "ball and safe game," as it is called, and one of them appealed to a bystander to lend him some money to bet on his finding the ball. He declared very positively he could see the trick and was positive of winning the bet; and the bystander lent him the cash. Of course, it was lost; and there was a prosecution for stealing. The court held that if the bystander was deceived by the prisoner's positive assurances that he could not lose the money, but would win the bet, so that the owner of the money did not expect it would be spent and paid back in other money, but expected the same bills to come back as soon as the bet was decided, then he had not parted with the possession of the money as property, but had only allowed the scamp to have the custody of it for a temporary purpose. So there was a conviction for stealing. The court said the question in cases where the person charged as a thief gets the thing into his control by consent of the owner, the question always is whether the owner intended to part with the ownership of it to him, in which case there is no larceny, or whether he only meant he should take it to return it or put it to some particular use for the owner.

ART AND THE COMMON LOT.

It is quite clear that art is a rising power all over the world. It is talked about and written about more than ever before by people in general; artists of first-class ability are everywhere held in honor, and what is more, their work is generously paid for. Thus far, indeed, the kind of art which comes from individual genius and goes easily with its personality, such as painting and music, has won the palm; and surely, no work is better paid for than a fine picture or a sweet song. This fact apparently belongs to the individualism of our modern life in its quarrel with the old empires of Church and State. They who could paint a picture or sing a song needed no armies or priesthoods, no guilds of workmen or confederacies of princes, to back them up and help them out; and for a while castles, palaces, and churches stood aghast at the marvel of the uprising of this new liberalism in the form of the spirit of beauty in color and in tone. Of course, the new political power soon learned how to master this brilliant genius, and the royalty which subdued the Renaissance to itself conquered art, and not only turned painting and music to its own uses, but also put its hand upon the heavier arts of sculpture and architecture. It is apparently true that kings and princes were the great patrons of early modern art, and in this fact we find the difference between the ages of the Medici and of Louis XIV. and our own time.

Art now waits closely upon the footsteps of science, and is not afraid of the new liberty. Science has been teaching us to see into the nature of things, and showing us how to act according to this nature. Science is the knowledge of nature and life, while art is the power to shape things according to nature and life. It is, in other words, the way to put the true idea and spirit into the chosen material, so as to make it tell its meaning at once and always. A great picture or a great statue is so much power in color or in form, and a fine building is so much force in wood, or stone, or iron. Without this rendering of its ideas into art, science is meagre, unsatisfactory, and depressing. In fact, much of what is called the infidelity of science comes from not giving it fair play, and not allowing science the help of art to carry analysis beyond negation, and to put things together in forms of fair life after taking them to pieces in the aspect of death. A large part of the recent enthusiasm for art comes from the cry of the human mind for some relief from the dissections of science by the mercy of the lovely creations of art.

Our popular liberty is working in the same direction by asking the help of art to make common life as wholesome and as winsome as it can. The cry, indeed, was at first merely for cheapness or the most surface and show for the least money, and farm houses in a small way had the trick and pretense which the city mansion set forth in its ambition. But there is now an evident yearning for something that looks like true art, a desire for houses and furniture that have use and beauty at once, and which carry the truth of nature into the graces of life. The fear, of course, is that our people will mistake the superfine for the fine, and that in running away from bare lath and plaster they will run mad after polychrome, bric-à-brac, queer windows, and odd gables. They have paid dearly enough for much of this folly to be ready to hear the voice of common sense and good taste, which is now speaking to them from so many judicious books and sensible teachers and wholesome examples. There is a disposition now to build good houses in America for our representative American people to live in, without being discontented with the common lot that refuses them rare fortune or brilliant gifts. Some of our architects—too few of them, indeed—have been able to answer the question of a man who has learned at the public school how to earn a few thousand dollars to build a house for himself and his young wife and children: "How shall I live in health and comfort and in tolerable refinement, and have a house that shall be at once wholesome and pleasant to my family?"

The charming treatise of Viollet-le-Duc, the "Story of a House," goes upon the plan of spending two hundred thousand francs—forty thousand dollars—for a French country house that will do for Summer and Winter. Without saying that such a house would have been cheap in America at twice the money, if it could have been built at all, we may be quite sure that our great need is not of such grand examples, but of far more simple and frugal houses, such as come within the means of men who earn their own living and do not look far above the common lot. As land now is cheap not far from our great cities, and the access is certainly more easy, the opportunity of building and owning a house to one's self is growing, and the motive is likely to increase as the coming wave of prosperity brings to intelligent and industrious men new means, with sobered expectations and improved taste. There is no reason why a sensible man should not have a good piece of architecture for his residence at the cost of a few thousand dollars, with an acre or more of ground with capacities for beauty as well as production. Good materials are cheaper in the long run than bad or indifferent materials, and the form in which they are shaped is by no means costly in proportion to its grace. In a sightly house there is not of necessity any more material or expense than in an unsightly one, and there may be in an ugly building, as in an ugly coat, more outlay than in a shapely one. A good-sized, well-proportioned room owes its attraction more to skill and judgment than to high cost, and good color on the walls, however frugally arranged, and honest furniture upon the floor, however simple, may give a plain home a range and comfort, and even beauty, that are often sadly missed in more ambitious structures. A fine and perhaps bold roof, too, may crown the house without extravagance, and the carriage of the timbers, like the poise of the man's head, depends more upon a certain spirit than upon mannerisms or prodigality. It is often taken for granted, indeed, that good taste is courtly, proud, and exclusive, and that beauty is a pet aristocratic dame, who scorns the homes of the people and fancies only the palace and its peers. But God and nature and true art teach us otherwise. There is beauty everywhere in all true health and wholesome living. The common air, the light of day, the lowliest flower, the simplest affection, every generous thought and earnest purpose, wait upon the supreme loveliness, and no reform could be greater than one which would strike at all excesses and extravagances in the name of true art, and bring the severe rule of beauty to bear upon the artifices of fashion and self-indulgence.

Our great and growing Republic calls for this reform and will have it, and to a certain extent is having it. Our girls and boys are carrying from the public schools lessons of taste and examples of proportion and color and use that will not be laid aside with their school books. They will ask and are asking that they may have the best of God's gifts in their every-day life in homes that shall answer all essential material uses and leave room for the spirit of beauty and the grace of true life. We may look for this result in two ways—one, the way of plain experience; the other, the way of high inspiration. As a good pastoral poem calls at once for patient observation and commanding genius, as in Burns or Wordsworth, so the true home for the common lot will appear at the call of frugal use mated with beautiful art.

MANHOOD UNMANNED.

It is very common and natural to think that civilized men, especially Americans, are of a practical turn, are the makers and providers of money in all matrimonial partnerships where money is needed to carry them on. It is thought, also, that they must have a sense of manliness and proper responsibility which would prevent them, under any circumstances, from depending on anybody but themselves for the maintenance of their family. While all this is true, of course, of the great majority, it is surprising how many husbands and fathers there are, even in the Republic, who appear to disbelieve that husbandship or fatherhood, or both, involve actual accountability. They may have a notion that they ought to take care of their family, if they can do so without trouble, if the means are readily procured. But, if there be difficulties in the way, if sacrifices are to be made, they fold their hands and leave the issue to fortune, imagining that they have done their duty by wishing that things might be otherwise.

This is a mild and favorable presentation of the inner life of any number of American families whose heads are intelligent, and rank themselves as respectable. If these were invalids or dipsomaniacs, it would not seem singular; but that able-bodied, fairly-educated men, with no more vices than are usual with the masculine race, should fail from any cause within their control to support those who in every sense belong to them, and whom they have deliberately chosen to provide for, hardly seems credible. Perhaps we should not credit it, were it not for the strange, unexpected, often painful revelations made here and everywhere through divorce suits tried in the public courts. It is shown almost daily by unimpeached and unimpeachable testimony that husbands and fathers assuming to be reputable, and frequently held to be so until detected as base counterfeits, have for years done nothing toward the subsistence of wife and children. In many cases, they have not even looked after themselves, but have meanly eaten the bread—and yet it did not choke them—earned by the woman they have solemnly promised to love, honor, and protect.

The popular opinion that woman is a dependent creature; that she cannot make her own way in the world; that she needs to be guarded, hedged round, cared for by noble man, is pitiably controverted on every side in each city, town, and village of the country. It would be supremely mortifying to all of us if we should know how large a proportion of women furnish food, shelter, and clothing for their husbands and the offspring these have begotten. The actual figures, could they be gathered, would put all manhood to shame, and expose a widespread error. It has always been the boast of the Anglo-Saxon, particularly of the Anglo-American race, that its men are manly; that they respect and revere their women; that they stand between them and the battle of life; that they will not let their women drudge and toil, as so many foreigners do, when they have the health and strength to save them. And the great mass make good their boast—it is so much and so uniformly the Saxon habit that they who shirk the obligation may well be regarded as of alien blood, as they unquestionably are of alien spirit. Still, it must be conceded that the exceptions are humiliatingly many; that there are men and Americans really, and men and Americans nominally, and that the two are irreconcilably different.

The first duty of any and every man, whatever his breed or creed, whether civilized or uncivilized, to provide for her he pretends to love, and for those who are or should be the product of his love, is ignominiously neglected, though seldom openly disregarded, over all the land. Divorce suits unveil but a portion of them. There are fathers innumerable who support their married daughters, and their daughters' children because their husbands make no effort to do so; are absolutely lost to shame; have fallen in this respect below the lowest brutes. There are brothers without end that feel called upon to maintain their sisters or brothers' families because unnatural husbands and unnatural fathers are too lazy, too unprincipled, too contemptible, to take care of their own. There are honorable, conscientious men who have refrained from marriage and from having children because they have never seen their way clear to their proper rearing, and yet are expected to, and do, give of their hard-earned substance to sisters and brothers, and the progeny of these that have elected to marry and reproduce their kind in the face of prudence, justice, and the common good. The sacrifices which many make that in no sense appertain to them for unwisely wedded kindred, unworthy from recklessness and indisposition to be advised of such sacrifice or of the generous devotion shown, are more pathetic and magnanimous than most of us could be led to believe without detailed facts and the unroofing of countless homes.

What meanness, what injustice, is perpetually practiced in the name of wife and children! Men fawn and beg and lie and swindle and seek to excuse deceit and dishonor for their presumed behoof, while they are really degrading themselves for purely selfish ends. Hundreds of undeserving husbands and fathers say that they cannot do what they would for their own. "Cannot" is an unmanly phrase, and therefore befitting them. Few of them fairly try. They dawdle and whine, and appeal to kind hearts, and get what they should be ashamed to mention. "I would not do it but for my wife and children." He who is ever ready to say so is a meanlicent in spirit, a cur in conduct. Wife and children should be noble stimulants to exertion and enterprise, not acquittals for abjectness and self-abasement. Marriage and paternity are within one's option. They are not necessities, nor are they always desirable. When not respected and vindicated, they are discreditable, dishonorable, and dishonoring. A man who cannot, or will not, provide for his wife and children has no right to have them. Before he takes or begets them he should understand his powers. Even wife and children may exhaust his claim to indulgence.

MURDER BY DEGREES.

The recent verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree upon a charge against a wife of killing her husband by slow poison seems the more extraordinary and unwarrantable the more attentively the division into degrees is considered. How can killing by repeated doses of poison be otherwise than deliberate and premeditated? The only question can be whether the accused administered the drug with intent to kill; if he did not, there is no murder; if he did, the first degree is proved. This is illustrated by a case in Indiana two or three years ago. The accused mixed some cantharides in a glass of wine and gave it to a woman with whom he had a friendly acquaintance, and she drank it, not knowing it was drugged, and died from its effects. But there was no intent to kill; the offender's motive was merely to produce excitement and mental stimulation. He was convicted of murder in the second degree, but the conviction was reversed. The court held that some intent to kill was necessary, even to the second degree of murder. If the prisoner had no intent whatever to kill, he was not chargeable with murder at all; if he had such intent, the crime was necessarily of the first degree.

This division of murder into degrees originated in a humane desire to modify the punishment of the less deliberate forms, to discriminate between a killing aggravated by cool, deliberate, long-revolved design, and one done upon a sudden provocation, though intentionally. The common law roughly divided homicides by a single line, into murder and manslaughter, according as they were deliberate, intentional, malicious, or were accidental, involuntary, unpremeditated. But it made no distinction between a long and a short intent. A sudden blow in a quarrel, and assassination by lying in wait, were alike murder if there was a design to kill. Early statutes, in this State particularly, seem to have sought to restrict the idea of murder by introducing "premeditated" into the definition; but the courts held that a design to kill, formed even an instant before the blow, was premeditated, and warranted a conviction of murder. As a more efficient way of incorporating the desired change in the law, these degree statutes have been passed. Pennsylvania was the first State to make the division; many other States have followed: Alabama, California, Connecticut, Florida, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New-Hampshire, New-York, and Texas may be mentioned without exhausting the list. The phraseology varies, and the line of division is somewhat differently drawn in different statutes, but they all embody the same dictate of natural conscience, that one who contrives a murder by a prolonged plan and method more clearly deserves death than one who is provoked or tempted into it of a sudden, with time, indeed, to form the design, but without opportunity to reflect and draw back.

Many of these statutes mention poisoning by name as a form which, from its very nature, evinces that forecast and deliberation which characterizes the first degree. Pennsylvania says: "All murder perpetrated by means of poison, or by lying in wait, [with some other forms specified,] shall be deemed of the first degree." Connecticut, unless her law has been changed within a very few years, has the same definition. In New-Hampshire the statute specifies killing by poison, starving, or torture as examples of the first degree. A verdict that slow poisoning is murder in the second degree is simply absurd.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

THE BROOKLYN PHILHARMONIC CONCERT.

The second concert of this season of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, which the programme stated was the was hrushed and fifth concert of the society, was given last evening to a full house at the Academy of Music. The conditions of the entertainment were all favorable, and the audience may well be pleased with the result, for certainly no more satisfactory concert has been given in New-York or Brooklyn for many a day. The programme was as follows:

Symphony No. 8, op. 56; "Recollection of Mozart" ..... Mendelssohn
Chamber Song from the Christmas Oratorio ..... Bach
Miss Cary.
{Entr'acte, Ballet Music} "Ali Baba" ..... Cherubini
Concerto, No. 1 in E flat ..... Liszt
Miss Julia Rivé-King.
Aria, "Ah mon fils" ..... Meyerbeer
Miss Cary.
Overture, "Jassonda," op. 63 ..... Spohr

Mr. Theodore Thomas came from Cincinnati to conduct the orchestra, and did his work thoroughly and quietly, as he always does. There was no roughness or lack of finish perceptible throughout the evening, and it seemed to those who have for years been accustomed to Mr. Thomas' conducting as if he had never severed his relations with this band of perfect performers, whose movements so directed with his old-time ease and skill. Mendelssohn's Scotch symphony is always popular with the average audience. It is a graceful and beautiful composition, characteristic of its author, not difficult of comprehension, and yet so well written that the most exacting musician cannot but be charmed with it. Its performance last night was exceedingly good, the third and fourth movements being particularly well given, with a richness of tone and delicacy in the adagio that was entirely satisfactory. The selections from Cherubini's "Ali Baba," performed here for the first time, were an interesting feature of the programme. The work, which, it is stated, has been "revived by Carl Reinecke," was produced by Cherubini in 1833, some 10 years before his death, and when he was at the best of his powers. Both movements are written beautifully, and were played last night under Mr. Thomas' direction with an elegance and spirit which deserved the highest praise. Miss Cary was in excellent voice and sang in her best style. The "Slumber Song" of Bach, which she gave in the first part, was perhaps not a judicious selection for a concert, and with a less competent artist might have seemed tedious. She sang "Ah! mon fils" in the second part so well as to command the enthusiasm of the audience, which was not inclined to be demonstrative. It is to be regretted that this grand aria is not given by singers in French instead of Italian, for it is more effective in the former language, and there is no reason why it should not be sung as it was written when it is given by itself on the concert stage. Miss Cary was several times recalled and responded in the second part with a ballad. Mme. Julia Rivé-King contributed an artistic performance of Liszt's Concerto in E flat. Her technique was faultless, and she played with wonderful power. She was admirably sustained by the orchestra, and the concerto was given with a smoothness and musical excellence which deserve the highest commendation. The concert was, from the beginning to the end, a success, and was a credit to the society and all the artists who took part in it. The floral decoration of the stage was a noticeable feature which New-Yorkers are not accustomed to.

THE STRAKOSCH OPERA SEASON.

Mr. Strakosch announces the last week of his season of opera. The arrangements of the management point to a thoroughly successful close. For to-morrow night there is to be a repetition of "Aida," with Miss Kellogg and Miss Cary in the principal rôles, and increased efficiency is promised both in the matter of the chorus and orchestra. Tuesday evening "Faust" will again hold the stage, and the representation of the opera will derive its particular significance from the fact that Miss Maria Litta will make a first appearance in the rôle of Margherita. "Carmen" is the work announced for Wednesday evening, Miss Kellogg appearing as the heroine, and on Thursday night there will be a notable reinforcement of the company. This consists in the engagement of Mlle. De Muralva, who will sing the music of Leonora in "Il Trovatore." "Mignon" is the opera for Friday and a grand farewell matinée of "Aida" is announced for Saturday.

A NEW TENOR.

CHICAGO, Jan. 17.—A large audience was in attendance at Haverley's Theatre this evening upon the occasion of the representation of "Il Travatore" by the Mapleson troupe. The cast included Mario Ritz, as Lenora, to whose appearance the dressing-room war between herself and Minnie Hauk this week lent additional interest; Signor Gillandi as Maurico, Galassi as the Count, and Mme. Lablache as Azucena. The novelty of the performance was the first appearance of Signor Gillandi in this country. He was to have made his début in "Lucia" last evening, but was prevented by the fatigue of his long journey. As to his dramatic ability, it is hardly more than a conventional actor, and in this direction achieved scarcely more than an indifferent degree of success. His merits rather lie in his voice than in his action. He has a voice of medium power, pleasable quality, and best in its upper tones, which are penetrating and clear. He sings with intelligence, but with much effort, and, while not a great tenor, nor achieving a great success, he is more than a very considerable artist in his work, and at times sang with a fine burst of power. It is hardly fair to pronounce a final judgment upon him, as he arrived only yesterday, and is still much fatigued with his rapid journey, and evidently was ill at ease on facing a strange audience.

MUSICAL NOTES.

The Messrs. Carri will give their next concert on Tuesday evening. They will have an entertaining programme, and will be assisted by several eminent artists.

The Carl Lanser concerts will come to a conclusion next Tuesday evening, when the last of the series will be given at Chickering Hall. Miss Fannie Goodwin is the soprano, and Mr. M. Arbeskie is set down for a cornet performance.

The symphony concerts of the Chickering Hall series promise most successful results. The third public rehearsal takes place next Thursday afternoon, and the corresponding concert on the following Saturday. Mrs. J. K. Barton is the soprano, and Mr. Richard Hoffman the pianist.

The programme which Mr. Max Strakosch has arranged for this evening is of exceeding liberality, and not at all ultra-classical. Many prominent artists of his company will appear, and M. Remenyi, who continues to increase in popular favor, occupies a prominent place in the arrangements. The concert will take place at Booth's Theatre.

The end of the month will be signalized in musical records by a symphony concert of which Mr. O. B. Boise is the prime mover. The promoter of the concert has sufficient faith in himself to rely entirely on his original works. Mme. Nanette Falk-Auerbach, who has achieved success at the Peabody concerts in Baltimore, is a principal performer.

Elaborate arrangements have been made by the Arion Society, whose concert takes place at Steinway Hall next Friday evening. The orchestra includes over 50 members, who are under the leadership of Dr. Damrosch, and the soloists are of approved vocal culture and capacity. A prologue with an especial motive will be part of the procedure. Among the attractions of the evening will unquestionably be the Arion chorus and the very efficient orchestral force.

Albany rushes into the aesthetics, and with excellent discrimination selects M. Edouard Remenyi and Mme. Julia Rivé-King for its representatives in its first grand concert this season. There are other artists as well, but these are the "virtuosi." The concert will take place on the evening of the 23d at the Martin Opera-house; Poughkeepsie will have its concert on the 22d; Troy on the 24th, and the western tour of the Remenyi-Rivé-King combination will fairly begin at Cincinnati on the 29th, when the services of the Thomas orchestra will enter largely into the musical procedure.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Mr. Gilbert's play, "Engaged," is one of the novelties soon to be presented in this City.

An important event in theatricals will be the reappearance of Mr. John E. Owens to-morrow night, at the Park Theatre. He will play in "Dot," and he will have the excellent support of Mr. Couldock an actor worthy of high respect. Mr. Owens' Cold Plummer will have almost the flavor of a novelty for many young theatre-goers. The part of Dot will be intrusted to Miss Minnie Palmer.

Mr. Herman Lünde will not appear again as a reader before the public. His next venture will be made upon the stage.

The engagement of Messrs. Tom Thumb and company at Masonic Hall has been extended, and they will give their amusing performances throughout the present week.

The popularity of "The Banker's Daughter," at the Union Square Theatre, is undiminished. A brief reference to this well-conceived, highly interesting, and admirably-acted play, is all that is needed here.

"Love's Endurance" has proved an enduring attraction at the San Francisco Minstrels. To-morrow evening Mr. Sam Devere, a variety performer of good repute, will take his place among this joyous company.

That fine play, "Never Too Late to Mend," will be produced at the Olympic Theatre to-morrow evening by the Charles Reade Combination, which includes Mr. George Chaplin, Mr. Cyril Searle, Mr. W. J. Fleming, and Miss Dora Goldthwaite.

Miss Ada Cavendish seems to have favorably impressed Western judges with her Rosalind. The return of this lady to the Metropolitan stage shortly will be gladly welcomed, and there will then be given a better chance to measure her abilities.

There is nothing new to be said of the Aquarium. "Cinderella" is still being played afternoon and evening, and the other popular features of the entertainment are retained. It may be well to recall the fact that the fishes are, as heretofore, on exhibition.

The performances which are now being given at the Theatre Comique are creditable to the management of that house. Of their kind, they are equal to the best. During the coming week a well-varied programme will be interpreted by Mr. Harrigan, Mr. Hart, and their assistants.

Mr. Oliver Doud Byron will appear to-morrow evening at Niblo's Garden Theatre in "Ben McCullough." This piece will be performed only during the present week, giving place next week to an entirely new drama entitled "Hero," in which Mr. Byron will play the leading part.

Mr. D. H. Harkins will reopen the Fifth-Avenue Theatre next Saturday evening with Sidney Rosenfeld's adaptation of "Dr. Klaus." The cast will include Mr. Charles Fisher, Mr. Frank Hardenbergh, Miss Ella Wilton, and Miss Laura Don. Mr. Harkins will not play the chief part after all.

Mr. Lester Wallack's peculiar ability as a comedian is shown in its best light in "Ours." His Hugh Chalcot is a delightful performance throughout, and especially so in the third act. As presented and acted at Wallack's Theatre, Robertson's pretty play is unusually enjoyable, and in its progress one forgets that it is quite devoid of plot or purpose.

The faults which marred the first performance of that delightful musical comedy, "H. M. S. Pinafore," at the Standard Theatre, have since, in a large measure, disappeared. The representations at present are bright and joyous enough to turn the gall of our Jacques to good-humor. Miss Eva Mills makes up for her weak acting by some excellent singing, and the other performers do very well.

At the Broadway Theatre there will be no change of bill to-morrow. M. Angier's delicate and suggestive comedy "Les Fourchambault" will continue to be the attraction. No one should miss seeing this work of a great contemporary dramatist; for, although open in many ways to criticism, it is thoroughly representative in its methods and purpose. Mr. Wheelock and Miss Alice Lingard are seen to advantage in this play.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Prech, composer of the celebrated "Variations," died recently at Vienna.

Mme. Albani is said to have had 20 recalls after the fourth act of "Hamlet" in Moscow.

Herr Lenaz Brüll is writing a new opera. His "Golden Cross" was very successful in London.

M. Faure was to have begun his performances at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels, on Jan. 12.

"Never Too Late to Mend," with emendations by the author, Charles Reade, has been revived in London.

The London Theatre, in reviewing the year just past, speaks encouragingly of the present state of the drama in England.

A new operetta, "Blindekuh," by Johann Strauss, has been given, with but moderate success, at the Vienna Theater an der Wien.

The Teatro Real de Madrid is said to possess a singer of great power in Erminia Borchi-Mamo. Verdi, the composer, has predicted a fine future for her.

Mr. Palgrave Simpson has produced a play at the Royalty Theatre, London, the materials of which are taken from the familiar story of "Cinderella." As a whole it is pleasingly spectacular.

Herr Wagner is reported to have completed the score of "Parsifal," which will soon be published. The version for voice and piano is, it is said, to be executed by Herr Carl Klindworth.

In the January number of the Theatre the veteran playwright and critic, H. L. Blanchard, calls attention to the diversity of opinion about "Carmen" expressed by the musical critics of New-York.

The acting of Miss Ellen Terry as Ophelia in the revival at "Hamlet" at the London Lyceum Theatre, is pushed in the highest terms. One critic suggestively writes that she "looked like a broken lily—she was a Niobe, all tears."

The alarming reports concerning Mme. Adelina Patti are set at rest by a letter from Homburg, which states that the diva is merely suffering from rheumatism in the ankle. The rumor that she or her legs was to be amputated is without foundation.

The Paris Opéra Comique which has been for some time past singularly unfortunate in the new works produced, and has been subsisting on revivals of old pieces of established reputation, has at last fallen on a success, to judge from the reception of M. Paladilhe's "Suzanne," the words by MM. Leuroy and Cormon.

Offenbach's "Brigands" has been reproduced at the Paris Gaîté, agreeably from a simple operetta to a great extravaganza, with ballets, and the usual spectacular attractions of pieces of this class. The experiment succeeds, and the same composer's "Orphée aux Enfers," and the new venture promises to produce as satisfactory results.

The Continental Gazette, published in Paris, says: "There are 1,542 theatres in Europe, divided as follows among the different countries: Italy, 348; France, 327; Spain, 168; England, 150; Austria, 129; Germany, 101; Russia, 64; Belgium, 24; Holland, 23; Switzerland, 20; Sweden, 10; Norway, 8; Portugal, 16; Denmark, 10; Greece, 4; Turkey, 4; Roumania, 9; Servia, 1; Egypt, 3." This list is not absolutely correct.

A MUTINOUS SEA COOK.

When the barkentine Samos, Capt. William B. Henriksen, from Trieste, arrived at her wharf at Pier No. 41 East River yesterday afternoon, an officer of the Steam-boat Squad was called on board by the Master to take into custody Godfrey Hunter, a colored man, 23 years of age, who was charged with mutiny and attempting to kill the Captain of the vessel. It appears that these three days' two weeks ago, while on the high seas, Capt. Henriksen ordered Hunter, who was employed on the vessel as cook, to go below for some purpose. Hunter refused to obey the order, and when scolded for his disobedience, picked up a cleaver and attempted to brain the Captain. The latter, in self-defence, raised his hand to protect his head, and received the blow on his hand, cutting three of the fingers very badly. Hunter was overpowered by the crew, disarmed, and kept in irons until the vessel arrived at her wharf. He was looked up at the Central Office, and will be taken to Court to-day.

ANOTHER WORTH-STREET FIRE.

At 6 o'clock last evening a fire occurred in the cutting-room of Messrs. Springfield, Friedlander & Co.'s manufactory of cloaks and suits, on the fourth floor of the five-story brick building, Nos. 53 and 55 Worth-street. The alarm was given by the automatic signal to the quarters of the Lower Insurance Patrol, in Murray-street, and was promptly responded to by the wagon and a section of the patrol. Capt. Hull forced an entrance into the building and, with two fire extinguishers, succeeded in putting out the fire without calling the fire-engines into service. The damage will not exceed $50. The occurrence created a great deal of excitement down town, as the building is on the next block to that in which the great fire occurred on Friday night, and exactly opposite Claflin's establishment, and a similar disastrous conflagration was feared.

RE-ELECTED FOR THE FIFTH TIME.

At a meeting of the German Republican Central Committee on Friday evening, ex-Judge A. J. Dittenhoefer was unanimously re-elected President for the ensuing year. This is the fifth occasion on which Judge Dittenhoefer has been complimented by re-electing him to the most prominent position in the organization—a position which he has filled with zeal and ability.

KILLED BY FALLING TIMBER.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Jan. 18.—Moses P. Dewitt, a carpenter in the employ of the Ulster County Iron-works, at Saugerties, had his skull fractured by a falling timber while at work on the new dock at the mill this morning. He died from the effects an hour and a half afterward. He leaves a wife and four children.

GENERAL TELEGRAPH NEWS

METHODS AT THE TREASURY.

ANOTHER CALL FOR $20,000,000 OF BONDS—WEEKLY STATEMENT OF THE TREASURER.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—The Treasury now holds $563,986,800 in United States bonds to secure bank circulation. United States bonds deposited for circulation for the week ending to-day, $2,430,700; United States bonds held for circulation withdrawn during the week ending to-day, $2,416,900; national bank circulation outstanding—currency notes, $322,512,464; gold notes, $3,468,920. The internal revenue receipts to-day were $304,544 10, and the Customs receipts $263,-513 44. The receipts of national bank notes for redemption for the week ending to-day, as compared with the corresponding period last year, are as follows:

New-York	$1,230,000	$1,800,000
Boston	1,837,000	1,031,000
Philadelphia	84,000	70,000
Miscellaneous	1,144,080	507,000

Receipts to-day, $403,000.

The Secretary of the Treasury this afternoon issued the eighty-second call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds of 1865, coupons of 1867. The call is for $20,000,000, of which $10,000,000 are coupon, and $10,000,000 registered, bonds. The principal and interest will be paid at the Treasury on and after April 16, and the interest will cease on that day. Following are the descriptions of bonds:

"Coupon Bonds—Dated July 1, 1867, namely: $50; No. 37,021 to No. 46,000; $100, No. 47,001 to No. 60,000; $500, No. 37,001 to No. 46,000; $1,000, No. 48,001 to No. 67,500, all inclusive.

"Registered Bonds."—Redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st day of July, 1872, as follows: $50, No. 1,551 to No. 1,925; $100, No. 11,401 to No. 13,850; $500, No. 6,251 to No. 7,250; $1,000, No. 18,751 to No. 27,750; $5,000, No. 7,101 to No. 8,150; $10,000, No. 5,051 to No. 14,300, all inclusive.

The subscriptions to the 4 per cent. loan to-day amounted to $2,438,300.

WORK OF THE COMMITTEES.

A BILL TO BE PREPARED FOR THE REDEMPTION OF THE TRADE DOLLAR AT PAR—THE JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND—EX-ASSISTANT TREASURER CHANDLER'S CASE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—The House Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, at its session this morning, authorized Mr. Muldrow to prepare a bill for the redemption of the trade dollar at par, and to prohibit its further circulation in the United States. Mr. Vance was authorized to report the bill introduced by Mr. Cummings to provide for the redemption in legal tenders of the subsidiary silver coin of the United States, and for the reissue thereof.

The House Committee on Foreign Affairs to-day held an informal conversation on the bill heretofore reported concerning the Japanese indemnity fund. Representative Hamilton particularly and the other members of the committee were in accord in the assertion that the United States cannot, consistently with its honor and character, retain possession of this amount of money, which the Government has never felt justified in covering into the Treasury. The committee has concluded to press the passage of the bill.

The House Committee on Printing, after long deliberation, has agreed to report to the House, with favorable recommendation, Representative Singleton's bill to reduce the expense of the public printing and binding.

Representative Lindsey, of Maine, is authorized by the House Committee on Claims to report favorably on a bill relieving Theophilus C. Chandler, late Assistant Treasurer of the United States at Boston, from all liability for the acts of Julius F. Hartwell, disbursing clerk under Mr. Chandler, in naively loaning Mr. Mellen, Ward & Co. amounts aggregating $450,000 out of the funds of the Sub-Treasury, for which Chandler was held liable. The committee takes the ground that as Hartwell was appointed by Chandler, but not his supposers, he [Chandler] should not be held responsible for misdemeanors of his subordinate, who was not under bonds for the faithful performance of his duty.

DEPOSITORS PERFECTLY SATISFIED.

THE OSWEGO CITY SAVINGS BANK REPORTED ABLE TO RESUME.

OSWEGO, N. Y., Jan. 18.—A meeting of the depositors of the suspended Oswego City Savings Bank was held this afternoon. About 600 persons were present, representing a large majority of the depositors of the bank. A committee of three prominent citizens, which has been engaged for two days examining the securities held by the bank, made a report to the meeting. The committee estimates the assets of the bank at $537,520 40. The liabilities, including interest to Jan. 1, 1879, are $531,819 47. The principal items of the assets are stated by the committee as follows: Cash, $48,014; United States 4 and 6 per cent. bonds, $52,621; Oswego City bonds, $37,113; Oswego County bonds, $15,190; town bonds, $108,420; Oswego City and County orders, full, $5,578; bank building, $30,000; mortgages and interest due and unpaid, $260,173; accrued interest on other loans, $11,936; call loans, $8,785. The committee assured the depositors that the bank was able, if allowed the usual business, to pay all depositors in full. Resolutions were adopted expressing confidence in the integrity of the officers and Trustees of the bank, protesting against any action of the Banking Department or event which should close the bank in the hands of a Receiver, and stating that, if necessary to establish the soundness of the bank, the depositors will submit to a reduction of 5 per cent. of their deposits. A committee of nine was appointed to carry out the views of the meeting, and a paper embodying the above facts will be presented to the court at Schenectady on Jan. 21.

MARINE DISASTERS.

THE BARK ITALIA PROBABLY A TOTAL LOSS—OTHER ACCIDENTS TO VESSELS.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., Jan. 18.—The stranded Italian bark Italia, which came ashore on Deal Beach, three miles south of this place on Thursday, now lies 200 yards from shore on her beam ends, and will probably prove a total loss. Nothing can be saved except anchors, sails, and rigging, and even that is very doubtful. She is now in charge of the Baxter Wrecking Company. A part of the clothing of the Captain and crew, and the chronometer and other small articles were brought ashore to-day by the wreckers. The Captain is provokid at some of the newspaper articles, and has written a letter to Superintendent Havens, who has charge of the life-saving stations on the New-Jersey coast, stating that both the crew and himself have been well fed and cared for by Capt. Van Note and the crew of Station No. 6.

The steamer Relief, of the Coast Wrecking Company, has gone to the assistance of the schooner Cuba, ashore 10 miles south of Barnegat Light. Strong hopes are entertained of both vessel and cargo being saved.

WEYMOUTH HAVEN, Mass., Jan. 17.—This morning, during a thick fog, the steamer Eleonora, Capt. Johnson, from New-York for Portland, ran ashore on Middle Ground. The revenue cutter Samuel Dexter, Capt. Baker, went to her assistance, and hauled her off.

LONDON, Jan. 18.—The British brig Eunice, Capt. Taylor, from Richibucto by the way of Sydney, Cape Breton, where she was towed in to repair damages, for the Clyde, was abandoned at sea. Her crew was rescued and landed at Flushing.

THE TWEED COMMITTEE'S WORK.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 18.—At the meeting of the Tweed committee to-day, W. B. Merchant, District Attorney of St. Mary's, testified concerning the affair on Newman's house. Nothing new was developed.

On motion of Senator Garland, it was ordered that United States Commissioner W. G. Fay take the testimony of witnesses subpœnaed but not examined by the committee, for Natchitoches, Texas, and Cavalousia Parishes; that Morris Marks may represent the majority of the committee, and H. D. Jones the minority; that the testimony so taken be transmitted to the Chairman of the committee, and treated in all respects as if taken by the committee. The members of the committee will leave the city this evening.

CLEMENCY TO PRISONERS.

ALBANY, Jan. 18.—The Governor has pardoned Josiah W. Brandon, of Columbia County, convicted of assault and battery, and sentenced to Albany Penitentiary for six months. Adolph Bruns, of New-York, convicted of grand larceny, and sentenced to Sing Sing for three years and six months, has been restored to citizenship. David K. Pierce, of Oneida County, convicted in 1876 of arson, and sentenced to Auburn Prison for life, has had his sentence commuted to four years from Jan. 19, 1876, subject to the legal deduction for good conduct.

FIGHTING OVER MINING PROPERTY.

DEADWOOD, Dakota, Jan. 18.—A difficulty yesterday over some disputed ground between the Home-stake and Pride of the West Mining Companies resulted in the shooting of Alexander Frankenburg. The wound is not serious. The Sheriff and a posse are protecting the property, and no further trouble is anticipated.

WHAT IS WANTED FOR IDAHO.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 18.—A dispatch from Silver City, Idaho, dated to-day, says that Gov. Brayman's Message favors an extension of the Utah and Northern Railroad, providing the people of the Territory will not be subjected to any additional burdens. He favors the extinction of a leading Indian reservation in order that the valuable lands now held by the Umatillas and other tribes may be thrown open to settlement. He also dwells upon the importance of having a larger military force in the Territory.

CRISTOL BREAKS HIS COLLAR-BONE.

OVERMATCHED IN WRESTLING IN DETROIT—LOSING A CONTEST THROUGH A BROKEN BONE.

DETROIT, Mich., Jan. 18.—The wrestling match between Col. James H. McLaughlin, of this city, and Andrew Cristol, the French athlete, in Graeco-Roman style, best two in three falls, for $500 a side and door-money, came to an unexpected termination to-night. Cristol having his collar-bone broken in the first bout. The match, it was announced, would be conducted fairly and honestly, and excited general interest. The audience of 1,500 people filled Whitney's Opera-house. Dr. J. J. Mulheron, a prominent physician, and himself a fine athlete, was referee. The difference in physical appearance of the men was very marked when they came on the stage, stripped to their waists. Cristol is muscular and well developed, weighing 160 pounds, and depended on his agility and scientific knowledge to defeat McLaughlin, who towered over him like a giant. McLaughlin is famous as a collar and elbow wrestler, but is almost a novice in Graeco-Roman work, although he has a good theoretical knowledge of it. His weight was 222 pounds, and he was in perfect condition. The men commenced work at 8:25, and went at it with great determination. McLaughlin grappled the little Frenchman and threw him over his right shoulder, but he struck on all fours. Cristol seized McLaughlin from behind around the waist, and the latter, with his left arm, reached his right arm second, placed his hand on Cristol's neck, and whirled him on his back. Cristol struck with terrible force, with his right arm partly behind him, and when he arose to his feet was pale and almost helpless. He was assisted to the dressing-room, and three prominent physicians found on examination that the right collar-bone was broken squarely in two. Cristol felt much chagrined over the accident, but concluded that he was overmatched by his big opponent. He was placed in a carriage and taken to a hotel, where the fracture was reduced. McLaughlin, having won the first fall, and his opponent being disabled, was awarded the stakes and door money. He expressed great regret for the accident, but said it was unavoidable. The whole bout occupied only three minutes.

ARMY AND NAVY INTELLIGENCE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—The Superintendent of the Mounted Recruiting Service is ordered to cause all available colored cavalry recruits to be prepared and forwarded under proper charge to Trinidad, Colorado, for assignment to the Ninth Cavalry. The Quartermaster's Department will furnish the necessary transportation.

Capt. K. R. Breese is detached from special duty at Newport, R. I., and ordered to the command of the Tennessee. Capt. John Irving, from command of the Pensacola, and ordered to the command of the receiving-ship Independence, at Mare Island Navy-yard; Ensign J. F. Underwood, from duty on the Coast Survey, and placed on sick leave; Mate John Odenhal, from duty on the Coast Survey, and placed on waiting orders.

LONDON, Jan. 18.—The American Consul at Portsmouth telegraphs to the London agent of the New-York Associated Press that the United States ship Constitution is apparently uninjured. There is no damage whatever to the cargo. The Constitution will sail in three or four days for New-York. Another dispatch says that the vessel is making three inches of water an hour. Divers will examine her hull on Monday. A considerable quantity of chain-cable had to be jettisoned before she floated.

NOTES FROM THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18, 1879.

The President has recognized Giovanni Battista Raffo as Consul-General of Italy at New-York.

The President to-day signed the commissions of Orange Ferris, of New-York; James B. Howell, of Iowa, and Asa O. Aldis, of Vermont, to be Southern Claims Commissioners, and L. Bradford Prince, of New-York, to be Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory of New-Mexico.

According to announcement heretofore made to the public, the Post Office Department has not withdrawn from the arrangements which it made in anticipation of the entrance of Peru to the Postal Union on Oct. 1 last, so far as it relates to correspondence from the United States addressed to Peru and sent by way of Panama. But the full prepayment of letter postage on such correspondence is required.

THE STATUS OF GEN. THOMAS.

CHICAGO, Jan. 18.—Gen. Sheridan, President of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland, makes the following statement: "The regular meeting of the society having been postponed until the completion of the equestrian statue of Major-Gen. George H. Thomas, at Washington, the artist, Mr. Ward, has given positive assurance that the statue will be completed early in June of this year. It is therefore thought best by those having in charge the announcement of the date and place of holding the next reunion, to await the completion of the statue, and then hold the reunion in Washington, that the members of the society may be present and participate in the ceremonies attending the unveiling of this monument to our old commander. Should any considerable number of members, however, object by letter, their requests will be duly considered, and the time of meeting be announced hereafter."

HOLDERS OF OVERISSUED STOCK.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 18.—In the Common Pleas Court, to-day, Judge Hare delivered an opinion in the matter of the overissue of stock of the Philadelphia and Darby Railway Company. The question was as to the legal status of the holders of the fraudulent stock. He adjudged that the complainants who hold genuine certificates were entitled to have the stock transferred to them on the corporate books of the company, and the complainants whose certificates exceeded the limits prescribed by the charter were entitled to a sum equalling the value of the shares claimed by them when the case is again before the Master, and the damages are again assessed.

AN ALDERMAN'S SUDDEN DEATH.

HAMILTON, Ontario, Jan. 18.—Alderman Kenny Fitzpatrick, the senior Alderman of this city, having been a member of the board for 17 years, died suddenly in the Council Chamber at midnight, while in the act of moving a resolution.

PROVING HIS FATHER A MURDERER.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Jan. 18.—Robert Anderson, on trial here for the murder of his wife, was found guilty yesterday and sentenced to be hanged. He was convicted on the testimony of his little son, who was present at the killing.

OBITUARY.

REV. HORATIO N. BRINSMADE.

Rev. Horatio N. Brinsmade, D. D., died at his residence at Roseville, N. J., yesterday morning from disease of the heart. Deceased was the son of Dr. Thomas C. and Elizabeth G. Brinsmade, and was born in New-Hartford, Conn., Dec. 23, 1798. He graduated from Princeton in 1822, and studied theology with Rev. Joel Hawes one year longer. For nine years he was an instructor in the Deaf and Dumb Institute at Hartford. In 1828 he was ordained by the North Congregational Association, and preached for one year at Hartford. In 1831 he went to Collinsville and established a church, where he remained until 1834, when he went to Pittsfield, Mass., where he was Pastor until 1841. In that year he was called to the pastorate of the Third Presbyterian Church, of Newark. In 1853 he resigned on account of his wife's health, and went to Beloit, Wis., where he was Pastor of the First Congregational Church for seven years. In 1860 he returned to Newark, and became in charge of Wickliffe Chapel, and remained in charge until his death, though of late years he has only preached occasionally. He was a Trustee of Williams College for 17 years. He will be a daughter of Rev. Joseph Washburn, of Farmington, Conn.

OBITUARY NOTES.

Rev. Dr. H. N. Brinsmade, age 80 years, died suddenly yesterday at Newark, N. J., from heart disease. He was formerly Pastor of the Third and Wickliffe Presbyterian Churches in Newark, and had filled pulpits in Pittsfield, Mass., and Beloit, Wis.

Alfred Colt, Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of New-London County since July 1877, died Friday night from congestion of the lungs, after five days' illness. He was a representative in the Legislature in 1862, and a State Senator from the Seventh District in 1868.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

Michael Casey's house and barn, at Southampton, Mass., were burned yesterday morning. Casey's son, 7 years old, perished in the burning house, and the rest of the family barely escaped. The loss on the buildings was $800.

The Cincinnati Tin and Japan Company's factory, on Pearl-street, was damaged by fire yesterday morning to the extent of $6,000; fully insured in the Mutual Fire Companies.

The unoccupied house and barn of Dr. Otis Fernald, at Agger's Village, Mass., was burned by an incendiary last night. Loss, $8,000; insured in the Merrimac Mutual.

R. & C. Snow's grist mill, at Ware Village, Mass., was destroyed by an incendiary fire Friday night. The loss is $5,500; insured for $4,000.

The Jesuit church, on Esplanade Hill, Quebec, was injured by fire this morning to the extent of $8,000.

THE COMING CUE CONTEST.

SEXTON WITHDRAWS.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE CHAMPION BILLIARD TOURNAMENT COMPLETED—MEETING OF THE PLAYERS.

Everything is now in readiness for the opening of the great battle of the cues, and, notwithstanding the retirement of the champion, Sexton, at the eleventh hour, the Brunswick & Balke tournament will begin to-morrow evening at Cooper Institute, with Albert Garnier and Jacob Schaefer as the players. Much interest has been taken by the public in the tournament, and, although the best player retires, there are still enough good players left to assure fine exhibitions. It is predicted that this tournament will develop more brilliant play than has ever been witnessed in the Metropolis, for in their practice the different experts have been unusually successful in netting large runs, and have surprised even the billiard fraternity itself. Garnier, especially, has been developing his powers to a marked degree, and is regarded as a formidable adversary by all the contestants. The list of competitors, as it now stands, omitting the names of Joseph Dion, retired on account of actual sickness, and William Sexton, comprises Jacob Schaefer, George Slosson, Albert Garnier, Thomas Gallagher, A. P. Rudolphe, Randolph Heiser, and Maurice Daly, seven in all. The tournament was originally arranged to cover three weeks, but it will now only continue about two and a half weeks. It has been arranged to play one game on the night of the opening, and two games daily thereafter until the close of the competition. The afternoon games open at 2:30 o'clock promptly, and the evening contests at 8 o'clock. The purses are as follows: Amounting $2,100 in gold, divided into a first prize of $1,000, a second of $600, a third of $300, and a fourth of $200. The winner of the first prize will also receive an emblem valued at $500, typical of the billiard championship of the world. The games will be played upon a quick-cushion table, and will be watched with interest by billiard players, as affording a means of judging of the relative qualities of the slow and quick cushion so far as general accuracy is concerned. The great hall of the Union, in which the contests take place, has not been considered well adapted to billiard exhibitions, but changes have been made which, it is claimed, will to a very large extent neutralize the defects as far as a good view of the players and the table are concerned. The five lower rows of chairs have been removed, and a low platform has been built in their place, upon which the table will be placed so as to afford a view of its baize-covered surface from all points of the hall.

The contestants held their final meeting yesterday to determine the general details of the play. There were present Messrs. Garnier, Schaefer, Slosson, Heiser, and Daly, Rudolphe and Gallagher being represented by proxy. It was agreed that the games should be governed by the rule adopted at the International Congress, the old rule limiting the play on "crotched" balls to three strokes remaining in force. The experts chose Michael Geary, the ex-champion, for referee, and G. H. Ellis for umpire. Should the visits to change the occupants of these two important posts if sufficient cause arose. The following letter, addressed to Mr. L. C. Newhall, the manager of the tournament, received on Friday evening, was then read:

My recent and continued ill-health has prevented me from giving proper attention to practice for the approaching tournament, and I feel I would not be able to do justice either to myself or the public were I to take part therein. Under these circumstances, I deem it best to withdraw from the list of contestants.

WILLIAM SEXTON.

To this the manager replied that, in view of all the circumstances, he agreed with the champion that the wisest course for him would be not to play in the forthcoming tournament. Sexton's action was the chief topic of comment in billiard circles yesterday, and was generally condemned, the contestants themselves expressing disapproval of his withdrawal. In withdrawing he has broken his express promise to play which accompanied his signing of the articles of agreement, and this fact of course is greatly to be regretted, as it will, without doubt, strike a severe blow at his popularity with the public. Without regard to the motives that prompted his withdrawal, the course is considered weak, for he has had practice, and played exhibition games in Albany three days ago.

AN OLD EXHIBITION LION DEAD.

From the Janesville (Wis.) Gazette, Jan. 11.

"Parker," the old lion, who season after season, has been gazed upon by thousands who have crowded to see Burr Robbins' circus and menagerie, is no more. Yesterday afternoon he breathed his last, old age and its infirmities having weakened him so that death had an easy victory over him. He was a very large animal, and was among the first performing lions ever exhibited in this country. He was among the first tamed by Crocket. Crocket, in spite of the warnings of friends, entered the cage occupied by "Parker" and other lions. "Parker" pounced upon him and a fierce struggle ensued, but Crocket came forth conqueror. The lion got his revenge on man, however, in 1862 he broke from his cage in Astley's amphitheatre, in London, where he was on exhibition, and pouncing upon Jarvey, who was Crocket's assistant, killed him instantly with his fangs. Not content with having killed his keeper, he tossed his limp and lifeless body to and fro, as a cat would a dead mouse. When Crocket appeared on the scene with the remains in his charge, a fierce struggle ensued. Crocket procured blankets, and succeeded in covering them with spirits, fastened them to long poles and set fire to them. By thrusting these hot flames into the very face of the wild lion, the animal was frightened and made to walk back into his cell where he was secured. "Parker" was afterward housed in the Zoological Garden at London, where he was visited by hundreds. The lion was brought to this country in 1868 in connection with the European circus, and at the sale of that concern in 1872 was purchased by Mr. Robbins. "Parker" has felt the infirmities of age for several months, and it has been with some difficulty, toward the last of the season, that he could mount the cage, on top of which he was always posed during the street parades. For the past few weeks he has grown feebler, and though his appetite kept good, the food did not seem to strengthen him, and, worn out at last, he closed his record.

SOUTHERN "GOOD-WILL."

A local correspondent of the Boston Advertiser writes: "Those who have no 'sectional' or other kind of dislike or hatred for the white people of the South are dissatisfied with such expressions of good-will as are contained in the private letter from a gentleman in Bennettville, S. C., published in your issue of to-day, for the reason that the good-will seems to be of so little practical value. To illustrate: Some of us continue to be interested in the education of the freedmen. We try to work in a perfectly legitimate, unobtrusive, and unobjectionable manner. In the town of Aiken, S. C., the only building that is not or cannot be insured is the school-house for colored children. The risk is declined by the insurance companies because the destruction of that kind of building by incendiaries or mobs is apprehended. The companies are right. Since the first of the year the fences has been destroyed and the building fired. Little commercial facts like these, (many more could be given,) that are quite beyond the reach of enough very much more with the well-wishers of the South than do rhetorical phrases about the 'Southern heart' and 'rivers of blood.'"

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS DISCUSSED.

MODIFICATION OF THE SUGAR DUTIES.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The oft-reiterated, interesting, and most valuable articles published in your influential journal on the economic questions of the day, induce me to ask the favor of reviewing the proposed sugar tariff in your columns. For the last 13 months the agitation on the so-called sugar tariff has unceasingly been before the public. There has been so much said and written on the subject, that the public in general has become quite bewildered to comprehend what it is all about. I desire, if possible, to give a synopsis of the whole question before I go into the proposed tariff alteration. In 1861, the so-called Dutch standard, or color test on raw sugar was adopted, as a means of collecting duties, and, after a few changes in the rates, the final duty, in 1866, was adopted, as follows:

	Per Pound Duty.
On sugar not above No. 12 in color	3 cents
On sugar above No. 12 and not above No. 16	3½ cents
On sugar above No. 16 and not above No. 20	4 cents

This tariff was in operation until July 14, 1870, when it was altered for the tariff now in force. It will be observed that in the tariff above quoted No. 12 was the lowest number, and 3 cents per pound was the lowest duty.

Now, it should be understood, that sugar No. 12 in color, is necessarily 12° of color advanced in raw sugar, and holds the same relation in its quality as a raw material that cleaned and scoured wool holds to unwashed wool. That is to say, if a duty of 3 cents a pound was levied on all raw wool unwashed, washed, or scoured, people would prefer to import the foreign washed and scoured wool, inasmuch as the duty would be so much less on an ad valorem basis on scoured wool than on uncleaned wool. The case with raw sugar was exactly the same. From the date of fixing a duty of 3 cents a pound on raw sugar, beginning with No. 12, it gave almost a monopoly to Cuba, that island being in a position to produce the better article.

As an incontrovertible fact, by the official returns of 1869-70, when this duty was in full force, we imported during that year a total amount of 1,160,460,114 pounds sugar, of which Cuba and Porto Rico sent us 932,239,525 pounds, and the rest of the world only about 228,000,000 pounds. In other words, Cuba and Porto Rico, during the 3-cent. tariff on sugar up to No. 12, supplied this country with about 81 per cent. of foreign imported raw sugar. When it was found that this one-rate duty arrangement, up to No. 12, deprived our refiners and merchants from importing and using the low grades of sugar which had in the meantime found a market in England, a combination of refiners and importers got to work to upset this tariff so much in favor of Cuba, and in 1870 the present sugar-tariff was adopted, which is in short as follows:

	Per pound.
On melado and think syrup	1½ cents.
On raw sugar up to No. 7	1¾ cents.
And not above No. 10	2 cents.

This arrangement was simply to allow the lower grades of raw sugar to be imported under the new tariff. The change of this more extended tariff in raw sugars was really marvelous. In 1872, the first year of this new law being in full force, the importation of raw sugars increased as follows:

	1870. Under 3 Cents Duty. Pounds.	1872. Under Free, & 3 cent Duty. Pounds.
Total importation of raw sugar	1,160,460,000	1,457,294,000
Low-grade sugars from all countries except Cuba	228,120,000	413,149,000
Sugar imported from Cuba and Porto Rico	932,339,000	1,044,143,000

At a glance it will be seen that the increase in the importation of raw sugar from Cuba was about 11¼ per cent., and from the rest of the world it was over 80 per cent.

Nor has the effect of this tariff changed in seven years. For we find that in 1877 the whole importation of Cuba and Porto Rico sugars was 988,897,728 pounds, nearly 60,000,000 pounds less than in 1872, and only 56,000,000 pounds more than in 1870, while the increase from the rest of the world of sugar from all the rest of the world reached in 1877 to nearly 600,000,000 pounds—the exact figures are 595,265,195 pounds. When we coolly and statistically analyze these figures we must come to the conclusion that: First, Cuba is making the higher grade of sugar, having the means to employ slave labor to make immense quantities and the money for erecting expensive machinery to produce centrifugal sugar; second, that Cuba finds a ready and large market slipping away from her by the present tariff, or in fact any tariff that will allow our importers and refiners to buy a low-grade cheap foreign sugar; third and last, that the whole tariff agitation, including the charges of adulteration, or any other abominable charge, is simply a well-calculated project to get one rate of duty on raw sugar up to No. 13, the very sugar Cuba can produce, which must keep nearly all the sugar from Brazil, South America, Manila, China, and many of the West India islands out of our market.

The time chosen by Cuba and her friends for such a change was very propitious. Our present tariff levies duties by the color test only, regardless of value. Now, in order to evade the higher duty, some cargoes of Demerara sugars were said to have been artificially colored, that is to say, a high-priced and light-color sugar was made dark in order to pay less duty. This grievance the Treasury tried to correct. But, sooth to say, there is really no remedy in law for as our Tariff is now, the grocers and producers coloring the sugar. But the grievance was there, and the Treasury wants a law to rectify it. During the last session of Congress, the Secretary called attention to it, and it was generally conceded, that inasmuch as the polariscope is used by the buyers and sellers in our immense sugar market as a test to ascertain the value of raw sugar by its saccharine strength, that the Government should avail itself of the same means to use it as a detective to discover the value, if not the color, of raw sugar. Then began the agitation for a one-rate of duty on all raw sugar up to No. 13, and as I have shown, would throw the advantage to Cuba for her better class of sugar and deprive us of buying all lower grades of sugar elsewhere. When it was found that such a tariff was rather against the freedom of allowing people to buy a raw product, and especially made so by an act of Congress, another ally was brought in by these one-rate-of-duty advocates, and that was the adulteration scare.

Now, this adulteration of sugars, if it exists, is entirely another issue, and it is an imposition upon the common sense of the people to make them believe that one rate of duty up to No. 13 would prevent it. Let it be understood that a No. 13 sugar is a raw sugar and must be refined here. If, therefore, refiners add sawdust, No. 10 sugars in nothing them in color up to No. 20, why in the world could or would they not adulterate the No. 20 sugar made out of No. 13? Therefore the adulteration cry, although a very proper matter for investigation by every Board of Health in the country, for the protection of consumers, has no more to do with the tariff than we as a nation have to do with England's quarrel with Shere Ali. But the cry was a good one to oppose, and we find that the Ways and Means Committee have really agreed 7 to 4, to adopt a one-color rate up to No. 13, which simply means a tariff for and in favor of Cuba.

Should such a tariff pass, we would most decidedly be deprived of exchanging our own manufactures with the low-grade-sugar producing countries of the world. I beg most emphatically to state that as a free trader I look upon a law which deprives our importers of the privilege of buying a low-priced raw product, such as sugar, as most unjust and disastrous. During the 18 months of agitation on the sugar tariff, whether it was by the refiners, merchants, the Treasury, Cuban slaveholders, or Louisiana planters, no one has ever agitated the question of reducing the duty on sugar, say to 1 cent a pound. The great public, the real consumers and tax-payers, are left out of this question entirely. In fact, the American consumers hold the same relation to the tariff question that the eternal pitcher holds to the well. If the stone is flung at the pitcher, woe to the pitcher, and if the pitcher is flung at the stone, woe to the pitcher also; in every case woe to the pitcher. Whatever changes are made in this sugar tariff, no relief will be felt by the consumers. The tariff will exact its full pound of flesh, which, in this instance, is about 50 to 60 per cent. duty on sugar on the average.

TICKET COLLECTION ON THE EAST SIDE ROAD.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I have read and heard much concerning the lamentable and incompetent management of the New-York Elevated Railroad, but I have seen nothing concerning the utter want of system prevailing on that line in the matter of collecting tickets. A passenger by the Metropolitan line buys a ticket and knows exactly what to do with it, viz., to retain it until he reaches his destination, and then deposit it in the ticket-box, having his attention called to the matter in a gentlemanly way, if for any reason he may have forgotten it. But on the New-York line he is at an utter loss to know what to do with his ticket—whether to hand it to the brakeman or conductor when he gets on, to keep it until the conductor comes through the car for it, or to retain it until he gets off and then deliver it to some one empowered to receive it. All these three methods are practiced on the New-York Elevated Railroad, much to the confusion and annoyance of passengers. On getting off a train a few mornings ago, having put my ticket in my pocket to protect my hands from the cold, and not having it in mind, I was compelled to hear the sarcastic suggestion that I had better remember the matter in future. It would seem, notwithstanding the fact that the trains of this road average some 27,000 miles per day, as stated in President Field's report, that the blundering (mis)managers are not able successfully to cope with the simple matter of the collection of tickets, to say nothing of other and weightier matters in which they have shown such incompetency and disregard for the public's needs and the public's rights.

IN DEFENSE OF THE EAST SIDE ROAD.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

As your paper has probably a greater circulation upon the East Side than any other New-York daily, and as the columns of the press seem to be open for the complaints and criticisms of the public as regards the defective and faulty construction and inefficient management of the New-York Elevated Railroad, will you kindly allow me a small space for the purpose of taking a common-sense view of the other side of the question? that is, to give the railroad company due credit for the herculean efforts they have made, and are still making, to give the citizens of the East Side the benefits and conveniences of rapid transit, and as I am a resident of the East Side, and am glad to avail myself of the privilege of getting to my business in about one-third the time formerly consumed, and as I have failed to see the abuses complained of, I desire to offer my testimony in rebuttal of many of the statements made by my illustrious predecessors.

In the columns of THE NEW-YORK TIMES of Jan. 5 a most bitter attack is made upon the construction and management of the New-York Elevated Railroad, commencing with this statement: "Built as cheaply as possible, equipped as poorly as possible, run as inconveniently as possible, and with an eye to the biggest possible profits." The gentleman who said this is decidedly in error throughout. As regards the construction of the road, it has been built under the direction and supervision of the best engineering talent in this country. The plans have been drawn under a most careful and thorough calculation as to strain, lateral pressure, crushing weight, tensile strength, and oscillation, experimented upon and thoroughly tested before the work was commenced. The gentleman at the head of the engineering department is well known as the best that can be obtained, and his previous reputation is such that his fitness for the position he now occupies is established beyond question. The work has been prosecuted and carried forward under the supervision and inspection of a thoroughly capable and well-qualified corps of engineers and inspectors, who have directed and watched the building of every pier, the setting of every column, and the laying of every rail from the Battery to Harlem River. Every pound of iron has been tested, and every foot of timber has been thoroughly inspected. All defective work has been reconstructed, and all defective material has been rejected and thrown out. The remark has often been made in my hearing that "that thing on stilts is going to tumble down one of these days." Dismiss your fears, gentlemen. That thing is not going to fall. It was built to stay. So much for the construction of the road.

"Equipped as poorly as possible." Now, as regards the equipment of the road. The engines were selected out of the many offered, on account of their combining the latest and best principles known, as well as for their fitness for the work required. The cars are built of iron and gold-plated glass, and are the best rolling stock of a rival corporation, it is true, but they are well adapted to the work, and are all that any sensible passenger requires. What the people want is rapid transit and low fares, not luxurious drawing-room cars at high rates for the ride of 15, 25, or 30 minutes. A great complaint is made about their not being heated. Well, the management are doing all that can be done, I understand, to remove that objection. At the same time I had rather ride in a loaded car without fire (and I speak for others as well as for myself) than to ride in one heated up to 70°, 80°, or 90°, with the breaths of 75 to 100 persons mingled together, thereby producing an effluvia or malaria insupportable and highly dangerous to health. Who re colds are contracted is not from riding in a cold car, but from getting out of a heated car with a temperature of 90° into an atmosphere of 10° or 20°. So much for rolling stock and equipment.

"Run as inconveniently as possible." The gentlemen are again in error. On the contrary, common sense would show to any well-balanced mind that it is for the interest of the company to accommodate as many of the traveling public as they can, for therein lies the profits of their business, and the facts of the case are that the management are doing all that lies in their power to increase the number of their trains and the capacity of the road. The work is still in an unfinished condition as regards terminal facilities; it was opened the middle of July last year, and at the earliest practicable moment, to satisfy the demands of the people. Complaints were the order of the day at the slowness or tardiness of the company in completing the road, when at the same time the work was being pushed night and day. And there is no instance on record where the same amount of work (of a like nature) has been completed in anything like the same time. And now, after the road has been open less than three weeks, it is expected to work as smoothly and systematically as though it had been open for years. The demand upon the capacity of the road is altogether unprecedented. No one expected that the whole city would day would carry anything like the number of passengers that are daily being transported over the line.

Is it any fault of the management that more passengers demand transportation over the road than it can accommodate at the present time with its cramped terminal facilities and incomplete condition? The name and reputation of its present General Manager is a guarantee that all that can be done will be done to increase its carrying capacity at the earliest possible moment.

"Run with an eye to the biggest profits possible." That the New-York Elevated Railroad Company expect and desire to realize a profit on their tremendous outlay of money is probable. What company does not? Does the merchant lease or build his store, stock it with goods, and employ clerks and salesmen for the purpose of losing money? People generally think not. So much for the profit side of the argument. A word for the hard-worked and patient trainmen. Complaints are daily made about the inactivity and incompetency of conductors and brakemen without, I believe, any just cause. I have failed to see a single instance in point. On the contrary, I never saw (and I have seen a great many) a more patient, obliging, polite corps of men on any road. They are subjected to the most trying ordeal that any men in the same position ever suffered. If it is trying to the passengers, is it not doubly so to the trainmen, especially between the hours of 5:30 and 7:30 A. M. and 5 and 7 P. M.? Hustled, pushed, and crowded by an ugly, hungry crowd until they are exasperated beyond measure, and until it becomes almost a physical impossibility for them to perform the arduous duties of their respective positions, if they had not the patience of Job they would retaliate, but I have failed to hear or see a single word of incivility or act of incompetency. A few nights ago I heard a passenger make the remark: "They have got the biggest set of loafers on this road that can be found in the City," when the brakeman with whom he had attempted to quarrel had not done or said a single act or word of incivility. It seemed to me that the passenger was the biggest loafer of the two.

A word to certain passengers, and I have done: Try and recognize the necessities of the case and mutually accommodate each other. Try and assist the trainmen rather than hinder and by your acts in their arduous duties. Do not think or fancy that your little 5-cent nickel is any larger or worth any more than that of any other passenger, or that it entitles you to say more privileges or that it gives you the right to take charge of and run the train. Try and accommodate each other; do not obstruct passengers who want to get off, and when you are once on, do not try to prevent others from doing likewise. Do not block up doorways to the exclusion of passengers who want to get on the train and get to their homes as well as yourself. Every night the doorways of the New-York Elevated Railroad trains are blocked up by a loafer-ish crowd, who utterly refuse to move forward or listen to the entreaties of the brakeman. They jeer and hustle the brakeman, and laugh and hoot at the efforts of a tired and impatient mass of passengers who want to get on the train and get to their homes, as well as those loafers I refer to. A thorough application of a policeman's locust upon their thick and ugly heads might have a beneficial effect, but moral suasion or appeals to them as gentlemen have no effect whatever. Correct these abuses and follies, and the New-York Elevated Railroad can give passengers more and better accommodations.

THE PLATFORM AND THE STAGE.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Miss Dickinson, in her new lecture on "The Platform and Stage," says a good many rather clever things, but certainly one of her statements is so utterly opposed to the fact that I desire to protest against its passing current as truth. Of our churches, the lecturer remarks that in a majority of cases "you will find a thoroughly conscientious man giving to his hungry audience a stone when they ask for living bread—music that neither thrills nor exalts." The lecturer then indulges in a pean over the rowdy b'hoys who shout in the galleries of the theatres, and declares that "everybody likes the jolly fellow, even if he is in shirt-sleeves or a dirty coat."

Miss Dickinson complains that the church is not made "a place which people want to enter, a place with which they have the same pleasant associations they have with the theatre." Each to his taste, and no one need find fault with Miss Dickinson for preferring the presence of the "b'hoys" in the gallery to the class of people usually found in our churches. But when Miss Dickinson further said that the poorly-clad men and women can find no place in our churches, she certainly made a misstatement. She refers to "well-to-do" people, who themselves stands by the door, they are not politely invited to remain, but impolitely shown out of the door by one of the servants of the Master who "is no respecter of persons." Miss Dickinson confessed to having "shouted herself hoarse" at the play, and if she can listen unmoved to the sublime musical compositions as rendered at many of our churches, is it not her own fault? For my part, I have enjoyed the thrilling excitation of religious musical compositions rather more even than the company of lively "good fellows" independent of the theatre. But I just want to tell Miss Dickinson that the sale of strengthening her argument, should Miss Dickinson make the second statement I have quoted? Who ever saw such an act? Who ever saw a properly-clad person "impolitely shown out" of a church, unless, indeed, he was "drunk or disorderly," when even the "b'hoys" would probably hustle him out of the gallery of a theatre if he should venture there. What Dickinson means to be in spiteful ignorance of the customs of our churches, but she should not "set down aught in malice."

THE INTER-COLLEGIATE ASSOCIATION.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In your issue of Saturday, 11th inst., in the report of the meeting of the Inter-Collegiate Literary Association occurs the statement that, though the association had paid only 25 per cent. of the amount due to the prize-men of last year, the "representatives of the colleges declared themselves satisfied." Now, we, as prize-men of the association, are moved to inquire who these representatives were who declared themselves satisfied. Not the prize-men, surely, for we have never been consulted and are anything but satisfied. Could it have been the members of the managing body of the association? Then we have yet to learn by what right the association can repudiate a debt voluntarily incurred, and one from which it has not been released by its creditors. It does not seem to us to redound greatly to the honor of an association professing such high and disinterested aims as the Inter-Collegiate Literary Association to secure competitors from the different colleges by offering large prizes and then, when the time for payment arrives, for its managers to express themselves satisfied with their non-payment. It looks extremely well and dignified on paper to have a contest for mere honor and not for "pecuniary gain," (much better than to promise prizes and then not to pay them,) and in an economically-managed association might prove successful, but how has the association in question striven for that goal in the past? A brief review of its history may not be inappropriate in the present juncture: The association was formed originally for the purpose of counteracting the boating predilections evinced by several colleges, and to recall students to their books by stimulating their ambition. The association held its first prize contest in 1875, and, though the business depression was then as wide-spread as it is now, it secured pecuniary assistance sufficient to pay all the prizes and expenses of that year, and that too when the prizes were larger than last year. At that time the management was in the hands of the most eminent and energetic of its members. But the prosperity was short-lived. Some of the clerks or salesmen for the purpose of losing money? People generally think not. So much for the profit side of the argument. A word for the hard-worked and patient trainmen. Complaints are daily made about the inactivity and incompetency of conductors and brakemen without, I believe, any just cause. I have failed to see a single instance in point. THE ENCOURAGEMENT OF AMERICAN ART.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The article in THE TIMES of Jan. 8, urging better support of the art schools in the United States, is certainly deserving of careful consideration. Without such schools, adequately endowed and fully equipped with the necessary appliances, and under the guidance of trustworthy teachers, very little may be expected of the future of art in America.

But such schools are only a part of that which is needed to give impetus to our native art, and perhaps it is not overstating the case to maintain that far more than half of what ought to be done must be sought in a different direction. Granted that our schools, present and prospective, shall raise for us a most magnificent crop of able and talented artists: what shall we do with them, and what shall they do for us? Shall they go on, as heretofore, painting pictures "on speculation," forced to create a market for their wares, either through the advertising done for them by interested dealers, or by the influence which their standing in society may exercise in their favor? If that is to be the case, it may justly be feared that to encourage young men and women to devote themselves to the study of art, by tempting them with the facilities offered by the schools, will prove to be a cruel wrong, a snare, and a delusion, which will lead many to misery and despondency.

But it is even doubtful whether schools alone will be sufficient to raise such a crop. A national art—and such a one is aimed at by the writer of the article in question—was never yet called forth by "connoisseurs" buying pictures as articles of luxury, and simply with a view to furnishing their houses. A national art must be a national concern, and cannot be locked up in private cabinets, or classified under rubrics and headings in galleries. The art that is thus treated is dead. It becomes a matter of scientific interest, but it is no longer a living issue. If, therefore, we desire to see a national art arise, we must not rest contented with setting a lot of artists into this world, and then leaving them to struggle on as best they may, but we must also tax our energies to bring about the conditions under which these artists may thrive and prosper. How shall this be done?

Long before Squanderos brought together the remnants of antiques which formed the nucleus of what may be regarded as the first art school ever opened in Europe, long before the Academy was opened in the gardens of the Medici in which the youthful Michelangelo began his career as a sculptor, and several hundred years before the Carracci started their schools, from which went forth the artists known as eclectics, the foundations were laid for the grandeur of Italian art. Nor did regular and professed schools of art arise in the countries north of the Alps until the glories of northern art had faded or died out altogether. It may, indeed, be said, and in fact has been said, that the rise of schools and academies marks the beginning of the decline of art. The enemies of the academies (among which the writer of this article is not) will, however, have to be silenced, might, indeed, maintain with some show of reason, if history alone be consulted, that they are simply the death of art; and every one must admit, in view of this, that the stone men never be expected to create a national art. Schools, from their very nature, must be, in a certain sense, imitative and eclectic. They can at least teach the technical parts of art, but they can never supply inspiration.

What, then, was it that gave to the Italian art of the Renaissance its power and wealth? What is it that has made French art the admiration of the world? What is it that gives to the modern German its reawakening art of Germany during the first half of the present century? Not the schools, but the opportunities offered to the artists! What would Giotto have been without the wish of the church of Assisi, on which to display his talents? Or Masaccio without the Brancacci Chapel? Or Pietro Perugino without the Cambio? Or Andrea del Sarto without the Convent of the Scalzi? Or the whole brood of artists who worked there, without the Campo Santo at Pisa? Or Raphael without the Vatican and the Farnesina? And if any one wishes to know the secret of the strength of the Greek art, let him only look at the art item in the budget of the City of Paris, and he need not trouble himself to go back to the seventeenth century to find further hints as to the manner in which a national art may be developed. As to Germany, what would have become of the young men congregated in Rome about the year 1820 without the frescoes in the Casa Bartholdy, and where would Munich art now be had not King Louis been the patron of arts that he was? Of course, it will be said that the Munich art of to-day has little in common with the art of Cornelius, of Schnorr von Carolsfeld, and their contemporaries. But this seems true only at first sight. As well might it be said that the art of Phidias, on, better still, of Skopas and his cotemporaries, had nothing in common with the archaic sculptures of the Temple of Ægina. But it will be objected, we must first have the artists able to execute monumental works, and then the conditions in America are quite different from those in Europe, and no parallel can therefore be drawn between art here and there. The State, in fact, cannot be asked to do for art in the United States what it did in Italy or elsewhere.

Agreed, for argument's sake, that we have no writers before the eleventh volta such as the one pointed out above. How shall we get them? Shall we not go into the water before we have learned to swim? In that case, it is absolutely certain that we shall never get into the water, and shall never learn to swim. Italy did not stand by until she had a Raphael to decorate her walls. Generation after generation of painters had been employed in such work before the great son of the Renaissance dawned upon the world; and generation upon generation of those who employed the painters had gone on knocking off the walls the frescoes ordered by their predecessors, to make room for the works of new men, whose creations corresponded better to the more refined taste that had gradually arisen. We cannot, however, go to the other extreme, and maintain that the frescoes of such or such an old master were destroyed to make room for the paintings of younger men. But the destruction is to be deplored only from a historical point of view. For the development of Italian art it was absolutely necessary. For it was only the continued exercise of their faculties on a grand scale that made it possible for Italian artists to reach the highest eminence even in easel paintings.

The objection that the State has no business to meddle with art may appear to be more potent, but it is fallacious for two reasons. The first reason is that it will be most difficult to show why the State, if it builds at all, should not build beautifully and decorate becomingly what it has built; and the second is that, after all, the State, as such, did really comparatively little in the best days of the municipal republics of Italy to help along the development of art. The greater part of the orders given to the artists emanated from corporations of one kind or another, who took a pride in having their halls or the chapels dedicated or owned by them painted by the best artists of their day. The convents and congregations, the guilds and the associations of merchants vied with one another in works of this kind, and thus became the most powerful factors in the development of the national art of Italy. And here it is where we Americans may learn a profitable lesson. The hope of a national art will remain fruitless as long as almost the only form of art known to us shall be cabinet pictures, destined to be locked up in the private houses of wealthy citizens. But the national art which we long for will take its birth from the time when our corporations and our wealthy private citizens begin to imitate the example of the men of Italy of the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth centuries. When our exchanges shall be decorated like the Cambio of Perugia before alluded to, when the religiously-disposed shall feel it necessary to add the glories of art to their places of worship, when our legislative halls shall be covered with the creations of genius as were those of the public palaces of Italy, and when thus art will be found everywhere, even in the crowded haunts of heathens—then, and then only, may we begin to hope that our dreams of a national art may be realized.

A small beginning has been made, and the opening of the new Capitol at Albany may, perhaps, be recorded in future art-histories as one of the events which marked the opening of a new era. But the signals "were more ominous than distinguished."

The decoration of Trinity Church, in Boston, however divided opinions may be as to its merits, is another move in the same direction. But a vast field, which might be cultivated to the greatest advantage, both of artists and of the coming generations of the great body of American men and women, is still absolutely untouched. Our public and other school buildings are becoming more numerous, and are being better built from year to year. Many of them have commodious and well-proportioned halls, in which the pupils are gathered every morning and on every festive occasion, but these halls are greatly in their stern severity, whitened by the poor attempts at decoration made by some of the teachers have tended to make matters worse rather than to improve them. The only exception which we can at present recall is the hall of the Girls' High School, on Newton-street, Boston, which, by the munificence of some of the citizens of Boston, has received a wash of color, and has been tastefully decorated with casts of the Parthenon friezes and of a number of antique statues. What a glorious field these halls would offer for the brush of the painter! Will not some public-spirited citizen or citizens start the ball? Undoubtedly, one of these halls decorated as proposed, and emulation on the part of other wealthy men would soon cause other halls to similarly be benefitted. Or cannot the thing be done by association? To state an instance, there is in Germany a "Society for Historical Art," which has already caused several public places, and among them the hall of a school, to be painted in its stead. Cannot a similar association be called into life here? Such an association would be the best possible auxiliary of the art schools.

HOW CAROLINIANS FIGHT DUELS.

BITTER WORDS, A HOSTILE MEETING, TWO SHOTS EXCHANGED, NOBODY HURT, AND A RECONCILIATION—THE SAME OLD STORY.

Correspondence of the Cheraw (S. C.) News.

Many of your readers have doubtless seen copies of a bitter correspondence between Mr. James Cantey, of Camden, and Capt. W. B. Cash, of Chesterfield. The publication of that correspondence was followed by a circular from Mr. Cantey, in which he intimated that it would not have been well for Mr. Cash if he had uttered in his presence the words he had used in his letters. Soon after this circular was made public Cash went to Camden and remained on the streets some two or three hours. Cantey was in town, but made no attack, for the reason (as the writer is informed) that he was unwilling to endanger the lives of other persons. When Cash was leaving Camden Cantey sent a friend to inform him that he wished to fight him. This caused a renewal of the correspondence, and led to the sending of a challenge by Cantey to Cash. Mr. Alfred Brevard acted as friend for Mr. Cantey, and Mr. W. Bryan DeLeon acted for Capt. Cash. They agreed to fight with dueling pistols, at 10 paces, at Dubois' Bridge, at 12 M., on the 30th ult. Mr. Sanders required, as a condition of the fight, that both parties should be searched before placing or saddling for the fight. No one supposed Mr. Cantey would resort to such means of self-preservation, but as he had called Cash a blackguard, this condition was made in the way of precaution. Cantey had failed to send a challenge in reply to Cash's first letter, and had failed to attack him on the streets, many were disposed to believe that he did not intend to fight, and the odds in betting was decidedly against Cantey. But these speculations were all settled by prompt appearances on the ground of Mr. Cantey and 10 or 15 gentlemen from Camden, at 11.30 o'clock. At 12 o'clock Sanders and Brevard proceeded to take charge of the ground. The pegs are set, and they toss for the word. Sanders wins the word, and Brevard has the choice for positions. The pistols are loaded and the boys take their positions. All eyes are upon Cantey; he stands like a "stone wall," not a muscle moves. No one looks at Cash; he has been there before. Sanders gives the word, "Gentlemen, are you ready?" "Ready, ready," is the prompt reply. "Fire! one, two, three, halt!" Between "fire" and "one" Cash's pistol is off, sending the ball into the ground near Cantey's feet. Cash's fire drew Cantey's fire before his pistol was fairly up. This premature discharge of Cash's pistol was the result of some disarrangement of the set-trigger, caused by the extreme cold weather. The seconds proceeded to load for a second round; the word was given, and at "one" the smoke and fire fly from both pistols. Surgeons rush to their principals, and, after examination, it is found no serious injury has been done. Cash's ball has passed through Cantey's coat and vest, but so far as known to this writer, did not injure Mr. Cantey's person. Mr. Brevard now gives Mr. Sanders notice that the fight is over, that Mr. Cantey has no further claims against Mr. Cash. Every man on the ground looked happy, and seemed to rejoice at the result. Before leaving the ground, Cash walked up to Cantey and offered his hand, saying: "You are a very brave man. You have fought me gallantly, and I retract the epithet of coward which I applied to you." Cantey met him cordially, and said: "Thank you, Sir; and I retract the offensive expressions I have made to you."

LAST PEDESTRIANISM IN CANADA.

From the Toronto Globe, Jan. 17.

In the last 10 years a great many more Canadian ladies than formerly do their two or three miles a day, but the habit of taking a rapid breather habitually is not yet come into fashion, though there are encouraging indications that it soon will. Wealth is not yet so great here that many women can take mounted exercise, and of those who can afford saddle-horses too few indulge in the charming habit. They rather prefer lolling in carriages. Skating is not to be compared to walking—the monotony of the ice is less agreeable than the change in road and scenery, and the rink is a resort when all diversion is looked for more than health. It is to be hoped that the example of the Princess Louise will lead Canadian ladies to emulate her long tramps, and it she should visit the country other good results, besides making popular a healthful and delightful exercise, she will have earned a title to gratitude. In the Province of Quebec the deep snow tempts many ladies to long tramps over country and through the silent Winter forest on snow-shoes, but in Western Ontario that pleasure is denied. If our fair ones could know once the delights of steadily walking through a quiet Winter red-pine wood, of looking from every point down the long alleys, an either side of which the pink trunks rise, branchless, up for 50 feet; if they could once behold such a scene when the fine, powdery snow-flakes drop without disturbing down spaces as high and solemn as lofty vaulted aisles; if they could feel the curious charm of the light, swinging tracks made by forest fowl and small wild animals—tracks which come from nowhere and never end, and seem to add a loneliness to the intense quiet of nature—

THE HOUSEHOLD.

DELICACIES OF THE SEASON.

Hot-house strawberries are among the novelties of the season. They are to be found only in the fruit stores, and are an expensive luxury. Small cups, containing eight berries, sell at 41 each, and larger ones, holding 32 berries, sell at $2 50. The prices current for fruit of other kinds in the lower Broadway stores are as follows: Jamaica pineapples, per pair, 50 to 75 cents; California pears, per dozen, 75 cents to $1; Florida oranges, per dozen, 40 to 75 cents, and Valencia oranges 40 to 50 cents, the rates being regulated according to the size. Fancy apples sell in the same establishments at 30 cents per dozen, and bananas at 40 to 75 cents per dozen. In the markets and on the fruit-stands inferior qualities of fruit are sold at lower rates. In Washington Market catawba grapes sell at 30 cents per three-pound box, apples at $2 to $3 per barrel, California pears at 40 cents to $1 per dozen, Florida oranges at 30 to 50 cents per dozen, and Valencia oranges sell in the streets at the rate of 20 for 25 cents, but they are not of very good quality. Fresh tomatoes are in larger supply and cheaper. A considerable quantity was received a few days ago from Nassau, New-Providence; they are selling at the rate of 75 cents per five-quart box. The best in market come from Florida and Bermuda, and sell at $1 25 per box, holding six quarts. By the single quart, the price for all kinds is 30 cents. Hot-house tomatoes sell in the fruit stores at 75 cents per pound, their freshness being the great point in their favor. Radishes raised under glass sell at 5 cents per bunch, and celery at 6 to 10 cents per bunch. Honey is plentiful and cheap. White clover sells at 38 cents per 2-pound box, and buckwheat at 28 cents. Eggs from near-by points sell at 36 cents per dozen, and Southern and Western at 28 cents; limed eggs are a little cheaper. The newest thing in the fish markets is pompano, caught in the Gulf of Mexico. They sell at 50 to 75 cents per pound. One weighing 16 pounds, the biggest ever caught, according to the testimony of the oldest fisherman, was exhibited yesterday in Washington Market. Shad is in larger supply and lower, selling at 35 to 40 cents each.

RECEIPTS FOR THE TABLE.

ENGLISH PLUM PUDDING.—One pound of flour, one pound of raisins, one pound of currants, one pound of sugar, (good weight,) one pound of suet, chopped fine, one pound of almonds, chopped fine, juice of two lemons, grated rind of one, one nutmeg, half an ounce of cinnamon, half an ounce of allspice, half of a 5-cents loaf of bread grated, eight eggs, two glasses of brandy, one tablespoonful of salt. Mix with beer, and boil eight hours in water enough to cover.—L.

MINCE PIES, I.—One coffee-cupful of minced meat, three cupfuls of apple, half a cupful of suet, two pounds of raisins, chopped a little, two pounds of currants, one ounce of ground mace, half an ounce of cloves, a little salt, and sweeten to the taste; one cupful of brandy, and three cupfuls of cider.—LILLIE.

MINCE PIES, II.—Take two cupfuls of minced meat, two of large fresh raisins, boiled, one of citron, two apples, one lemon, peeled, and chopped fine, one of molasses, one of sugar, one nutmeg, half teaspoonful ground cinnamon, one bottle of russet cider; for crust, two cupfuls of butter, four of powdered sugar. This will bake four pies; they should bake one hour in a moderate oven; if the oven is too hot the juice will run out.—M. A. W.

SCOTCH SHORT-CAKE.—One pound of butter, half pound of sugar, one and three-quarter pounds of flour; cream the sugar and butter, and roll out in cakes one-half inch thick.—ASTORIA.

SCOTCH SHORT BREAD, II.—One pound flour, half pound butter, one-fourth pound sugar; cream the butter and sugar together and add the flour. Roll it half an inch thick and bake slowly. If the cake is preferred very sweet use six ounces sugar.—Mrs. B.

INDIAN LOAF.—Take one pint of sour milk, one-half pint of sweet milk, one teacupful of molasses, one-half teacupful of butter, two teaspoonfuls of saleratus, one large teaspoonful of salt, three eggs, one pint of wheat flour, one quart of yellow Indian meal; bake in a deep tin basin in an oven of same heat as for cake, for one and a half hours.—C.

FRITTERS.—One pint of milk, one egg well beaten, flour to make a rather stiff batter; before dropping into the boiling lard, add one teaspoonful of baking powder. May be varied by adding sliced apples.—COUSIN.

CUSTARD PIE.—One quart milk, three eggs, one tablespoonful corn starch, one dessert spoonful extract vanilla, one cupful sugar, a very small pinch salt; beat the yolks and eggs together, mix the corn starch in a little of the milk, and stir all well together. This is far superior to the ordinary custard pie made with four eggs. Less sugar may be used if preferred.—COUSIN.

CRANBERRY JELLY.—Wash and pick over two quarts of cranberries, add one pint of cold water, and place on a quick fire in porcelain-lined saucepan, stir occasionally to prevent burning, when soft mash through a colander, add one pound of sugar, boil 10 minutes, and pour into fancy molds.—LILLIE.

TO SEASON SAUSAGE.—Use pepper, salt, and sage to suit the taste, and mix thoroughly.—BLUE RIDGE.

ONE WAY TO COOK TRIPE.—Cut your tripe in small pieces, put it on the fire and par-boil it; take a small onion, cut it in pieces, and fry in butter, one can of tomatoes, and pour in your fried onion, with butter, pepper, salt, and a little sugar, and when boiled well strain the water from your tripe.

INFORMATION WANTED.

A bill of fare for a dinner for five or six persons.

How to clean tripe such as is sold in the markets.

A receipt for potato salad.

How to gild horseshoes for decorating.

How to cleanse brass from rust or other stains.

How to manufacture bay rum for home use.

FOLK-LORE IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Nature draws attention to a society recently formed at Cape Town for the collection of South African folk-lore. An explanatory circular says: "The existence among the aboriginal nations of South Africa of a very extensive traditionary literature is a well-known fact. Not a few stories forming part of this literature have been written down; and as in some of them terms occur which no longer appear to be used in colonial language, and the meanings of which are, in many instances, not fully understood, there is no doubt that we meet in them with likely productions of antiquity handed down to the present generation in a somewhat similar manner to that in which the Homeric poems reached the age of Pisistratus. But European civilization is shining ground under the retrospective, and within a few years the opportunities for collecting South African folk-lore will be, if not altogether lost, at least far less frequent than they are now. This would be a great loss to 'the science of man,' particularly as there is much which is exceptionally primitive in the languages and ideas of the South African aboriginal races. There are not a few missionaries and other Europeans in South Africa who have ample opportunities for collecting South African folk-lore. Some of these, however, are not aware of the importance of such collections, and those who are would be greatly encouraged in the task of making them if a channel for their speedy publication existed. In the hope of contributing toward the collection of South African traditionary literature, a Folk-Lore Society is about to be formed at Cape Town, which already includes members in distant parts of South Africa. The publication of a small periodical every second month is also proposed by the society."

MARRIED IN A SLEIGH AT TWO IN THE MORNING.

From the Pittsburg (Penn.) Commercial, Jan. 17.

The supposed marriage of Harvey Weeden and Miss Lizzie Anderson, by Rev. Mr. Alexander, of Leetonia, Ohio, is likely to lead to serious trouble. The young woman protests that she was married against her consent, and the minister's conduct is severely criticised. According to the story of the reverend gentleman, who is Pastor of the United Presbyterian Church at Leetonia, on the 26th day of December, at about 2 o'clock in the morning, he was awakened by Mr. Weeden, and asked to marry him and Miss Anderson; that, finding that the parties had no license, he, at the request of Mr. Weeden, got into the sleigh and accompanied them across the State line, and there performed the marriage ceremony in the public highway, they sitting in the sleigh; that the parties then returned to the residence of Mr. Van Skiver near Columbiana, and there took breakfast. The reverend gentleman says that both parties were not only willing but anxious to have the marriage ceremony performed. On the other hand, Miss Anderson says she accompanied Weeden for the purpose of attending a party at his mother's house in Columbiana; that when she got into the sleigh he declared her; that she begged him to take her home, but instead of doing so kept her in the sleigh, called up the minister, drove about four miles, and had a ceremony to which she did not consent; that after making back to the residence of Mrs. Weeden she made her escape and went home, where she has since been quite ill. William S. Anderson, of Austintown, a brother of the girl, and Con. Brown, visited Leetonia, and had a difficulty with the minister, Mr. Alexander, for which they are under bail to answer on Saturday next.

THE CHARGES AGAINST SENATOR GROVER

Speaking of the committee which made the report containing the serious charges against Senator Grover, the Portland Oregonian of the 6th inst. says: "Who are the authors of the report? There is but one Republican among them, and this fact is a sufficient answer to the charge that the committee was moved by partisan considerations in reporting the delinquencies of Democratic officials. The Legislature which appointed this committee is Democratic in both branches. A majority of the committees are Democrats of unexceptionable standing in their party. Mr. Galloway, of Yamhill, is a man in whose integrity his people have so much confidence that he has been twice elected to the Legislature from a Republican county. Mr. Thompson, of Wasco, is a man of highest standing for intelligence and honor, and a Democrat whose record, even in a party sense, has never been impeached. Mr. White, of Umatilla, though formerly a Republican, has acted consistently with the Democratic Party for many years past; and was elected to the Legislature by the highest majority given to any candidate in the stronges Democratic county of the State. Mr. Rees, of Jackson, though now acting as an independent, has a Democratic record of many years' standing, and never was a Republican. The only Republican on the committee is Mr. Thompson, of Multnomah, and he has never been an extreme partisan. The members of the committee are men whose lives disprove the assertion that they have been or could be actuated by 'personal spite' in any matter, and least of all in a matter of responsible official duty. The attempt to parry in this way will not do. The committee found official misconduct, and reported upon it; and their language, though always plain and direct, as it should be, is always temperate and discriminating."

HABITS OF THE TROUT.

AN AMATEUR FISHERMAN WHO DOES NOT BELIEVE THAT STRIKE THEIR PREY WITH THEIR TAILS.

A correspondent of the Dayton (Ohio) Journal does not believe that brook trout ever turn somersaults and strike a fly with their tail. He writes:

"Amateur fishermen, like amateur deer-hunters, are subject to nervous excitement, and the splash of a large fish after food on the surface of the water when the party is intently watching for something to turn up is slightly disturbing to the experienced. But the trout, as its name implies, Salmo fontanalis, trout of the fountains, is a dweller in cold, swift, bubbling water, in or where there are many springs, or in the tumultuous water under cascades. There it is in its element; strong, active, and alert in seeking for its food, and quick in taking it. Now, it is not to be supposed that the trout in the lakes of the Adirondacks are of this description. They lack the necessary element to make them typical—rapidly running water—they are not brook trout, but merely lazy loiterers in still water, and approach more nearly to the other branches of the salmonidæ, dwellers in deep, still water. But many of them are merely in transit through the little lakes to the creek beyond, which they find not so intolerable as mountain lakes in general by reason of the altitude; the high and abrupt mountains, where the slowly melting snow keeps the water cold during nearly the whole season; where the springs are large and abundant near the sides and beneath the lakes, and which are practically formations on a large scale, but not calculated to develop the characteristic of the brook trout. I have never penetrated into these wilds, but I have been on the Black River, running from them on the west above Trenton Falls, and on Lakes George and Champlain, in Western Massachusetts, and in the lakes and creeks in the mountains in North-western Connecticut. Then I have been at home with trout fishermen, and know the characteristics of brook trout. They are never found in the mountain lakes, and no trout fisherman ever expects to find them there. They are simply brook trout. They are a peculiar fish. Born in very rapid, cold water, they are endowed with great activity and strength, and they are very cautious, sagacious, and suspicious. The most tempting fly will scarcely move one to strike unless its tail would have seemed to strike the worm, especially if more distant from the fisherman, and then turning to catch it, it would seem to a careless observer an intentional part of the proceeding. Again, a trout will occasionally change its mind when on the point of striking, seeing something suspicious, but instantly reassured it will immediately seize the fly. Of course, the tail at such times will appear above the surface, and if it knocks the fly into the water (a very improbable circumstance) it is then less suspicious. And two trout may start for the same fly, and one of them will miss it, and its tail will generally rise above the surface of the water; and at a little distance, to an excited amateur, the fish will appear as one. It is astonishing how quickly a trout will strike at a moving object, and turn and seize it; but its aim is generally unerring. Much of their game is caught in this way. And, as a fly is generally a little above the surface, its head must appear instantly followed by the tail, which is generally the most prominent and noticeable. In fishering for pike this is well illustrated, as the fish strike at the point where the bait was, but, it having moved along in a stern chase it is obliged to strike twice, and it instantly turns for that purpose. A hawk will dart down for prey, and, when a few feet from the earth, will change to a horizontal movement, recurvey, and then take it.

"Beasts and fish of prey aim at precision, and they do not toy with and let another secure their game. A trout is no strategist, and as at certain seasons flies are a tempting and important element of food, instinct teaches it that the fly must be final—a miss would drive it away. Taking into consideration the known habits of the fish, its greed for food, its earnestness in searching for it, the speed and momentum of its rush, the fish intendsant on a mistake, the probability that it would resort to the clumsy method of first turning a somersault and hitting the fly with its tale, and then seeking for and catching it, is incredible to any trout fisherman, and only worthy of belief by one in a circumlocution office."

A CRIME FOR WHICH SWITZERLAND HAS NO DEATH PENALTY.

Geneva Correspondence of the London Times.

A man named Rennel was last week sentenced to imprisonment for life at Lucerne for a murder committed in circumstances peculiarly horrible Rennel was a blacksmith by trade, and while working at Chur he made the acquaintance of a girl named Margarethe Voegli. After a short stay at Chur, he went to Sursee, in Lucerne, whither he invited the girl, who, it appears, was pregnant, to come to him, promising to get her work in the neighborhood. Meanwhile, he became the affianced husband of another young woman, Josepha Soelli, who had a small property of her own. He sought to marry her; that she begred him to take her home, but instead of doing so kept her in the sleigh, called up the minister, drove about four miles, and had a ceremony to which she did not consent; that after making back to the residence of Mrs. Weeden she made her escape and went home, where she has since been quite ill. William S. Anderson, of Austintown, a brother of the girl, and Con. Brown, visited Leetonia, and had a difficulty with the minister, Mr. Alexander, for which they are under bail to answer on Saturday next.

MILITARY GOSSIP.

NATIONAL GUARD NOTES.

Col. John Rueger, commanding the Thirty-second Regiment, has made application for 600 blouses for his command.

Company B, Seventy-first Regiment, Capt. Stephen Curtis commanding, will have a ball at Irving Hall next Friday evening.

At a meeting of Company F, Twenty-second Regiment, last Tuesday evening, Charles F. Lutz was chosen Corporal vice Albert Mundhenk discharged.

Gen. W. G. Ward, commanding the First Brigade, has promoted Capt. George E. Dodge, Aide-de-Camp on his staff, to the position of Inspector, vacated by Major Herman Oelrichs recently.

The Skidmore Guards, Major Andrew Brown commanding, will have a grand banquet and reception at Terrace Garden Opera House, Fifty-eighth-street, near Lexington-avenue, on Friday evening, the 31st inst.

"Harris Guard," Company F, Tenth Regiment, Albany, has issued invitations to many prominent military gentlemen of this City to attend its reception and ball, at the regimental armory, No. 110 State-street, on Wednesday evening next.

Capt. Edward H. Mitchell, Fourteenth, and Second-Lieut. R. H. Narwood, Thirteenth, Regiments, have been ordered before the State Examining Board, which will convene at the armory of the Fourteenth Regiment on Tuesday evening next.

The New-York Rifle Club is to have a contest with the Empire Rifle Club, at 200 and 300 yards' distance, on Washington's Birthday, and has challenged the Bergen Point Rifle Club to shoot a match at 200 yards on the range belonging to the latter, with teams of 10 men each, at an early date.

Battery K, Artillery, Major A. Hoelze commanding, will give its twelfth annual ball at Teutonia Assembly Rooms, No. 160 Third-avenue, next Wednesday evening. Invitations have been extended to many members of the National Guard, and the prospects are in favor of a very pleasant entertainment.

The Forty-seventh Regiment, Brooklyn, Col. W. H. Brownell commanding, has decided to have an out-door parade on Washington's Birthday. Capts. Alonzo Brymer, Company I, and A. A. Doughty, Company B, have sent in their resignations. Company D celebrated its seventeenth anniversary by giving a ball at the Lyceum, last Thursday night.

Major R. V. Young, of the Eighth Regiment, is endeavoring to recruit a new company for that command at Greenpoint, Long Island. As an inducement, a full and complete uniform is offered to each recruit. A good opportunity is thus presented to such young men as desire to become members of the old "Washington Greys" at little or no expense.

Battery C, Artillery, Brooklyn, Major John Timmes commanding, held its annual ball at Military Hall on Monday evening last. Col. Rueger and staff, Thirty-second Regiment; Major Hayes and Lieut. Babcock, of Gen. Beebe's staff; Capt. Peter Bertsch, and a delegation from the "Jefferson" Horse Guard, and others were among the guests present.

The Veteran Association of the Seventy-first Regiment met on Friday evening last and elected officers as follows: Henry Martin, Colonel; T. Freeborn, Lieutenant-Colonel; Amos L. See, Major; D. L. Patrick, Adjutant; Dr. Dooley, Quartermaster; W. N. Philbrick, Paymaster; Dr. C. McMillan, Surgeon; Dr. J. B. Reynolds, Assistant Surgeon; C. E. Shade, Commissary of Subsistence.

The Second Division, Brooklyn, will draw $22,932 for its uniform-fund this year. Gen. Jourdan has issued orders directing the Brigade commanders to cause their inspectors to examine the books and records of the several organizations under their charge, and to report to him. Each inspector is directed to inspect the books and papers of the Flushing Company of Infantry, and Battery C, Artillery.

Orders have been issued to the Cadet Corps of the Twenty-third Regiment, Brooklyn, to assemble at the regimental armory for drill and instruction on Saturday evening, Jan. 25, and Friday evening, Feb. 7. Acting First Sergt. R. W. Gunsaulus-ser, of Company I, has resigned. Sergt. H. W. B. Howard has been appointed First Sergeant of Company A, and Corp. O. L. Middleton First Sergeant of Company C.

At a meeting of the military order Loyal Legion, on Wednesday evening last, Major-Gen. Francis J. Herron, late of the United States Volunteers, and Col. Nicholas Smith, late of the Nineteenth United States Infantry, were elected to membership. Companions Major-Gen. John M. Schofield and Major James H. Simpson, late United States Volunteers, were transferred from the Department of California to this City.

The Washington Grey Cavalry held its quarterly meeting at the armory last Thursday night, and elected civil officers as follows: Nelson Secor, Treasurer, and G. H. Bedell, Secretary. G. H. Bennett was elected Corporal. It was decided to hold its annual reception on Friday evening, Feb. 21. A Committee of Arrangements was appointed, as follows: Lieut. Woodhouse, Sergts. Wilson and Doscher, Corp. Dreyer, Privates Sager, Cruikshank, and Thelas.

There will be a session of the court-martial of the Twenty-third Regiment, Brooklyn, on Monday, the 27th inst., for the trial of Private William H. Macdonald, of Company B, on charges preferred by his superior officer, Capt. Charles E. Truslow. Major Alfred C. Barnes will preside. Warrants have been granted to the following non-commissioned officers in command: Orderly-Sergt. John W. Doscher; Sergt. William A. Underhill, and Corp. Charles J. Barnes.

At a meeting of Company F, Forty-seventh Regiment, Brooklyn, on Wednesday evening last, Henry J. Richardson was chosen First and Frank L. Wenzel Second Lieutenant. Company E has elected Charles E. Street Second Lieutenant, Harvey E. Rich Orderly Sergeant, James Heinrich and James McAleer Sergeants, J. Townsend Quartermaster Sergeant, and John S. Romain Corporal. The fifth annual dinner of the Veteran Association of this command is to take place next Thursday evening.

The event in military circles in Brooklyn this week is the concert of the Thirteenth Regiment, at the Academy of Music. Music will be furnished by Dodworth's Band. Vocal soloists will be Miss Kate Starke, Mrs. Isabella Palmer-Fassett, and George Werrenrath. Instrumental solos will be performed by Bowen, the cornet-player; H. B. Dodworth, cornet, and Carlo Coppa, euphonium. S. B. Mills and J. G. Binke will play the piano. A cornet quartet, in which the performers will be Bowen, Dodworth, Davis, and Bowell, is to be one of the features of the concert.

The Veteran Association of the Ninth Regiment will hold its annual meeting at the regimental armory to-morrow at 8 P. M. Reports of committees, amendments to the constitution, and election of officers will constitute the business to be transacted. A large number of guests attended the first hop for the season of the active regiment, at its armory on Tuesday evening last. The main drill-room was cheerfully decorated and most of the company officers were present to receive the invited guests. Dancing took place from 9 P. M. to 1 A. M.

The Convention of the National Guard Association is to be held at Albany on Wednesday and Thursday next. Col. C. A. H. Bartlett, the Secretary, has received notice that delegates will be present from the following organizations: Seventh, Eleventh, Third, Twenty-eighth, Twenty-ninth, Thirtieth, and Thirty-second Separate Companies of Infantry, and Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Twenty-first, Eleventh, Twelfth, Eighth, Seventh, Ninth, Fifty-fourth, and Sixty-fifth Regiments; First, Third, and Ninth Brigades; First and Seventh Divisions, and Separate Troop D, Cavalry.

The Fifteenth Battalion, Brooklyn, has reorganized its Board of Officers for the ensuing year, as follows: President, Lieut.-Col. J. B. Meyenborg; Secretary, F. W. Gremse; Financial Secretary, Capt. Charles Meyer; Treasurer, Major Peter H. Pappendorf. Company A, Captain Frederick Lessing, will hold its annual meeting at Gallatin Hall on Thursday evening, Feb. 6, after which it will have a full dress review and dress parade. The company has a roll of nearly 90 men, and if it turns out strong on that occasion Capt. Alsgood will equalize it in four commands for the ceremonies.

Company K, Twelfth Regiment, Capt. Edward Fackner commanding, gave an enjoyable entertainment at its quarters in the armory, previous to the regimental hop, last Tuesday night. It was witnessed by many friends of the company. Readings and recitations filled up the programme. At the annual meeting of the Regimental Board of Officers last Wednesday, Lieut.-Col. Wilson was elected Treasurer and Capt. W. H. Murphy, Secretary. Committees were appointed as follows: Examining Board, Capt. O. S. Burns, Capt. W. H. Murphy, and Lieut. Jethro Mosher; Delegates to the State Military Convention, Lieut.-Col. Wilson, Capts. Burns and Murphy.

The quarterly returns of the Twenty-second Regiment, Col. Josiah Porter commanding, show the aggregate strength of the regiment at the beginning of the present year to have been 618. At a meeting of the Brigade Examining Board last Monday night, several newly-elected officers passed, having answered questions as follows: First Lieuts. John W. Jenkins, Company F, 78 per cent.; R. G. Wilson, Company E, 72 per cent., and Second Lieut. H. A. Hagan, Company I, 77 per cent. Corp. Loftus H. Saxe, Company I, has been promoted Sergeant, vice Hagan, promoted. Battalion drills will take place during the coming week as follows: Companies A, B, and K, Monday; D, F, and H, Tuesday; C, E, and I, Wednesday. Ex-Capt. S. Ellis Briggs, formerly Captain of Company K, has decided to resume command of that company. Capt. George S. Barger, formerly of the Twelfth Regiment, is mentioned as the probably successful candidate for the Captaincy of the new Company G. The standing committees in this command for the ensuing year are as follows: Finance—Lieut.-Col. John T. Camp; Capts. Rennebergen and Demarest, Lieut. Lepper, and the Treasurer; Armory—Major Horsfall, Quartermaster Miller, and Lieut. Farley; Music—Capt. C. T. Smith, Lieuts. Meller and De Mott; Supply—Capt. Park, Lieuts. Backer and Van Loan; Dress—Lieuts. Terhune, Colfax, and Glover; Excursion—The five senior Captains. The meetings of the board will be held on the second Friday in each month.

The eighteenth annual reunion of Company F, Twenty-second Regiment, will take place at the regimental armory on Tuesday evening next. The Committee of Arrangements have prepared an interesting entertainment for the occasion, as well as a dinner, to which the veterans of the company will be invited. Company H held its annual meeting last Tuesday evening, and elected civil officers for the ensuing year as follows: Capt. Noel E. Park, President; Lieut. R. O. Glover, Treasurer; Corp. C. L. Harris, Secretary; Finance Committee—Lieut. R. G. Wilson, Sergt. J. P. Leo, Charles W. Cox; Recruiting Committee—Corp. C. L. Harris, A. B. Townsend, J. F. Terry; Armory Committee—Quartermaster Sergt. M. J. McDermott, Sergt. William Hovey, E. Mardage; Court-martial—Lieut. Glover, Corp. C. H. Lisomb, C. M. Brennan, Herman Dirkler, and Corp. H. D. Hammett.

The Fourteenth Regiment, Brooklyn, had its second reception for the season at its armory last Wednesday evening. After a preliminary musical performance by the regimental band, a rifle match was contested by the Creedmoor team and reserve of 1878, at a target reduced in size so represent that used at Creedmoor at 500 yards. Two gold medals were offered as prizes, and Private W. E. King, of Company F, carried off the first one on the clean score of 25 points, while Private J. Moore, of Company A, scored 24, and won the second prize. The regiment was next formed and reviewed by Gen. Jourdan. Dress parade followed, after which 71 marksmen received the State trophies from Major H. S. Jewell, Inspector of Rifle Practice of the Fifth Brigade. The festivities closed with a hop. Capt. Alexander Hunter, of Company K, took advantage of the opportunity to present Lieut. Col. Wm. Wood with a handsome plated water-cooler during the evening.

Commissions have been issued to officers in the First and Second Divisions during the past month as follows: First Division staff—Major W. D. L. Boughton and Capt. H. B. Masters, Aides-de-Camp; Third Brigade staff—Capt. A. L. David, Ordnance Officer; Capt. J. L. Berkwich, Assistant Quartermaster; Capt. W. H. Gunther, Commissary of Subsistence; First Lieut. C. F. Beebe, Aide-de-Camp; Fifth Regiment—First Lieut. H. F. Glor and Major Charles Koss; Eleventh Regiment—First Lieut. George Loeser; Twelfth Regiment—First Lieuts. F. B. Smith and Second Lieut. G. W. Griffis; Thirteenth Regiment—First Lieut. A. F. Tomes; Fifteenth Battalion—Capt. D. T. Lynch and Adjut. George R. Dietrick; Twenty-third Regiment—First Lieut. T. B. Adams and Second Lieuts. E. McClain. During the same period there have resigned: Dr. Milo A. Wilson, Assistant Surgeon, and Capt. H. B. Turner, Seventh Regiment; Capt. P. H. Hardy, Twenty-third Regiment; First Lieut. J. Bittenhauser, Thirty-second Regiment; Second Lieut. O. Beebe, Battery N, Brooklyn.

Lieut. Col. Abraham H. Berry has been appointed Adjutant-General of the State of Massachusetts, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Adjt.-Gen. Cunningham. Gen. Berry is a native of Lynn, and by profession is a civil engineer. He served faithfully in the nine months campaign of the Eighth Regiment as First Lieutenant during the last civil war. He subsequently filled the position of Adjutant and Major successively in the Eighth Regiment, and in 1876 was appointed Inspector-General on the Staff of Gov. Rice. Adjt.-Gen. Cunningham has also a fine military record. He enlisted in Company B, Ninth Regiment, Massachusetts, in 1849, and took out his discharge as Captain in 1859. When the war broke out, he went to the front as First Lieutenant of the First Battalion Infantry, and was subsequently transferred to the Thirty-second Regiment Volunteers, where he was promoted Major, Lieutenant-Colonel, and received a brevet commission of Brigadier-General. He had been adjutant-General of his State since 1866, at which time he was appointed by Gov. Bullock.

Company H, Seventh Regiment, Capt. James L. Price commanding, has elected civil officers for the ensuing year, as follows: Secretary, W. J. Underwood, Jr.; Treasurer, Sergt. John B. Holland; Committee on Discipline—Lieut. John R. Andrews, Corp. H. W. Clements, John A. Shaw, W. V. Carolin, and R. P. Staats; Finance—Corp. Thomas Dimond, Joseph Williams, and B. H. Adams; Recruiting—Corp. E. W. Ketcham, E. H. Somers, and W. H. Sage; Armory—Quartermaster-Sergt. S. H. Hersey, S. H. Denton, Jr., and T. A. Bartley; Uniform—Lieut. J. A. Tenkabory, C. H. Steward, and H. R. May. Company F held an election of officers in the armory last Monday night, and promoted Second-Lieut. Daniel F. Appleton to the position. The vacancy caused by the promotion of Lieut. Appleton is filled at an early date. Lieut. Appleton celebrated his promotion by inviting the company and several guests to Sieghortner's, where supper had been prepared for the occasion. Among those who drank the health of the new Captain were Col. Clark, Lieut.-Col. Fitzgerald, Adjt. G. W. Rand, and Commissary Louis B. Rader.

Separate Troop A, Cavalry, Major Karl Klein commanding, had its thirty-first annual ball at Concordia Assembly Rooms, No. 28 Avenue A, on Wednesday evening last. As usual with matters in this command, the affair was admirably conducted, and afforded pleasure to several hundred persons. The marksman's badges were also presented to the proud winners of the trophies, who were a conspicuous "18" thereafter during the evening. The ball-room was elaborately decorated with warlike emblems and floral peace offerings; the music was good, and the supper was superb. The troop at its recent annual meeting elected civil officers as follows: President, Major Klein; Secretary, Veterinary Surgeon Charles A. Nagel; Treasurer, Quartermaster-Sergt. George E. Epple. Finance Committee—Sergt. Henry Herrmann, August Malwald, and Charles Baggenbauch. Armory Committee—Quartermaster-Sergt. Epple, Sergt. William Volckens, Joseph Pauritsch, and John Klett. Court-martial—Second Lieut. John G. Weigold, Sergt. Frederick Volckens, Corp. August Malwald, and Ernest Regelmann. Recruiting Committee—Sergts. Philip Merckle, Henry Herrmann, and William Volckens, Corp. Ernest Zobel, and Charles Raggenbauch.

A PRIEST'S LITTLE GAME.

A correspondent, writing from Brussels on the 29th of December to the Paris Presse, relates the following incident, which is causing much talk in the Belgian capital:

"An extraordinary event has just taken place here. At the Pig Market, in the midst of one of the most populous quarters of the city, lived a dame named Perdegel, aged more than 80 years. Finding herself to be seriously ill, she caused her confessor, Father Hyacinthe, of the Order des Conventuels, to be sent for. The latter, on arriving at the bedside of the invalid, requested her niece and a maid-servant to withdraw, and was left alone with Mme. Perdegel. Shortly afterward he recalled them and demanded that the niece should deliver to him a cash-box containing all the fortune of the dame. The damsel refused. Father Hyacinthe was annoyed, but soon found out the means of the maid-servant where the valables were kept. He went to the place, took possession of the box and its contents, of no light weight, and with some aid conveyed it to a cab and drove off. A complaint was lodged by the lady to the Chief of the Police, and a judicial inquiry was commenced. Since then Mme. Perdegel is dead, and it has been ascertained that by will she disinherited her family for the benefit of Father Hyacinthe, according to the information which has been given to me—to the contained about 300,000 francs. The burial of Mme. Perdegel took place yesterday. Father Hyacinthe and another ecclesiastic followed the coffin; some blisses were hearded they passed. Seals have been placed at the residence of the deceased, and the law will have to give a decision on the value of the testament made in favor of Father Hyacinthe, and on the manner in which he possessed himself of the property of the old lady."

A BOGUS JULES VERNE IN MASSACHUSETTS.

From the Worcester (Mass.) Spy, Jan. 14.

A man appeared in Spencer, who said he came from Montreal, and called himself Jules Verne, on the hotel book, and in conversation with those to whom he introduced himself. Last Friday, a letter from him, dated at Spencer, came to the senior editor of the Spy. It was signed "Jules Verne, Paris, France." He said in it that he had been recommended to the "hospitality" of the person to whom it was addressed, by Hon. E. B. Washburne, late Minister to France, and asked to have this hospitality begin with the sending of a carriage to meet him at the depot in Worcester, at a given hour that evening. MORTAL COMBAT BETWEEN MEXICAN OFFICERS.

From the Galveston (Texas) News.

EAGLE PASS, Jan. 11, 1879.

Majors Seuniga and Sanches, of the Mexican Army, had a difficulty at a ball in Piedras Negras last night, during which Seuniga hurled a tumbler at Sanches's head. The latter quietly went out, and shortly reappearing at the door, called upon Seuniga to come out. Both officers met in the street, and began firing. Seuniga, after emptying his pistol, clubbed, and reached upon his adversary, when he was shot through the heart, and instantly killed. Sanches is badly wounded in the head by blows from Seuniga's pistol.

SAMUEL JOHNSON.

SAMUEL JOHNSON. His Words and his Ways: What he Said; What he Did; and What Men Thought and Spoke Concerning him. Edited by E. T. Mason. New-York: HARPER & BROTHERS.

The novel plan upon which this work is prepared would make it attractive even though the subject-matter were less entertaining. It would seem as if Mr. Mason, charged with the task of producing a volume upon Dr. Johnson, and realizing the folly of attempting another biography of the man for whom Boswell lived and wrote, had bethought himself of a scheme by which the story of the great scholar's life might be made as fresh and fascinating as if its details had never before been given to the public. To have written a sketch of Dr. Johnson would have been to follow in the footsteps of Chalmers, Murphy, Page, Macaulay, Carlyle, and like them all to have been overshadowed by the achievement of the man who sacrificed every individual prospect in order that he might exhaust all biographical possibilities in the case of the rude philosopher whose many-sided nature he desired to interpret to the world. Boswell's enthusiasm over Johnson and his indefatigable labor have left nothing to be desired in the way of a biography of the great man. This fact Mr. Mason has fully appreciated, and, therefore, instead of attempting a repetition of what has already been completely and satisfactorily accomplished, he simply invites us to the enjoyment of a feast of anecdote, description, criticism, and analysis, all proceeding from the pens of Johnson's own most intimate friends and contemporaries. From this mass of material the reader may, if he like, make up a complete and finished portrait of the man, but the editor contents himself simply with providing the material wherewith the work may be done. So careful, indeed, is he to avoid the slightest appearance of having assumed the rôle of biographer that even when obliged to appear personally in the volume, he does so simply as the mouth-piece of others who have not put their statements in such shape as to make exact quotation possible.

It must not be supposed, however, that Mr. Mason's volume is simply a collection of extracts from the works of others, put together without classification or arrangement. A single glance at the table of contents reveals the existence of a very elaborate scheme, which must have cost an infinite amount of laborious thought and persistent research. Nothing less than keen and protracted investigations of the impressions made by Johnson upon the writers whom he quotes would have enabled Mr. Mason to take the philosopher's character to pieces, examine and analyze it, and finally resolve the whole intellectual and spiritual man into a list of traits and attributes. This is the plan upon which the work is arranged. First, we are invited to consider the testimony of Johnson's friends as regards his "Appearance, Manners, and Peculiarities." From these we turn to his "Partialities," thence to his "Habits as Scholar and Author." Following the list down, we presently find that the philosopher's complex individuality is divided under 42 heads, testimony in regard to each being adduced from the writings of the brilliant men and women with whom, in certain moods, Johnson loved to surround himself. What a skilled anatomist Mr. Mason is may be seen from the fact that he divides "Coarseness" from "General Brutality," "Generosity" from "Kindness," differentiating qualities in a manner calculated to puzzle all but the most accomplished students of human nature.

There can be no doubt that Johnson's character was, to a certain extent, embittered, and his asperities of disposition increased, by the miserable poverty of his early manhood, and the difficulties he experienced in winning recognition as an author. He lived in what has been called by one his biographers, in speaking of literature, "a dark night between two sunny days," when the day of patrician patronage was at its close, and that of public patronage had not dawned. How keenly he felt the want of appreciation evinced toward his earlier efforts to gain a place as a writer, is shown in the celebrated letter to Lord Chesterfield, where he says: "The notice which you have been pleased to take of my labors, had it been early, had been kind; but it has been delayed till I am indifferent and cannot enjoy it; till I am solitary, and cannot impart it; till I am known, and do not want it." It was only in the latter part of his life that Johnson attained full recognition from the accomplished men and women who have left such copious records of him. At the age of 50 he is so poor that Rasselas must be completed before he can defray the expenses of his mother's funeral, and there is another period of three years during which the same bitter struggle must be endured before we see him made comparatively comfortable by a pension of £300, received from the crown through Lord Bute.

Among the many distinguished names that figure conspicuously in Mr. Mason's volume, those that contribute the most information in regard to the great scholar are Miss Reynolds, sister of Sir Joshua; Mme. D'Arblay, Mrs. Piozzi, Sir John Hawkins, and the faithful and devoted Boswell. Naturally, it is from the ladies that we hear most about his smaller peculiarties and the many impulses of affection and even gallantry that in some measure compensated for the general roughness of his manner toward those around him. Miss Reynolds, especially, had many opportunities of seeing the gentler side of his character. The attention of Sir Joshua Reynolds was attracted to Johnson by reading his Life of Savage, published in 1744. Upon their meeting, the conversation of the philosopher proved no less interesting to the great artist than his written words, and an intimacy was begun between the two, so widely separated by birth and circumstance that lasted until they were separated by death. In this close friendship Miss Reynolds was included, and whether, as suggested by Northcote, she gained the philosopher's good will "by the attention she paid his extraordinary predilection for tea," or simply by the exercise of feminine sympathy, she in some manner or other won him to exhibit in her society the most attractive sides of his complex character. That Johnson was amenable to feminine influence we have abundant evidence in his devotion to his wife, so much older than himself, in his sincere interest in Mme. D'Arblay, whom he used facetiously to call "Little Burney," and in the friendship that existed between himself and Mrs. Thrale, whose marriage with Piozzi occasioned him so much displeasure. Mme. D'Arblay and Mme. Piozzi seem to have been able to do much for Johnson in the way of keeping the demon of melancholy at bay. The manner in which the two ladies manufactured amusement and recreation for the philosopher, who lent himself pleasantly to their schemes, is illustrated by the following anecdote, occurring in Mr. Mason's volume under the head of "Playfulness":

> "Mrs. Thrale—'To-morrow, Sir, Mrs. Montagu dines here, and then you will have talk enough.' Dr. Johnson began to see-saw, with a countenance strongly expressive of inward fun; and after enjoying it some time in silence, he suddenly, and with great animation, turned to me and cried, 'Down with her, Burney! Down with her! Spare her not! Attack her, fight her, and down with her at once! You are a rising wit, and she is at the top; and when I was beginning the world, and was nothing and nobody, the joy of all my life was to fire at all the established wits; and then everybody loved to halloo me on. But there is no game now; everybody would be glad to see me conquered; but then, when I was new, to vanquish the great ones was all the delight of my poor, little, dear soul! So at her, Burney! at her, and down with her!' Some time after, when we had all been a few minutes silent, he turned to me and said, 'Come, Burney, shall you and I study our parts against Mrs. Montagu comes?' Miss Burney cried Mrs. Thrale must not set an your-courage for this encounter. I think you should begin with Miss Gregory, and down with her first.' Johnson—'No, no; always fly at the cagle! Down with Mrs. Montagu herself!'—Madame D'Arblay."

One of the most conspicuous traits in Johnson's character was his respect for rank and authority. This was never more fully demonstrated than in the pronounced opinions expressed by him during our Revolutionary War. The rupture between our ancestors and Great Britain roused political energies that had slumbered for some time and produced his pamphlet, Taxation No Tyranny, in which he endeavored to prove that distant colonies, which had in their assemblies a legislature of their own, were, notwithstanding, liable to be taxed in a British Parliament, where they had no representatives, and he thought his own country strong enough to enforce obedience. This pamphlet, which appeared in 1775, produced a controversy which was carried on for some time with considerable spirit, though Johnson took no part in it. No stronger censure was advanced against him than that his opinions were governed by his pension; but this was utterly unjust. No more independent spirit ever lived than that of the philosopher, and his opinion of our country, however unflattering to our vanity, was uniformly held by him. Boswell says:

"I started the subject of emigration. Johnson—'To a man of mere animal life you can urge no argument against going to America, but that it will be some time before he will get the earth to produce. But a man of any intellectual enjoyment will not easily run and immerse himself and his posterity for aces in barbarism.'"

Again:

"He had long before indulged most unfavorable sentiments of our fellow-subjects in America. For, as early as 1769, I was told by Dr. John Campbell that he had said of them, 'Sir, they are a race of convicts, and ought to be thankful for anything we allow them short of hanging.'"

Happily, the keen edge of Johnson's unflattering estimate of our forefathers is taken off by finding that other nations shared in his animadversions:

"Johnson—'The French, Sir, are a very silly people. They have no common life—nothing but the two ends, beggary and nobility. Sir, they are made up in everything of two extremes. They have no common-sense, they have no common manners, no common learning. They are much behind-hand, stupid, ignorant creatures.'"

In fact, the philosopher's heart was so bound up in the great capital where his life was spent, and where literary culture had made for itself a centre, that he could conceive of no other part of the world where existence would be tolerable or which would even repay the exertion of a visit. This predilection for London and London life is amusingly illustrated by Boswell:

"Mrs. Macaweyn, who officiated as our landlady here, (in one of the Scottish islands,) had never been on the mainland. On hearing this Dr. Johnson said to me before her, 'That is rather being behind-hand with life. I would at least go and see Glenelg.' Boswell—'You yourself, Sir, have never seen anything but your native island.' Johnson—'But I shall by seeing London. I have seen as much of life as the world can show.' Boswell—'You have not seen Pekin.' Johnson—'What is Pekin? Ten thousand Londoners would drive all the people of Pekin; they would starve them like deer.'"

It is through a series of anecdotes, many as trifling as the above, that the reader of Mr. Mason's compilation gains an insight into the remarkable and complex character of Johnson. We see him as he displayed himself to his friends in moments of ease and recreation, when the dignity of the scholar and rhetorician was laid aside. The impression he produced when chatting in his own study, walking in the streets of London, dining at an inn, or calling upon a friend, is the one to which our attention is called by these writers who lived with him in familiar converse. Such a compilation, arranged under heads which guide the reader without constraining his thoughts, is more valuable than a dozen biographies. Plutarch, the prince of ancient biographers, says: "Nor is it always in the most distinguished achievements that men's vices or virtues may be best discerned; but very often an action of small note, a short saying, or a jest shall distinguish a person's real character more than the greatest sieges or the most important battles." Mr. Mason's idea has been to bring before the reader a collection of just these very "actions of small note" and "trifling sayings" that shall reveal distinctly the various traits and attributes of the man. In doing it he has produced a volume full of interest, every page of which contains characteristic and entertaining anecdotes of the great scholar. The series to which this book belongs, "English Men of Letters," edited by Prof. John Morley, has already recommended itself to the public by the interesting and comprehensive character of the works it contains. But, while the preceding volumes can only claim the praise that may be awarded to truthful and entertaining biography, this work of Mr. Mason deserves especial eulogy from the ingenious manner with which the familiar writing and fragmentary testimony of those who lived with Johnson and knew him intimately is so gathered together and arranged that the reader may almost feel himself brought into immediate contact and made personally acquainted with the greatest literary worker of the eighteenth century, and the most eccentric of modern philosophers.

L'ART.

L'ART. REVUE HEBDOMADAIRE ILLUSTREE. Fourth year. Vol. IV. A. BALLUE, editor. Paris: LIBRAIRIE DE L'ART. New-York: BOUTON.

Accord a place of very great distinction to the work of an American etcher, which forms one of the most brilliant illustrations of l'Art. It is a quick, rapid sketch, but treated with such verve and fire as to show the most marked talent. The etching is called "La Fin de l'Acte." It tells its own story. There, in the full blaze of the footlights, to a crowded house, the whole orchestra thundering out the finale, are posed the singers. It is an act in "Puritani"—if you like. The etching looks like an accompaniment to Verdi. The prima donna holds the struggling tenor, who gives that ut de poitrine, which soars above the din of sound; the dead baritone lies sprawling on the stage, while the basso—it might be a Lablache, only he is not fat enough—adds to the musical effects. All this is managed with a skill, a brilliancy of touch, that is wonderful. Tier on tier are piled the audience. The gorgeousness of the finest house in the world is thrown in with amazing prodigality. With all this, there is perfectness of detail. It gives the best idea of grand scenic effect we have ever seen. The editors of L'Art say that John Ames Mitchell has bien de l'esprit. To the ready pencil of this artist there has to be added the quickest conception of art. L'Art in the present number is marvelously rich in etchings unsurpassed for their excellence. Subjects of the most varied kind seem to have been taken and treated by the leading etchers. We have two Rubenses, etched by Unger, and the same number by Millais, brought out by the magical needle of Waltner. Nothing can be more thorough than the adaptiveness of Unger to the "St. Idelphonse" of Rubens. The comely, matronly face of the good saint has the very tone of the great Antwerp artist. It is imbued with the color. The portrait of Mme. Bischoffsheim, is in Millais' most stately form. The lady, in the full plenitude of her charms, is superbly attired. Waltner has etched this picture in his most finished manner. The same artist has given us, designed and etched by himself, a picture of the Prince of Wales. Great etchers must be great artists, and a composition all their own has its merits. We have given but a tithe of the etchings this fourth volume contains. We have before this commented on the excellence of the wood engravings. We would call to the especial notice of our wood engravers and printers the copy of a vase, the work of Puyplat. On it is a falcon, Japanese in sentiment, that stands out on an almost dead-black ground. Here is a mass of black, quite 5 inches by 8, only relieved by the sketch of the bird and some few bold whites. Without the skill of the engraver, and the pressman it would have been an awkward black blotch. As it is, it is a perfect representation of what it means to be, the copy of a dark, lustrous vase, when the glare of the glaze shines out.

Considerable space, with some comment, is given to our American artists who exhibited their pictures at the Exhibition, and Wyatt Eaton, Arthur Quartley, M. C. L. Tiffany, and most particularly Walter Shirlaw, are commended. We are only too glad to mention that Mr. Loubat's Medallic History of the United States receives an appropriate notice, and that a page of the illustrations of that remarkable work, Jacquemart's copies of the Paul Jones medals, are given. It is only, according to the editor of Art, full justice to state that at the Exposition, M. A. Ballue, the editor, with many others attached to this work, such as artists, designers, etchers, wood-engravers, paper-makers, and printers, were the recipients of medals, awarded for artistic preeminence.

LITERARY NOTES.

—The German novelist and dramatist, Karl Gutzkow, is dead.

—The uniform edition of Charles Kingsley's writings is rapidly approaching completion.

—Julian Hawthorne contributes a story "The New Endymion," to the January Temple Bar.

—J. Fairbanks & Co. have just ready a volume of papers on social topics by T. De Witt Talmage, entitled Foes of Society.

—Porter & Coates, Philadelphia, have nearly ready Voices from Babylon, by Joseph A. Seiss, whose Miracle of Stone made quite a sensation, and passed through several editions.

—The address commemorative of the life, character, and writings of the late William Cullen Bryant, delivered at the Academy of Music before the New-York Historical Society, by Mr. George William Curtis, is published in pamphlet and book form at Charles Scribner's Sons'.

—The Life of Bishop Cummins, which Dodd, Mead & Co. announce for the present month, is likely to make a lively sensation in ecclesiastical circles. Dr. Cummins was the first Bishop in the Reformed Episcopal Church, and the book will give an ample account of the origin and early steps of that movement.

—Frivolity reduced to a system will be found in a book published by Jansen, McClurg & Co., of Chicago. The German is written by two amateur leaders of the cotillon dance, and offsets, to a certain extent, the vigorous onslaught upon round dances recently made by some prominent men and women through the medium of tracts and books.

—Chapman & Hall, of London, and J. B. Lippincott & Co., of Philadelphia, issue simultaneously, a translation of M. Véron's Esthetics, by Eugène Véron. W. H. Armstrong, a graduate of Oxford, turns it into English. Véron tries to strip æsthetics of the envelopes of metaphysical dreaming which have surrounded the science from the time of Plato to the present day.

—A pretty little book in flexible covers fantastically designed is published by Macmillan & Co. It contains 46 articles reprinted from the Saturday Review. They are by Mrs. Loftie, and relate to social matters. XLVI Social Twitters treat of such important matters as "Proposals," "New Houses," "Living on Flats," "Girls at Home," "Single Blessedness," &c.

—A Philo-Celtic Society, established in this City last June, has been joined by upward of 1,000 members. The purpose is to revive the Erse tongue, each member endeavoring to become able to read and speak it. The patriotic founders of the society propose that the Constitution and proceedings of the future Irish Republic shall be written and conducted in Erse.

—Local historians quarrel so much over points in the Revolutionary struggle in which Boston is concerned, that the war of pamphlets only ceases while a flag of truce passes between the contending parties. The latest brochure is Mr. William W. Wheildon's History of Paul Revere's Signal Lanterns, which were hung in the steeple of the North (Christ) Church, in Salem-street, Boston, to warn the country of the march of the British troops to Lexington and Concord. Mr. Wheildon, with his well-known historical instinct, has sifted this matter to the bottom, and clearly proves that Paul Revere, the hero of Longfellow's poem with that title, is entitled to credit for the plan, and that the lanterns were hung by his direction in the steeple of old Christ Church. It is an interesting and valuable pamphlet, and bears the imprint of Lee & Shepard, Boston.

—G. P. Putnam's Sons are sending out their list of early publications for the new year. It includes The Life of Gerrit Smith, by D. B. Frothingham, the first edition of which attracted no little attention and was made the text of a good deal of controversy; The Great Fur Land; or, Sketches of Life in the Hudson Bay Territory, by H. M. Robinson, formerly United States Consul in Manitoba, with numerous illustrations from designs by Charles Goseh; The Secret of Success; or, How to Get On in the World, with some remarks upon true and false success and the art of making the best of life, by William Davenport Adams, author of the Dictionary of English Literature; Soldier and Pioneer, a record of the life and family history of Richard Clough Anderson, and a picture of frontier life in Virginia in the last half of the eighteenth century; a volume on Ethics, by President John Bascom, of the University of Wisconsin; The Currency of the Country, by Hon. Carl Schurz, being No. 11 of the "Economic Monographs;" The Currency Question, from a Southern point of view, by Robert W. Hughes, United States Judge of the Eastern District of Virginia, being an argument against the inflationists and the supporters of State banks and local money; National Banking, by M. L. Scudder, Chairman of the "Honest Money League," being No. 12 of the "Economic Monographs;" A Reading-Book of English Classics, edited for use in schools, by Rev. C. W. Leffingwell, D. D., Rector of St. Mary's School, Knoxville, Ill.; A Translation of Conversations on Art, by M. Couture; The Art of Figure-Drawing, by C. R. Weigall, being the fourth volume in Putnam's "Series of Art Hand-books," edited by Susan N. Carter, President of the Cooper Union School of Design; Deutsche Schule, a collection of standard German poetry, selected and arranged for use in schools and in the home-circle, by L. R. Klemm, author of Sprach-und-Lese-Bücher in acht Kreisen, a companion volume to Miss Brackett's popular collection of "Poetry for Home and School;" Emergencies, and How to Meet Them, compiled by Burt G. Wilder, M. D., Professor of Physiology and Comparative Anatomy in Cornell University; and "Hampton Tracts for The People," edited by Dr. Stephen Smith, Gen. S. C. Armstrong, Mrs. M. T. Armstrong, and Miss Helen W. Ludlow. These tracts are condensed but comprehensive statements of the fundamental laws of health, with illustrations of the results of breaking these laws, and advice as to the best and easiest way of living in obedience to them. The first numbers of the series will be Health Laws of Moses, Duty of Teachers, Preventable Diseases, Who Found Jamie? A Haunted House, and Woman's Work in Sanitary Reform.

NEW MUSIC.

—A company called the Celluloid Piano Key Company adopts a novel method of advertising by means of pieces of new music composed in honor of their patent. Charles Wels furnishes them with a "Celluloid Grand March," and with "Celluloid Sketches, at Home and in the Chapel." B. Courisander offers on the shrine of Celluloid a "Celluloid Polka for the White Keys," published by George Willig & Co., of Baltimore. At this rate we shall soon have a "Dentifrice Mazurka," a "Nocturne in Bixby's Best Blacking," a "Galvanized Gum Galop," or a "Bligh's Cork-leg Valse, Expressly Arranged for the Piano-forte."

—New pieces of music for the voice, issued by Oliver Ditson & Co., of Boston, (C. H. Ditson & Co., of New-York,) comprise "The Cross," a quartet piece by Karl Waller, with words by S. C. Foster; "To-morrow!" by G. Pallone, adapted and translated by Theodore T. Barker, with words in Italian, English, and German; "Forget or Die," words and music by V. V., and "Lightly o'er the plain he step," by Guglielmo, with words by Henry Taylor. An instrumental music comprises the melody from Wallace's opera of "Lurline"—"Sweet Spirit, Hear my Prayer"—transcriptions and variations arranged by A. E. Warren; "The Hoffman," a polka by Edward Hoffman; "Pomone," a waltz by Emile Waldteufel, and selections from "H. M. S. Pinafore," a comic opera by Arthur Sullivan. Oliver Ditson & Co. also publish the entire score of this nautical comic opera, the words of which are by Gilbert. It is in two acts, and occupies a quarto of 130 pages. One of Celia Thaxter's little poems of the seaside has also been put to music by Julius Eichberg, and is published under the title, "The Wild Rose."

ART AND DRAMA IN LONDON.

THE GROSVENOR EXHIBITION AND IRVING'S HAMLET.

A RARE COLLECTION OF STUDIES AND DRAWINGS BY OLD MASTERS—WATER-COLOR PICTURES — THEATRICAL REFORMS BY THE ACTOR-MANAGER OF THE LYCEUM—SHAKESPEARE'S MASTERPIECE IN A NOBLE SETTING.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Wednesday Jan. 1, 1879.

The new year is inaugurated with a gloom befitting the national prospects. While the bells were ringing out the old and in the new, the rain gave warning of its coming, and the day broke gray and sombre enough for the last matin of all time. On this first day of the new year London has been enveloped in a cloud. It is not a true description to say that it has been raining all day. We have been in a vapor bath and under a steady down-pour, and, writing in the night, I still hear the steady "drip," "drip," "splash," "splash" on window and pavement. The streets have been closed in at the ends with a mist through which the traffic comes and goes. Even Bond-street to-day looked "a thing of shreds and patches," blurred over with a dirty brush. It was a relief to go in out of the wet and see the new exhibition of the Grosvenor Gallery, though the gloom of the outer world was duly represented in the darkened halls and galleries of Sir Coutts Lindsay's splendid "hobby." I had nearly written "folly," but Mr. Whistler and Mr. Burne Jones might consider that personal. At the same time it would hardly be fair, seeing that the recent exhibitions have in a measure redeemed the former glorification of mediocrity. I wonder if Mr. Whistler, in those early days of the Grosvenor, really believed in the art merits of his work, or whether he was simply humoring the morbid taste of a certain set of oddities who thought they were forming a new school. For an artist of so much sterling ability, he certainly has done some strange things, though he has been torn and maimed by critics who are not worthy to tie his shoe-strings. But he has no place in the exhibition which opened at the Grosvenor on Monday. His forte is not water-color painting, and no pictures are accepted that have been done at a more recent date than 1873. The exhibition is practically a continuation of that held last Winter, consisting of drawings and original sketches by old masters and water-colors by British artists. The idea is to illustrate the growth and achievements of water-color painting, for which the British schools are justly famous, and this second gathering of works is supposed to bring the splendid record down to the present day.

THE FIRST STUDIES OF GREAT PAINTERS.

First in order of exhibition, according to the catalogue, is the collection of drawings by the old masters. The man who said to his country friend in my hearing, "Come on, lad, these pictures are only trials; they're all begun and none of 'em finished," must have been greatly disappointed with this department. So also was the old lady who remarked: "Well, surely, if they call these things pictures, our Sarah Ann brings better home from school at the holidays." These persons had come to see pictures, not to study art. They were out for the day, and their aspirations would probably be fulfilled at night, when they would cry, "Oh! oh!" in presence of the gorgeous transformation scene of the Covent Garden or Drury-Lane pantomime. How different the sensations of the handful of art students, with their noses down upon the glass that protects the drawings of Leonardo da Vinci, Corregio, Rembrandt, Velasquez, Murillo, Alonzo Carro, Claude Lorraine, Poussin, Watteau, Fragarard, Flaxman, Gainsborough, Wilkie, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Smirke, and a host of other illustrious men, represented here by 787 studies, selected from the portfolios of English collectors. The wealth of the examples may be estimated by the fact that there are 68 of Rembrandt's drawings, 15 by Titian, 22 by Raphael, and 18 by Leonardo da Vinci. The latter come chiefly from the art loan of Christ Church College, Oxford. They are part of that "best legacy" of the artist which he says "is to be found in manuscript books scattered over Italy, France, and England, in public and royal collections and in private hands." There is a world of suggestion, of curious speculation, and study, in this varied collection of drawings, the beginnings of great things, first thoughts in pencil, the outlines of pictures that remain models of beauty for all time. Ingres is represented by some 70 studies, many so finished as to enable the authorities on this side the Channel to form a clear judgment of his true place in art history. The French will never settle the problem for themselves, but art students here are inclined to give Ingres a foremost rank among the greatest draughtsmen of any school. His drawings are full of the genius of carefulness—delicate, keen, sharp, and eminently characteristic in the delineation of the subjects treated. Ingres has only been dead 10 years, and some of the works now collected at the Grosvenor have been lent by his widow.

WATER-COLOR DRAWINGS.

This delightful branch of art is illustrated by nearly 400 contributions, loaned by the owners, and embracing a wide range of English art, covering the last 20 years. Poynter, Gilbert, Sam Bough, Roberts, Millais, Corbould, Lockhart, Hayes, Orrock, Duncan, Danby, Dobson, Watson, Fripp, Carl Haag, A. W. Hunt, Lamont, Herkimer, Poole, Goodall, Linton, Hine, Leitch, and other names familiar to the art-world, are represented by many fine works. There is, however, a panel in the West Gallery containing some very inferior pictures. They are instructive, nevertheless, as showing how artists having fair manipulative power may burlesque true art, in wild efforts at originality that degenerate into ugly mannerisms and silly affectations. There are half a dozen pictures in this panel which may be usefully noticed on this account. "May on the Hill," by J. W. North, is supposed to represent thorn-bushes in bloom on a hill-side. The attempted realism of the treatment has left us a green and brown daub of dirty meadows, with a scrawl or two of white, which are to be taken for May trees, though they resemble nothing that was ever seen in the shape of trees, thorns, or otherwise. Close by is "A Man's Head," by R. Bateman. If the artist has striven to represent a bit of flat color, washed out in a shower or faded by time, he has been successful; and if ever there was a man's head like this one we should be thankful that Mr. Bateman has not drawn a body to it. A little of that head will be found to go a long way. "Cuckoo Time Near Camelet," by the same artist, is another piece of affectation resulting in impossible trees and meadows, slightly redeemed, however, by well-drawn figures. The panel is characteristically finished with four small cartoons by Lamont, illustrating the story of "Bonny Kilmeny," one of those morbid extravagances of color which at one time threatened to become popular under the patronage of a certain professedly "æsthetical" crowd who claimed to be apostles of culture. A magnificent contrast to this panel of affectation is that at the end of the gallery, which includes works by Gilbert, Arthur Glennie, Carl Werner, and Joseph Knight, honest, sterling workers, who, when they draw "a man's head," a horse, a meadow, or a May-tree, you cannot mistake them for setting suns or haystacks. "War," by Gilbert, is the centre of the group at the end of the surrounding room. Lent by the artist himself, it is one of his finest works, both as regards color, grouping, and drawing. "The Burial of Knox," "The King's Trumpeter," "Hohenlinden," and "A Gloomy Evening" make up the Gilbert gallery, and they are effective foils to the repose which belongs to the subjects of the surrounding pictures, notably the "Palaces at Padua and Venice," by Werner, and the studies in Rome, by Glennie. There are 9 or 10 works by Carl Haag, lent by various persons; but the best examples, perhaps, extant of this artist, who is not dead, as was reported the other day, are two large ones which he presented to the Garrick Club, and which hang in the smoking-room of the well-known house in Garrick-street.

MR. IRVING AS A MANAGER.

There are a few critics who have stood by Henry Irving from the first real opening of his career, and who felt a personal concern in his success of Monday night, when he played "Hamlet" in his own theatre, and in his own way, with artists selected by himself, with a new leading lady, with a new arrangement of scenes, and, in so far as decorations and fittings are concerned, in a new and beautiful house. There are other critics who have more than once turned upon the popular idol, and it would seem, when you are opposed to Mr. Irving and his method, you must be bitter and personal; you must attack his legs, you must sneer at his gait, and, if you are a caricaturist as well as a critic, you must draw hideous pictures of him, forgetting that mannerism is individuality, and that a man does not make his own legs. But to-day it is all sunshine. The courageous artist, the thoughtful actor, the conscientious student, the generous and high-minded man, has conquered. It would be eccentric, nay clownish, to stand apart amid the general congratulations, and during the week not a journal of note but has paid tribute to the actor and the manager, who, on the reopening of the Lyceum on Monday night was welcomed in the double capacity by a brilliant and enthusiastic audience, which in the stalls waved handkerchiefs at him, and in the pit raised hats and cheered with one voice. It was a scene not to be forgotten when Mr. Irving came on, for, apart from his own personal popularity, he had abolished the fee system, he had cushioned the seats of both pit and gallery, he had made each stall a comfortable and elegant seat, and transformed the heavy looking house into a very temple of art. Behind the scenes, as in front, the manager-actor had introduced notable reforms. The dressing-rooms had been decorated and properly furnished, hot and cold water being provided, and everything done to uphold the decencies and promote the comforts of life on the actors' side of the curtain. Until very lately, the conditions under which artists have had to dress in London theatres, as a rule, have been simply disgraceful. Strange to say, the provinces set the example of reform in this direction, but even now, behind the scenes of some of the London theatres is worthy of a back-slum in Seven Dials or a Bowery gaff. The Lyceum, Prince of Wales', Covent Garden, the Gaiety, the Court, and the Olympic are more or less exceptions to this, and now that managers are in the humor to "reform it altogether," we shall soon have no reason to complain, for the managers of London are like sheep—they follow a bellwether pell-mell. Mr. Irving has shown them the way, and in due course things will be pushed to extremes, changing from Seven-Dials rooms to West-End boudoirs, from a Bowery gaff to a Fifth-Avenue theatre. The Lyceum scenery for the new version of "Hamlet" is of the highest order of stage art, and it moved on the first night with the regularity of clock-work, and with the silence of greased wheels and list shoes. No entr'acte music was set down, no prompter's bell rang; the play went on without warning; the curtain went up and down with a mysterious regularity; and when, after each act, calls were made for the artists, they did not come on before the curtain, but received their honors on the scene. The orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Campbell Clarke, was out of sight, and the church-yard scene was played to a characteristic organ accompaniment. The interview between Hamlet and the Ghost took place on a wild rock-bound coast, the apparition addressing the Prince from the summit of a rock, and afterward gradually fading out, as it seemed, among the cliffs, as the russet morning broke over the sea. The court of the King was a fine, solid-looking set, and the furnishing of the Queen's room was an archæological triumph, full of well-studied mediæval detail, hung with tapestry, and suggesting an atmosphere of superstition and religious exercise grimly suitable to the incident of the play which belongs to the scene. The funeral of Ophelia was performed at eventide, which is defended by Mr. Frank Marshall on the ground of the "maimed rights" accorded to a supposed suicide; though this view of the time when the ceremony should take place is not borne out by the text, for neither Hamlet nor Horatio see anything unusual in a funeral taking place at such an hour. But this is a small matter. The scene is laid on the slope of an old-fashioned burial ground, in the solemn twilight, the processional chant of the monks in white sinking out at intervals to the requiem strains of the organ. The business of Hamlet's leaping into the grave is cut out, and the Prince's exit is made behind the group of mourners, who represent a rare picture, both as to composition and color, as the curtain goes down. There is something incongruous yet curiously impressive in playing the last scrufully trash scene in a hall of the palace looking upon a pastoral scene of lawn and silvery birch trees in their first Spring leaves. With this brief outline of scenery, which omits several exquisitely painted cloths for front scenes, the reader will have sufficient notes for realizing the fact that with-out tragedy with gorgeous scenery, Mr. Irving has had the play mounted in a worthy setting, in which the poet and the artist have worked cordially together. When the audience insisted upon the new manager saying something at the end of the performance, Mr. Irving, in a short address, said he had been working all his life to realize that night's representation of "Hamlet," and London is agreed that the effort is honorable to the manager-actor and not unworthy of Shakespeare. As to the merits of Mr. Irving's Hamlet, itself sufficient has been said on previous occasions. His scenes with the players, with Ophelia, and with his mother, are unequaled on the modern stage for their subtle power. The princely graciousness of his manner to the actors is only surpassed by his half-disguised tenderness toward Ophelia, and the struggle of his affectionate nature to "speak daggers" to his mother. In the Ophelia scenes he was assisted by Miss Ellen Terry, who is to-day the most popular actress in England. Mr. Forrester played the King, Mr. Mead, the Ghost, Mr. Swinburne, Horatio, Mr. Kyele Bellew, Osric, Mr. Beaumont, the First Player, Mr. F. Cooper, Laertes, and Miss Pauncefort the Queen. It is believed that "Faust and Marguerite" will follow "Hamlet," with Irving as Mephistopheles, and Miss Terry as Marguerite.

DETROIT'S LATEST BOY PHENOMENON.

From the Detroit (Mich.) Free Press, Jan. 16.

Detroit has developed another boy phenomenon. This time it is a 9-year-old lad, who tells instantly the day of the week of any given date, whether past or future. Thus, if one says to him, "I was born Aug. 12, 1843, what day of the week did that fall on?" he will reply instantly and correctly. He is equally ready in that regard concerning the future. He has been subjected to many tests, but thus far he has invariably been correct. He has no knowledge of the method by which he arrives at these results. When asked how he knows he replies, "Because I know it's so." The most surprising feature of the case is the fact that the boy is semi-idiotic.

HOW THE DEACON KILLED A WILD-CAT.

From the Monticello (N. Y.) Republican, Jan. 17.

An old but well-meaning Deacon in the Town of Mamakating recently captured and executed a favorite dog belonging to a neighbor, and which had been in the habit of paying him nightly visits. The owner of the dog learning its fate, asked the good man why he did it. The Deacon replied that he mistook it for a wild-cat. The body of the dog, which was black, did resemble a wild-cat about as much as it did a mule, was found tied to a bush, where it had been shot. The old gentleman was asked why he tied it up if he thought it was a wild-cat, and replied that he was afraid of it. The interrogator remarked that hunters rarely tied wild-cats up to shoot them, and then returned to his bereaved family.

PROPOSED TAXATION OF PETROLEUM.

From the Philadelphia North American, Jan. 18.

It is singular that petroleum should have so long escaped taxation. It is a source of wealth that is rapidly being exhausted, and the State should receive some advantage for this drain upon its resources. At the present rate it is not a question of many years when the whole supply will be gone, and yet thousands of barrels run to waste every day, and the digging of wells still goes on as fast as ever. The State and its citizens ought to get millions every year more than they do from the sale of this product, for doubling the price would hardly diminish the consumption 10 per cent.

THE STRANGEST METER STORY YET.

Correspondence of the Indianapolis Journal.

COVINGTON, Ind., Jan. 15, 1879.

On Tuesday night last, Leonidas Grover, who resided in the vicinity of Newtown, Fountain County, met his death in a way that is probably without parallel in this or any other country. Mr. Grover was a widower, living on his farm with a married daughter and her husband. On the evening referred to, the married couple had been absent on a visit to some neighbors, and upon returning at a late hour, entered the house, finding everything, to all appearance, in usual order, and supposing that Mr. Grover had already retired, went to bed themselves. Next morning the daughter arose, and having prepared breakfast, went to the adjoining room to call her father, and was horrified to find him lying upon his shot-gored bed, a mutilated corpse. Her screams brought the husband quickly to the bedroom, and an inspection disclosed a ragged opening in the roof, directly over the breast of the unfortunate man, which was torn through as if by a cannon-shot, and extending downward through the bedding and floor; other holes showed the direction taken by the deadly missile. Subsequent search revealed the fact that the awful calamity was caused by the fall of a meteoric stone, and the stone itself, pyramidal in shape, and weighing 20 pounds and a few ounces, avoirdupois, and stained with blood, was unearthed from a depth of nearly five feet, thus showing the fearful impetus with which it struck the dwelling. The position of the corpse, with other surroundings, when found, showed that the victim was asleep when stricken, and that death to him was painless.

OUR STREET-BOYS IN THE WEST.

A DOUBLE MISTAKE CONCERNING THE CHARACTER OF THE BOYS SENT, AND THE KIND OF HOMES THEY FIND.

From the Fayette (Mo.) Advertiser, Jan. 2.

The impression prevails in many localities west of the Mississippi River that the children sent out by the Children's Aid Society, of New-York, are the vilest and most incorrigible among the hoodlums which infest the highways and byways of the great City. This is a mistake. On the other hand, the impression is current in New-York, among those interested, that the people of the West want these children only for the profit that may be derived from their labor—in plain parlance, to utilize them as servants. This is also a mistake.

Regarding the former, we have it from a no less reliable authority than Mr. C. L. Brace himself, that all the children sent West by the society are honest and worthy. Many of them have enjoyed the comforts of home, the instruction of pious parents, and the advantages of public schools. Others not so fortunate in these respects have been selected by the society for transportation to the West only after the most rigid satisfactory investigations. Naught can be brought against any of them save their poverty. But it is this that brings them here. As to the notion that these children are brought here and delivered over into a species of slavery, that is ridiculous. They are given only to those persons known to be humane and charitable, and whose condition in life enables them to rear the children properly. Occasionally it may happen that a child finds a hard taskmaster, but not often. Generally it is just the reverse. The truth is some few of the children who are sent out here come from homes better than those they get here. That is, they think so. Finding that they are expected to take a part in the usual avocations upon the farm with the other children of the farmer by whom they may happen to be adopted, they rebel as soon as the novelty wears off and homesickness begins to tell. One little fellow, about 10 years of age, a remarkably bright child and "a good little Sunday-school boy," came out last June and was taken into a most estimable and kind-hearted family near this place. He brought several nice suits of clothing, quite a little library, and a gun. He expected to pass his time riding horses and hunting Indians. Unfortunately, however, for his peace of mind he found that there were no Indians here, and instead of riding horses all the time he was expected to make himself useful occasionally by catching them for other purposes. His own parents could not have been kinder to him, or more solicitous as to his welfare than were the parties

THE CUTTER AND TROTTER.

AFTER THE BIG SNOW-STORM.

THE JINGLING OF THE SILVER BELLS IN THE PARK AND ON THE BOULEVARDS—A MOVING PANORAMA OF FAST HORSES AND STYLISH SLEIGHS.

With not a few people the promise of good sleighing more than compensates for the temporary inconveniences of a great snow-storm. What can be more inspiriting and invigorating than gliding swiftly over the glistening, white pathway, with the silver bells ringing merrily out on the clear and bracing atmosphere, and the hoofs of the fleet trotters dashing up clouds of snow as they speed onward, to the crack of the whip and the well-known voice of the owner, who proudly holds the ribbons that guide his favorite steed? That the public fully appreciates the advantages yielded by the great storm has been shown by the merry parties who during the last two days have turned out in force and fashionable equipages to speed along the snow-covered roads of Central Park and the Boulevards. All through the afternoons and far into the night the whitened track resounded with the musical jingle of the sleigh-bells and the muffled trample of speeding hoofs. The snow was just beginning to lose its "heaviness" yesterday, and good speed was made on the yielding tracks, but even better sleighing may be expected if the weather continues pleasant a day or two later, when the tracks become hardened and perfect in condition. The enjoyment of the sport, has not been confined to the rich, for, with an eye to golden gain, the old Manhattan stage-sleighs that years ago used to drag their heavy forms up and down Broadway, freezing the passengers, who in vain tried to warm their feet in damp, dirty, and trampled straw, were brought out by the Boulevard Stage Company, who for a moderate compensation allowed the humbler classes the pleasant privilege of a ride among the fashionable folks who swarm St. Nicholas-avenue. These stage sleighs are drawn by four-in-hand teams of strong horses, and when loaded with a joyous crowd of children and grown folks, who climb aboard over the high rails of the big runners, the long whip is snapped, and away the party go on a journey to One Hundred and Twenty-ninth-street. The drives of Central Park have been crowded with sleighing parties during the past two days and nights, and the air has echoed with the tintinnabulation of the bells and the pealing laughter of rosy-cheeked girls. Family parties go riding along in handsome and commodious sleighs. The Plaza, beyond which the great fountain rises in whitened outline and the snow-covered surface of the lake, deserted by skaters, stretches out in broad perspective, presents daily an inspiriting scene. But night the merriest of all sleighing parties ride out, bent upon a royal time, and, as the large sleighs, full of girls and their escorts, dash along beneath the stars, the notes of merry songs mingle with the jingling of the bells. A favorite way of reaching St. Nicholas-avenue is to drive through the Park to the upper exit, and cross to the avenue, passing the high mound, from the snow-crested top of which the old brown fort, of Revolutionary days, rises in lonesome profile against the background of gray sky and white-tipped fringe of fir-trees. The scene on the avenue is a constantly changing panorama.

Central-avenue has also been crowded with pleasure-seekers. From the bridge a perfect view of the Winter landscape unfolded itself to view. On one side stretched the ice-covered surface of the Harlem River, broken here and there by tiny lakes, whose rippling surfaces glitter in the distance. Far away in the distance, dimmed by the storm clouds, rise the misty outlines of the City, with its tall spires standing out darkly here and there against the sky, while the muffled roar of its busy streets strikes upon the ear faintly. On the other side the gray outline of High Bridge, with its top and giant arches fringed with frost, stands out against a background of gray hills and snow-covered fir trees and a patch of bluish clouds. Beneath the arches glitters an unbroken field of ice, and tiny snow-birds often perch upon the rails of Central Bridge and seem to study the countless details of the landscape, and seem to be loath to leave when sleighs dash by and pedestrians brush beside them. St. Nicholas-avenue, however, is most frequented by persons who have fast teams, and, standing upon the porch of the club-house, a spectator may view many an exciting brush for a lead. He may see William H. Vanderbilt dash by behind Captain Jack or some other favorite, and Robert Bonner handling the ribbons of one of his teams. Capt. Jacob Vanderbilt will, perhaps, next appear with a brisk bay team. Mr. Lorillard goes by daily with Mr. Kipt, his brother-in-law, keeping neck and neck with his team of Hartford. One of the brothers Havemeyer is there with a fast young stallion, and Meanness and Kels dash the snow aside in small clouds as they speed along with J. D. Brown, a well-known figure at the ribbons. Red Jim, a Kentucky horse, and his mate carry Mr. Eastman swiftly over the road, and Mr. Reed, of the Hoffman House, glides by with his team New Berlin Girl and Kentucky. The chestnut gelding Innviter trots swiftly by, driven by John Kay, and William Jordan and O. Keyser, Wall-street men, have an interesting brush with each other. Bookmaker then makes time, with Charley Walsh's single sleigh, and Sheppard Knapp, Royal Nichols, Charles and Michael Cashman, Joseph Lyon, J. Miller, Daniel Moran, and Charles White brush by together. Lady Frisk comes speedily down the road, with Robert Taggart at the rein, May Bird and Music come swiftly along, with Alee Bonner holding them well in hand, and Tom Fraser and John Q. have a friendly brush, with Thomas Gilsewin and William Dougherty holding their respective reins. Then Mr. Bodwein, an expert with the ribbons, dashes by with a stylish four-in-hand, followed by Samuel Loudin, with his team Bricks and Mortar. Sam Walsh is out with his new purchase, Plummer Boy, and Messrs. Orton and Collins pass together speedily with Young Woesful and George Palmer, both fleet of foot, drivers and horses both seeming to enjoy to its full the exhilaration and excitement of the glorious sport.

COMING BALLS AND RECEPTIONS.

The fourteenth grand carnival ball of the Cercle Français de l'Harmonie takes place at the Academy of Music to-morrow evening. An attractive programme has been arranged. The orchestra is to be composed of 100 musicians, under the direction of Mr. Max Schwab. During the progress of the ball "La Danse des Antipodes," said to be a very amusing spectacle, will be performed by M. Carron and his troupe of Parisian artists, who will dance upon their hands with their feet in the air. "Camargo," one of Charles Lecocq's quadrilles, which has met with great success in Paris, will be given at 3 o'clock in the morning. The supper-room will be in Nilsson Hall, and remain open through the night.

A week from to-morrow evening, Jan. 27, occurs the one hundred and twentieth anniversary of the birth of the poet Robert Burns, an event which is to be properly celebrated by the Greenpoint Robert Burns Club, at Eckford Hall. The occasion will be the second annual celebration by the club, the guests of which will dine at 8 o'clock.

On Wednesday evening the annual reception by the Post Office employes attached to Station A will be given at Irving Hall. Grafulla's Seventh Regiment Band is engaged to furnish the music, and a happy evening is anticipated.

The various committees having in charge the grand fancy-dress ball of the German Liederkranz, which occurs at the Academy of Music, Thursday night, Feb. 13, are busily engaged in preparing a most enjoyable programme for their guests. The demand for tickets has already begun. They can only be obtained upon a proper introduction through a member of the society, and the payment of $10 for each ticket, admitting a gentleman and one lady. The tickets are about six inches long by three inches wide, and are very handsomely lithographed in colors. The obverse represents an animated scene at a masked ball, and on the back is a cartoon in which a court jester is advancing with a blooming maiden upon his arm dressed in a costume liberally covered with gold coins, while a portly dame, robed in greenbacks, stands scowling at one side.

The military and civic reception of the old Guard, which is announced to take place at the Academy of Music on Thursday evening next, the 23d inst., promises to be one of the most important social events of the season. Downing's Ninth Regiment military band will furnish the promenade, and Bernstein's string band the dance music. The selections for the promenade have been specially arranged for the occasion, and dedicated to the various representative military organizations of the country. One of the features of the evening will be the grand march of the Old Guard, joined by all the military visitors in uniform. Nilsson Hall, where the supper will be served a la carte, will be decorated, as well as the Academy, with floral contributions from the ladies of Savannah and Charleston. The cordial welcome extended by the Old Guard to the citizen soldiers of the South, en route to the Bunker Hill celebration in 1875, is kindly remembered, by the fair daughters of Georgia and South Carolina. The reception on Thursday evening next will be attended by Governors and staffs, prominent officers in the regular Army, members of the Diplomatic Corps, and gentlemen distinguished in other walks of life. It will be one of the best social events of the season.

BANK DIRECTORS INDICTED.

Three others of the indicted Directors of the Mechanics' and Laborers' Savings Bank of Jersey City—Messrs. Thomas C. O'Callaghan, a well-known physician; A. J. Dittmar, a builder, and Jeremiah Sweeney, of the Erie Railway—were yesterday arraigned to answer the indictment charging them with conspiring to defraud the depositors of the bank by concealing the fact of its insolvency. Bail was fixed at $2,500, and Joseph Warren became bail for Dr. O'Callaghan, and white H. M. Traphagen and Jacob Wagner became surety for Mr. Sweeney and Mr. Dittmar. Then occurred a rather singular scene. Mr. Halliard, who had been hailed the day before by Daniel E. Cleary, walked into court with Constable Locke, who, he stated, had informed him that there was a third indictment pending against him, and that if he would come to court Mr. Cleary would meet him and become his security on the third indictment. He was surprised to find that the story was only a trick to get him to court, as he did when Mr. Cleary stepped forward and said he desired to surrender Mr. Halliard into the custody of the court. The bail-bond was ordered vacated, and Mr. Halliard was placed in custody, and, being unable to procure another bondsman, he was locked up. He will be given another opportunity to find bail to-morrow morning, unless, in the meantime, his friends come to his rescue. Mr. Cleary's conduct in luring Mr. Halliard to court is very greatly condemned, but he says he was prompted by information to the effect that Mr. Halliard was making arrangements to leave the country.

AN UNRECORDED BIT OF HISTORY.

BENEDICT ARNOLD'S NARROW ESCAPE FROM DEATH AT THE HANDS OF A WOMAN.

The recent death of Mrs. Ann Hinman Kellogg, of Fairfield, Conn., in the ninety-third year of her age, recalls an unrecorded incident of the war of the Revolution. Mrs. Kellogg was the daughter of Capt. Elisha Hinman, of the United States Navy, and her mother was the only American who remained in New-London when the town was destroyed by the traitor Benedict Arnold in 1781. At that time Capt. Hinman's ship was hourly expected to arrive at New-London, and it was hoped that he might come in time to save the town. Mrs. Hinman was well acquainted with Arnold, as he had often dined at her house, and had been a friend of her husband. Induced by anxiety for her husband's safety, she remained after all others had fled, and watched the entry of the British from the doorway of her house. As Arnold rode up he saw and saluted her, and said that if she would point out her own property it should be spared. She pointed out the houses of several of her neighbors as her own, and thus saved them from destruction. Arnold remained on horseback near her house nearly all day noting the battle that was raging at Fort Griswold, on the Groton side of the river, where the tall monument commemorating the event now stands. Three times were the British driven down the hill by the deadly fire from the fort. Then the ammunition of its defenders became exhausted, and they were obliged to surrender. The British officer in command of the storming party was so enraged at the desperate defense of the fort, that, as he entered it, he asked, "Who commands here?" Col. Ledyard replied. "I did, but you do now," at the same time surrendering his sword. The officer received the sword and instantly plunged it into the heart of the gallant Colonel. An American officer, standing beside his Colonel, snatched his own sword from its scabbard and in a moment the cowardly Briton lay dead beside his victim. An indiscriminate massacre of all within the fort followed, and 30 of the wounded American were piled into a wagon that was rolled down a steep hillside to the bottom, where it was dashed in pieces against a tree. Then hurried preparations were made to evacuate their position by the British. Arnold having learned of the expected arrival of Capt. Hinman.

Mrs. Hinman, having witnessed these outrages from her housetop, became so incensed against the traitor that she hurriedly descended from the roof, took a musket from a closet where it had been left the day before by an American soldier, and leveled it at Arnold as he sat on his horse in front of the house. Taking a long, steady aim, she pulled the trigger, but the piece missed fire. Hearing the snap of the lock, Arnold turned and asked her what that noise was. With great presence of mind she had dropped the gun, so that he did not see it, and she answered that it was the breaking of a chair.

This incident formed the subject of a painting by Huntington, the artist, whose wife is a grand-niece of Mrs. Hinman. This painting is now in the possession of Mr. Thomas Day, of Bergen Point, N. J. In it Mrs. Hinman is represented as leveling a musket at Arnold from a window of her house, and the burning town is seen in the background. The remains of both Capt. and Mrs. Hinman now lie in the Cedar Grove Cemetery at New-London, where their monument is one of the finest to be seen.

AN ATTEMPT AT HIGHWAY ROBBERY.

AN UNKNOWN MAN TRIES TO STEAL MRS. HARTMAN'S $500, AND FAILS.

A bold but unsuccessful attempt was made yesterday afternoon by an unknown thief to rob Mrs. Anna Hartman, wife of Emil Hartman, proprietor of a manufactory at No. 586 Washington-street, of a sachel containing $500 in greenbacks and silver coin. The Hartmans live at No. 75 Congress-street, Brooklyn, and Mrs. Hartman comes to this City every Saturday to draw the money needed to pay the hands in her husband's works and carry it from the bank to the works. She left her home at 11 o'clock yesterday morning, and went to the Eleventh Ward Bank, in Avenue D, where Mr. Hartman's accounts are kept. As she went into the bank she noticed several men lounging about the doorway, but paid no attention to them. Mrs. Hartman went to the Paying Teller's desk and drew $500, which she placed in a small hand-sachel. As she did so one of the men who had been standing about the door entered the bank, and, after looking about ostensibly in search of some one, went out. Mrs. Hartman remained at the bank until 1 o'clock, when she walked to Avenue C and Tenth-street, and there got on board a Houston-street cross-town car. man boarded the car at the same time. Mrs. Hartman rode to Washington-street, where she alighted and walked to Clarkson-street. While crossing the street at this point a man suddenly stepped in front of Mrs. Hartman and seized the sachel by the handle. The frightened woman held on to it with both hands and screamed loudly for help. The thief attempted to wrench the sachel from her grasp, but was unsuccessful, and as the passers-by were coming to her aid he let go and took to his heels. He ran down Washington to Houston-street, and turned into the latter street. Several men pursued the thief and were close upon him when he darted into the doorway of a tenement-house, ran to the rear yard, and climbing over the fence made good his escape. After all was over a policeman appeared and escorted Mrs. Hartman to her husband's establishment, where she fainted from excitement. When she recovered she went to the Charles-Street Police Station and described the man who endeavored to rob her as about 23 years of age, dressed in a fashionable suit of grey clothes, and wearing a slouch hat.

THE PASSAIC COUNTY GRAND JURY.

INDICTMENTS FOUND AGAINST THE MORRIS CANAL COMPANY AND A PATERSON JUSTICE.

The Passaic County (N. J.) Grand Jury has substantially completed its labors at the present term of court, and although it has not reported all the bills agreed upon, its principal work seems to be pretty well understood. Among the bills agreed upon is one indicting the Morris Canal Company for failing to keep in proper repair a bridge across the canal at Browertown, on a private or farm road, where the company, it is claimed, is required to keep a suitable bridge. The company's employes claim that a public road was laid across the bridge some years ago, whereby the bridge became a public charge. The Grand Jury were not satisfied that such was the fact, and hence this indictment. It is not impossible that the company may be indicted for the bad condition of other bridges in the county, which are equally inaccessible and dilapidated. Another important indictment is understood to be against a prominent Paterson Justice of the Peace, who has figured frequently in the courts of late in an unenviable light. The charge is embezzlement. Under what is known as the Disorderly act, the Justices may summarily try and fine persons for using abusive language in public places, and the fines are required to be paid over monthly to the County Collector. It is a notorious fact that the Justices have collected considerable sums under this act, but few of them have ever made any returns. This Justice is probably not the only one who will be overhauled for similar delinquencies.

Arthur H. Greenwood, who has been prosecuting 20 or 30 liquor-dealers at Passaic for selling illegally, he being entitled, under a city ordinance, to a reward of $50 for each conviction, was indicted for conspiracy with certain of his assistants to persuade Harry Leive, one of the liquor-dealers, to sell liquor on Sunday. He was arraigned in court yesterday, and held to bail for trial.

There was not the least foundation for the rumor that several of the chosen Freeholders had been indicted. No complaint was made against them. The reputation of the Passaic County Board is exceptionally good for honest, prudent, and economical management.

THICK-HEADED JERSEY POLICEMEN.

The Jersey City Police have given the public another illustration of their aptness at doing the right thing the wrong way. The city ordinance requires the occupants of houses to clear the snow from the walks and one foot beyond. The order was given and complied with in most cases, but on the streets through which the horse cars run the railroad employes shoveled it back, covering the gutter. Again the occupants were notified to clear the gutters, and did so, and again the railroad men shoveled it back. Now the same parties have been notified to clear their gutters a third time, and naturally they object. The proper way would be to notify the company not to refill the gutters; but the proper way of doing a thing never occurs to the average Jersey City policeman until all other methods have been exhausted.

FUNERAL OF DR. W. T. NEALIS.

The funeral of Dr. W. T. Nealis, Surgeon of the Sixty-ninth Regiment, took place yesterday forenoon from the Church of the Holy Innocents. Dr. Nealis served during the late war as Surgeon of the Irish Legion, and won for himself the title of "The Fighting Doctor." He was afterward Surgeon at the Tombs. The funeral was attended by the Sixty-ninth Regiment Veteran Corps, the Xavier Union, the Xavier Alumni Sodality, and a large number of the Doctor's friends and comrades. A solemn requiem high mass was celebrated at the church by Rev. Father Doherty, assisted by Fathers Donnelly and Fizharris as Deacon and Sub-Deacon. The body was taken to Calvary Cemetery for burial.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

The arrests by the Police during the past week numbered 906.

The Holland, from Glasgow, brought 24 immigrants yesterday, and the State of Nevada, from Glasgow, 14.

Mr. Roger M. Sherman, ex-Assistant United States Attorney, has purchased the sloop-yacht Intrepid, formerly owned in the New-York Yacht Club.

The Department of Public Works received last week the sum of $10,193 07 for Croton rents. During the same period the Mayor's Marshal granted 165 licenses, and collected $421 75.

The outgoing European steam-ships yesterday carried 44,026 letters and 71 bags of newspapers. The receipts from the sale of postage stamps at the New-York Post Office during the week ending yesterday were $57,700.

The annual benefit of the French Benevolent Society occurs at the Academy of Music on Saturday evening next. The French opera "Haidée" will be given in French, for the first time in this City, by the New-Orleans French Opera Troupe.

There were reported at the Bureau of Vital Statistics during the past week 632 deaths, 558 births, and 145 marriages, showing an increase of 63 deaths and 8 births, and a decrease of 18 marriages as compared with the previous week.

Henry Lampke, of No. 389 Bleecker-street, was run over at Sixteenth-street and Ninth-avenue by engine No. 1 of the New-York Elevated Railroad, yesterday, and was so terribly injured that he died while being conveyed to Roosevelt Hosdital.

An order discontinuing the suit of Lawrence S. Curry against Police Capt. Alexander S. Williams, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, was entered yesterday, in Supreme Court, Chambers. The suit was for damages alleged to have been suffered by Curry, who was ejected from Gilmore's Garden by Williams.

The Advisory Committee on the subject of purchasing a new building, recently appointed by the Produce Exchange, have approved the report of the sub-committee advising certain methods of procedure, the substance of which has been already published. These will be submitted to a vote of the Exchange on the 21st inst.

The Governing Committee of the Mining Exchange have resolved to waive the six months' notice agreed upon between themselves and the New-York Stock Exchange whenever the latter should deem it advisable to deal in mining stocks on their own exchange and have voted the privilege of the Mining Exchange to members of the Stock Exchange on payment of the annual dues.

Albert F. Richards has begun a suit in the United States Circuit Court against the North German Fire Insurance Company, claiming $25,000 damages for breach of contract. He claims to have been employed for a term of five years as the manager of the New-York branch of the defendant's business, and that they have since violated the agreement by dismissing him.

BROOKLYN.

During the past year permits have been granted by the Department of Fire and Buildings for the erection of 1,748 new buildings.

Michael Kane, of No. 204 Tillary-street, quarreled with his wife last evening, while drunk, and struck her on the head with a bar of iron, inflicting a severe wound. Kane was arrested and locked up in the First Precinct Station-house.

Henry Gibbons, of No. 19 Flatbush-avenue, received a fracture of the skull by falling on the sidewalk last Friday evening. The splinters of bone pressing on the brain of the unfortunate man rendered him insane. He was taken to the asylum at Flatbush for treatment.

Mayor Howell yesterday placed on file vetoes of the resolutions of the Board of Aldermen under which a number of the minor offices in the gift of the Common Council were filled. With the aid of Alderman O'Reilly, who is an Independent Democrat, the Republicans will be enabled to override Mr. Howell's veto by a two-thirds vote.

A man who gave the name of Peter Smith was caught yesterday in the act of ransacking the house of Mrs. McGinnias, No. 329 Adams-street. On being taken before Justice Walsh he acknowledged his guilt, and said he resided in Norfolk-street, New-York. On searching the prisoner, who was committed to await the action of the Grand Jury, a bunch of skeleton keys were found which would open almost any door.

Judge Pratt rendered his decision yesterday in the case of Messrs. Dady and Milne, who were jointly indicted with Commissioners Flaherty and Bennett, of the Board of City Works, for conspiracy to defraud the city out of $50.0 0. Mr. Milne, who is Water Purveyor, and Mr. Dady, who is Superintendent of Sewers, demurred to the indictment on the ground that it was too general. Judge Pratt overruled the demurrer. On Monday next arrayment will be heard in reference to the settlement of a day for the trial of the same.

WESICHESTER COUNTY.

Rev. Dr. T. Ralston Smith, of Yonkers, has accepted a call from the Westminster Presbyterian Church, at Buffalo.

There was no special term of the Supreme Court held at White Plains yesterday, Judge Dykman having buried his only daughter on Wednesday.

Frederick Hendrickson, who said he was a resident of Boston, was arrested last evening on a charge of attempting to pass a bogus check for $48 on John McGoldrick, of No. 177 Washington-street. The check was drawn on the Pacific National Bank of Boston.

A slight fire, occasioned by the bursting of a kerosene-oil lamp in the still-room of the Atlantic Oil Works, corner of Smith-street and Atlantic-avenue, occurred last evening. The damage to the works was slight, but Neil McCormack, the engineer, was badly burned about the head and face.

School Commissioner George W. Smith died at his residence, in Portchester, yesterday morning of pneumonia. He was the only successful Democratic nominee in the county at last November's election, beating Caspar G. Brower, Republican, by 31 votes. The vacancy may be filled by appointment of the County Judge for this year, and by election next Fall for the remaining two years of the term.

Citizens of Tarrytown are agitating the question of erecting a new and handsome monument to commemorate the capture of the British spy, Major Andre, in place of the present monument which stands on the spot where his capture is believed to have been made, and it is proposed that the dedicatory ceremonies take place on Sept. 25, 1880, which will be the centennial anniversary of that great historic event of the American Revolution.

LONG ISLAND.

The steam-tug John Crooker was sunk in Newtown Creek on Friday night by colliding with the ice abutments at the bridge.

The new edifice of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church at Babylon is nearly completed, and will soon be occupied. The main building is 36 by 60, with an extension 30 by 15 feet, to be used as a vestry-room. The basement will be used for Sabbath-school purposes.

NEW-JERSEY.

Mr. George H. White, of Bayonne, who was reported dead at Bay Ridge, Long Island, and his wife have become reconciled, and the divorce proceedings commenced by Mrs. White have been withdrawn. Mrs. White will take her husband home as soon as he can be removed with safety.

A huge piece of rock, thrown from a blast in the Pennsylvania Railroad cut, Jersey City, on Friday afternoon, crashed through the side of a frame house on Magnolia-avenue, making a hole two feet square, passing within a few feet of a cradle in which was a sleeping child. The shock broke several windows in the house, which was seriously damaged. The railroad company promptly adjusted the damages.

In the Passaic County Court of Common Pleas, yesterday, the court quashed the attachment in the case of Wilkie against Martin, recently reported in THE TIMES. Justice of the Peace Loftus issued an attachment against Martin's furniture, and had it stored on his own premises, exacting $7 50 rent for ten days' occupancy. The court decided that the attachment was illegally issued. Loftus has already been sued for the $7 50 and compelled to make restitution.

UNPRINCIPLED DRUGGISTS.

Druggists as a class are singularly conscientious in their dealings with the public, but there are a few unprincipled ones who, for the sake of a little additional profit sell cheap and impure drugs for pure, and impose upon their customers by palming off spurious and worthless imitations of well-known and superior preparations for the genuine. Such druggists are unworthy of public confidence, and should be avoided when found out. Several cases have been reported to us recently where druggists have sought to deceive their customers by offering them cheap and miserable imitations of BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER, or a common porous plaster, when BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER was asked for, falsely asserting that the common article was equal in point of merit. BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER is the only improvement ever made on the old style of porous plasters. It contains an entirely new combination of active vegetable ingredients, to which is added the virtues of capcine porous plasters, and its remarkable pain-relieving, strengthening, and curative properties are due. We respectfully request all interested who have any doubts concerning its merit to consult reliable physicians in their own locality about it, and if convinced that it is what it is claimed to be, to observe the following simple precaution in buying: See that the word C-A-P-C-I-N-E is correctly spelled, and that each plaster has the word CAPCINE cut through it. By so doing you can obtain the genuine of any druggist. The proprietors of BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER were awarded the highest and only medals given for rubber plasters at both the Centennial and Paris Expositions.—Advertisement.

HOME RULE UNDER NICHOLS

GLANCES AT THREE PARISHES.

THE ELECTION IN NATCHITOCHES, TENSAS, AND CADDO—WHITE LEAGUE "REMONSTRANCES"—HOW "INTELLIGENCE AND INTEGRITY" RULE THE STATE — CONCILIATION IN LOUISIANA.

From Our Own Correspondent.

NEW-ORLEANS, Saturday Night.

I.

The Senate Committee, of which Mr. Telfer is Chairman, have examined this week about 60 witnesses. They came from Natchitoches, Tensas, and Caddo Parishes.

Counties are called parishes in Louisiana.

These witnesses have exhibited the nature of "self-government," (the italics as well as the phrase is from the President's inaugural address,) and they have illustrated what is meant by "Home Rule" in this region of our great Republic.

I have listened to all of this sad and weary testimony. But I do not propose to repeat, even in the swiftest summary, the shocking incidents of the story of the last election as told by the executioners of its criminal and its shameful acts.

II.

The essential features of the campaign can be rapidly sketched, and I have neither time nor the inclination to do more.

The Autumnal election was the inevitable result of the inauguration of a State Government chosen by a minority of the legal citizens of Louisiana. What "national statesmen" insisted on as "a necessity" in the government of the State, the local politicians insisted was equally a necessity in the government of its parishes. It was resolved that the Intelligence and Integrity of the parishes should rule them, without regard to the numerical preponderance of the legal voters, who were decreed to be destitute alike of Intelligence and Integrity. It was resolved, also, that all the white Democrats were men of Intelligence and Integrity, and it is universally admitted here—among all "men of honor, Sir, and high character"—that the black Republicans have no Intelligence, and the white Republicans no Integrity.

There was a common and fixed purpose to create a solid Democratic State; but the agencies for the execution of this universal resolve appear to have been confided quite largely to the Intelligence and Integrity of the individual parishes.

Hence, where these were men of kindly and civilized instincts the political science of bull-dozing was exhibited in its humaner aspects; while its coarser and its criminal features were displayed with hideous distinctness in parishes infested by ruffians or controlled by leaders of violent temper. But, whatever the method, "gentlemen" and "bandits" were equally inflexible in their purpose to carry the election for Intelligence and Integrity.

III.

In Natchitoches (pronounced Nakatosh) the leader of the Democracy is a young gentleman of fine personal appearance and a pleasant address. He is a lawyer. In that parish the Republican leaders, both white and black, were driven into exile—"charitably exiled," was the polite term selected to describe their expulsion; but no more physical force was used than was absolutely necessary to insure that result. There were no assassinations of negroes, nor whippings, nor any other violent methods of electioneering.

Political managers who should conduct a campaign in this fashion in the North or West would probably be shot before the election, and certainly they would be sent to the penitentiary if they survived it. Here they are sent to the Legislature. Each section of our favored country has its own distinctive usages, and far be it from me to interfere, even by the expression of a preference, with Home Rule or State rights in such mere minor matters of detail. I take pleasure in saying that the leader of the Natchitoches Democracy is the best of all the bull-dozers I have ever met, and that I have quite a kindly sentiment toward him. There are bull-dozers and bull-dozers, and I prefer the clean-shirted and kid-gloved variety.

There never were any carpet-baggers in Natchitoches Parish; the Republican officers there were ex-Confederate soldiers, supplemented by a few intelligent colored men; there had been no corruption and no stealing, and no local misgovernment in the parish, and the blacks were and are solidly, and, perhaps, even stolidly, Republicans—and in an overwhelming numerical majority. No Republican ticket was nominated at the last election. The parish is under Home Rule now.

IV.

Tensas is an equally strong Republican parish. It had been well governed, it had been entirely exempt from "the curse of Northern adventurers," and the blacks had always elected Southern-born whites who had fought for the Lost Cause (now found again) as officers, with a smaller proportion of honest men of their own color and race. Democrats attest these facts. The original plan of the Democratic leaders in this parish did equal credit to their strategic skill, and, to be entirely courteous, to their capacity to rise superior to their own political prejudices. The two Republican white leaders were able men, but it cannot be denied that they were scalawags—the most detested by stalwart Democrats of all classes of Southern men. A scalawag is a Southern white gentleman who believes in the political creed of Abraham Lincoln and Charles Sumner. It was reckoned that if these two scalawags came "over" and consented to run on the Democratic ticket they might bring over a number of the negroes with them. This would be the cheapest and quietest way of managing the campaign in the interests of the Democracy. These two office-holders, without consulting the Republicans of the Parish, or any of them, did so consent, and by the concurrence of the Democratic Committee in this arrangement the Democratic Parish Ticket was nominated. No convention was called to consider or ratify this fusion.

The colored leader of the Republicans was a man of excellent character, and universally respected by both races—a Baptist preacher, and a hard-working farmer, who owned his own house and 80 acres of good land, well stocked. He saw through this scheme, and resolved to defeat it. He was a candidate for Congress. With a fair count he was absolutely certain of an election by an overwhelming majority. He desired and obtained a conference with the Democratic Parish Committee, and was ready to propose a compromise. They heard him, and declined to negotiate with him, although he had been duly authorized by a Party Convention to treat with them. They stated that they had already arranged with the Republican Party, through the two candidates already spoken of, who had received no authority from any body of Republicans to treat with them. They were satisfied. Why should not he be satisfied? Fairfax then consulted with his friends, and they determined to make up a ticket of Democrats exclusively—all white men—planters and old citizens. These gentlemen who accepted this offer to run an opposition ticket on the condition that they should run distinctively as Democrats. They had been lifelong Democrats, and they are Democrats to-day. They were willing that Fairfax should run for Congress if they were invested with the local authority. A Republican Convention was to be called on Monday, Oct. 13, to ratify this judicious compact. This masterly movement threatened to defeat the plans of the coparceners, as well as to destroy the prospect of electing a Democratic Congressman. The Democratic committee knew that the new Democratic candidates could not be bull-dozed, for they, too, were men of Intelligence and Integrity, and in Louisiana it is a well-attested fact that all men of Integrity and Intelligence are not wholly unfamiliar with the use of carnal weapons.

V.

There was now only one plan by which Fairfax could be defeated. He must be "remonstrated with" by the "regular" friends of Integrity and Intelligence. An armed company of men from an adjoining county, but in the same Congressional District, rode up late one night to Fairfax's house to "remonstrate" with him. This is the theory of their friends. The Remonstrants were led by Capt. Peck, whom a leading Democratic witness, a prominent planter and an old citizen, described as a man of "high character and high ancestry." The Remonstrants rapidly approached the house. After dismounting, the advance, led by Capt. Peck, rushed up to the door. They pushed past Mrs. Fairfax, who had opened it. As soon as the Captain saw Mr. Fairfax he opened his remarks, (in remonstrance,) by saying, "There is that —— now!" and then fired his revolver at him. The ball missed the preacher and entered the door, near him. Mr. Fairfax ran. A second shot missed him. He escaped. Capt. Peck then fired four balls (in remonstrance) into another colored man who was in the room. This man died after a few days of agony. Two other colored men were also badly wounded. Mr. Fairfax had a brother, but he escaped unharmed. There were four women in the house at the time. They fled to a neighbor's cabin as soon as the firing began. While the firing was going on in the rooms, the Remonstrants outside shot wildly through the windows. They killed their leader. They then returned home, carrying his riddled corpse with them. The women and the two wounded survivors gave a clear and graphic account of this affray.

Now was the time for Gov. Nicholls to redeem his promises to President Hayes. Prompt action was taken to vindicate the violated majesty of the law by the friends of Intelligence and Integrity. No investigation of the attack on Mr. Fairfax's house was made; there was no effort instituted to discover the names of the men who followed the lead of Capt. Peck; but a warrant was quickly issued for the arrest of Mr. Fairfax, charging him with the murder of Capt. Peck! This action is in strict accordance with the code that governs the conduct of Home Rulers in Louisiana.

VI.

Other companies hastened to the Parish. Of course, it was reported that the negroes were in arms, and that the lives of the whites were in imminent danger. One company crossed from Mississippi. They were significantly and speedily notified by the white supporters of the Independent Ticket that this was "not a niggers' war," but a quarrel between white Democrats, and that they had better return to their own State. They went back.

VII.

Meanwhile, one of the armed companies that marched through the parish came to a thickly-peopled negro settlement and fired a murderous volley into their quarters at Basse's Lane. They reported that they had been fired into by the negroes. One of them, examined under oath, attests that he heard no firing, although, as he was in the ranks, he must necessarily have heard the shots, if there had been any shots from the negroes. But, according to the Captain's statement, eight negroes were killed at the time.

VIII.

One attempt to overawe the white Independent Democrats was promptly withdrawn. They were Southern white men, and they would not listen to a remonstrance. Five other negroes were killed in this parish. This statement comes from Democratic testimony. But the reports at the time gave a larger list of slain, and the Senate investigation has not yet been concluded.

This series of episodes accomplished its purpose. There was no Republican candidate for Congress in Tensas Parish. The race issue was raised, and then the Independent Democratic parish ticket was defeated by fraud.

IX.

Caddo Parish is in the western part of the State. It is a strong Republican parish, with a dense black population, and yet it was absolutely necessary that the Democrats should carry it in order to elect another Congressman. In neither of these districts, under a fair count, could any Democratic candidate secure even a respectable minority vote.

There was intimidation at the meetings of colored voters during that campaign. But the Republican leaders had adopted the wise policy of selecting young white Democrats exclusively—or with but a single exception—for their local candidates in order to divide the white or Democratic vote and to secure the support of the fighting race. The blacks were urged to support them for the reason that they were young men, and not wedded as the old men were wedded, to the theories of ante-bellum times. References to the days of slavery were denounced as "incendiary," and all illustrations showing that the negroes were still toiling for inadequate pay—as by the system of leasing and "advances"—that prevailed in that parish were fiercely decried by the Democratic leaders as efforts to incite labor against capital.

X.

The ballot-box at one precinct was placed in a "bull-dozing district," so difficult to reach that, in ordinary weather, as one witness said, "only a duck or a bird could get to it" from the lands where the masses of the negroes worked. A party of 300 or more blacks traveled about 35 miles to get to it; traveled through thickets and swamps—for the Democrats had taken the precaution to remove the ferry-boat. After this box had been used all day, a party of armed white men seized it and destroyed it.

XI.

At another precinct—Caledonia—between 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon, a company of mounted men, not residents of the settlement, nor voters there, arrived, every man fully armed, and under military command. Shortly afterward two white men began to wrestle, and in the course of their scuffle they ran against a lame black man. He asked them civilly to "keep off his leg." The Republicans assert that this scuffle was a pretext to begin a riot. It is certain that one of the whites immediately accused the black man of striking him, and then called loudly for his shot-gun. Another white man began to fire his revolver. The blacks scattered, or, as the phrase here is, "they squandered." They ran to the house of a colored man near by, the only colored candidate on the ticket. Instantly the cry was raised that they were running for their guns. In this house there were four or five shot-guns, which had been kept there for several days, because threats had been made by a personal enemy—also a colored man—to set his cotton-gin on fire.

Quick volleys were fired by the whites. Seven or eight negroes were killed; one white man was wounded.

This riot would seem to be a senseless as well as brutal slaughter—certainly rather a drunken than a political affray—if one could keep out of sight the simultaneous arrival of the armed men. The negroes had voted; the Democrats had sole control of the ballot-boxes. What benefit could come from a riot in the evening? In the morning a riot might have dispersed the voters; but now what political purpose could it serve?

The Republicans say that it was intended to arouse the animosity of race in order to prevent a fair count; for the white friends of the Independent candidates were present at the polls, and they would have seen to it that there was either an honest return or a "regular" Democratic funeral. The race issue once raised, even these men were powerless.

And, if this was the purpose, it was entirely successful, for the parish and this ward of it was returned as having voted for the Bourbon branch of the Democracy.

XII.

Thus, in Caddo and in Tensas, by raising the race issues—by threats, and by the slaughter of the blacks—the Independent Democrats were defeated. In Natchitoches, the Democrats, by "charitably exiling" the Republican leaders, achieved the same conciliatory results. By similar expedients, in other parishes, two members of Congress were secured in the strongest Republican districts of the Gulf State.

XIII.

There were no outrages in the sugar-growing parishes. Cotton is no longer a king. Cotton is a bull-dozer now. Sugar is the true conciliator. Why? Because before the season of the political campaign ends the cotton crop is gathered for the most part, and even when the negroes are driven from their plantations there is no vital injury done to the planters. But, in the sugar-growing parishes, the campaign is begun, carried on, and ended in the height of the season, and bull-dosing, by demoralizing labor, would bring instant ruin on the planters. The bull-dozers have not interfered with the black sugar-growers of Louisiana since 1868. The negroes there elect the planters and other whites to the local offices, and they are allowed to vote as they please for Governmental and legislative candidates.

XIV.

By and by the bull-dozer will be brought face to face with the planter. Amite County, in Mississippi, was nearly ruined by the bull-dozer. As long as the negro was the sole victim of outrage no planter seized his shot-gun to defend him. But, seeing the approaching ruin, they organized as "Moderators," and sternly threatened the bull-dozing "Regulators." They conquered a peace, yet not until many of them who had once urged on the Regulators had been made bankrupts by the exodus of the negro.

The future of the negro is not wholly dark here, although the present is gloomy enough. Greek will meet Greek, by and by, and the Greek who owns the soil will win, and the negro will share his victory. J. R.

THE SITUATION IN THE EAST.

GREECE'S FRONTIER DEMANDS—RUMORS OF SHERE ALI'S RETURN TO KABUL.

LONDON, Jan. 19.—Reuter's dispatch from Athens says that Mukhtar Pasha has decided on Janina as the meeting-place of the Frontier Commission. The Greek delegates will be instructed to insist on the cession of Janina. The Greek journals urge the Government to remain firm on this point.

VIENNA, Jan. 19.—The Fremdenblatt is authorized to deny that Austria has any intention of advancing to Salonica.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—A dispatch to the Times from Lahore states that various unauthenticated rumors are current that Shere Ali is returning to Kabul.

A dispatch from Kandahar reports that Gens. Stewart and Biddulph are reconnoitring toward Kalat-i-Ghilzai, on the road to Kabul, and Girishk, on the road to Herat.

CURRENT FOREIGN TOPICS.

GERMANY'S SAMOAN DEMANDS—THE DUKE OF CUMBERLAND'S RIGHTS—THE ACCIDENT TO THE FRIGATE CONSTITUTION.

BERNE, Jan. 19.—The popular vote throughout Switzerland has resulted in a large majority in favor of subvention to the St. Gothard and other Alpine railways.

BERLIN, Jan. 19.—The North German Gazette denies the sensational reports relative to Germany's intended action toward the Samoan Islanders, and states that Germany will merely keep sufficient naval force in the neighborhood to retain possession of two small ports on the Island of Upola, which she seized and will hold as a pledge until the Samoan Government grants Germany her treaty rights.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—The Standard's correspondent at Copenhagen reports a sensational rumor that Prussia is negotiating to obtain a renunciation by the Duke of Cumberland of his rights to Hanover in return for the cession of Northern Schleswig to him.

Capt. Badger, of the United States frigate Constitution, says, in regard to the grounding of the ship, that judging from the time he had sailed he supposed he was 22 miles from the English coast when the ship struck. He believes he must have been carried out of his reckoning by the current. After getting afloat the ship had a narrow escape, as the towropes broke when passing the Needles. One of the Constitution's boats capsized off Cowes, and two of its occupants were rescued with difficulty.

PARIS, Jan. 19.—The République Française, M. Gambetta's organ, says the Ministry, by chosing a policy of inaction, has signed its own doom.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—The Standard's Paris correspondent says that, at a meeting of Bonapartists, on Sunday, M. Rouher and a majority of those present considered that the Bonapartists should show that their first object was to preserve conservative principles. The minority favored a precipitation of the crisis.

The Times' Paris dispatch says the tone of the Radical organs is growing stronger. The ordeal is very serious, as behind the agitation for the dismissal of officials is an attack of the Jacobins on gradual legal reforms.

THE ENGLISH LABOR TROUBLES.

LONDON, Jan. 19.—The North Wales Miners' Association has resolved to vote £7 to every member of the union who desires to emigrate to America, and £14 to emigrants to Australia.

Notices were posted on Saturday by the Iron Trade Employers' Association in the iron shipbuilding yards and foundries in Liverpool and the district around, of a reduction in wages of 7½ per cent after the 31st of January. It is thought the men will strike.

At a meeting of Great Northern Railway employes, held in London to-day, (Sunday,) the men pledged themselves to oppose any reduction in wages. The decision of the Directors of the road will be made known on Tuesday.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—Six engineering firms at Huddersfield have locked out their workmen for refusing to consent to an extension of the hours of labor.

A TERRIBLE COLLISION AT SEA.

CORUNNA, Spain, Jan. 19.—The Spanish steamer Yrurac Bat, from Baltimore via Liverpool, has arrived here in a damaged condition. She reports that she was in collision with a British sailing vessel, the Lancashire Witch, which sunk with all on board. The steamer's bows were broken in.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

An unusual light on the second floor of the brick buildings Nos. 60 and 62 Clinton-street was noticed by Patrolman Taylor, of the Eleventh Precinct, at 3 o'clock yesterday morning, and investigation showed that the building was on fire. The floor is occupied as a cabinet-maker's shop by Herman Bartelmes, and a bundle of paper soaked in kerosene was blazing at the base of a wooden pillar. The officer put out the fire and reported the case to Capt. Cherry, who searched the building thoroughly, and found that the door leading into the store of the New-York Ornamental Paper Company on the first floor had been broken into, but nothing was missed by that firm. Isidor Cohen, a tailor, on the third floor, also had the door of his shop broken open, and 25 coats were missing. They were valued at $200, and it is supposed that the burglars set fire to the building. The loss to Bartelmes is $25. He reports having seen several suspicious persons around the building lately. Fire Marshal Sheldon will make an investigation.

On Saturday morning, at 1 o'clock, all the business portion of Allensville, Ky., was destroyed by fire. Mr. Adams, a dry goods dealer, had $15,000 worth of stock, occupying a two-story brick building. He had an insurance of $5,500 on the stock, but nothing on the building. Adams Express Company loses a considerable amount. A number of other stores were burned out. A lady owning a millinery establishment lost her entire stock, and a trunk containing $100 in silver. The loss will reach from $30,000 to $35,000. There was but little insurance. The fire is supposed to have been started by an incendiary for the purpose of plunder.

A fire broke out at 9 o'clock last night in the millinery store of Louis Drucker, No. 191½ Division-street, originating in some unknown manner, and before the flames could be extinguished the stock in the store was almost completely destroyed. The loss is reported at $3,500. The building is owned by Morris Kutner, and was damaged to the amount of $600. Drucker is insured for $2,400.

A LIGHT SENTENCE FOR MURDER.

YORK, Penn., Jan. 19.—The jury in the case of William Matson, on trial for the murder of Erastus D. King, in August last, yesterday rendered a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree. Matson was sentenced to three years and three months in the Penitentiary.

ASSAULT ON ORANGEMEN.

OTTAWA, Jan. 19.—Two Orange Young Britons were brutally assaulted last night while on their way home by a party of roughs. They both received severe wounds about the head.

THE NATION'S LEGISLATURE

WORK BEFORE THE HOUSE TO-DAY.

THE FIRST CALL OF THE STATES FOR BILLS SINCE THE HOLIDAY RECESS BEGAN—A LARGE NUMBER OF NEW MEASURES EXPECTED—MR. WRIGHT'S LAND SCHEME—DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BILLS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—In the House to-morrow the States will be called for the introduction of bills for reference to committees, and as there has been no call of States since the holiday recess, the introduction of a large number of bills of every character may be expected. Bills introduced from this time forward will not, however, stand much chance of receiving the attention of the House, for the reason that there is now on the calendar a greater number of bills awaiting action than can be disposed of by March 4. In six weeks from Tuesday next the time of the Forty-fifth Congress will expire, and most of that time will be required to consider the regular appropriation bills, the largest and most important of which have not yet been matured by the Committee on Appropriations. In addition to the appropriation bills, there is a number of important public measures and several hundred pension and other private bills on the calendar, while the Speaker's table is well loaded with business from the Senate in the form of bills passed by the Senate and bills returned to the House with Senate amendments. Perhaps the most important of these is the Senate bill to extend the time for the construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad, upon which the friends of that company are anxious to secure final action.

No opportunity to enter the motion to suspend the rules, which can only be made on Mondays after the call of States is completed, has been presented since Dec. 17, when that motion was entered by Mr. Wright, of Pennsylvania, in order to take up and pass his bill to grant 3,500 acres each settler on the public lands under the Homestead laws, which motion is now pending as the unfinished business for to-morrow after the morning hour. Unfortunately for Mr. Wright and others who have measures which they want to pass in this manner, no opportunity will be offered to-morrow to suspend the rules. The Committee on the District of Columbia is entitled to the third Monday of each month, after 2 o'clock, for the exclusive consideration of business relating to the District, and as that committee has several important measures to bring forward, it will certainly claim the floor at the hour designated. Should any member desire to defeat a vote on Mr. Wright's bill to-morrow, and prevent any other member from making the motion to suspend the rules, he can do so by a demand for the reading of all bills presented for reference, which would consume the time up to 2 o'clock. While it is probable that a vote will be allowed on Mr. Wright's bill, it is not likely that any other measure will be permitted to be brought forward on a motion to suspend the rules, for the reason that fears are entertained that some obnoxious financial measure might be thrust upon the House, and while it is well known that no measure of this kind could be passed, members desire to avoid being forced to vote upon such questions merely to satisfy a few demagogues who are actuated solely by a desire to make what they call "a record."

DELAYED APPROPRIATION BILLS.

ARE THE DEMOCRATS WORKING FOR AN EXTRA SESSION?—THE EARLY ZEAL OF THE APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE FOLLOWED BY DILATORY TACTICS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The indifference now manifested by the House Committee on Appropriations in preparing the appropriation bills is in strange contrast with the zeal exhibited by that committee prior to the holiday recess. During the first three weeks of the session the committee reported and the House passed six of the 12 regular appropriation bills, namely: Fortifications, Military Academy, Pensions, Consular and Diplomatic, Indian and Navy. Of these, the Military Academy, Pensions and Fortifications have been sent to the President for approval, and the other three are with committees of conference. The differences between the two houses upon the bills in conference are not material and can be harmonized without much difficulty. The bills yet to be reported are the Legislative, Executive and Judicial, Sundry Civil, Post Office, Army, River and Harbor, and General Deficiency. The Legislative bill is said to be ready to report to the House, and it is promised that it will be presented during the present week. The aggregate amount appropriated by this bill is about $150,000 less than the amount appropriated by the last bill. No explanation is offered for not presenting the bill immediately, which gives color to the report that the Democrats propose to delay these bills with a view of securing an extra session of Congress. The Sundry Civil bill is said to be almost perfected, and will follow the Legislative bill. The Post Office bill is in charge of Messrs. Blount, Clymer, and Baker, and is not yet in shape. It is believed that there will be an increase in the aggregate of this bill compared with the appropriation for the present fiscal year. The Army bill, which is in charge of Mr. Hewitt, may be said to be ready, but it will not be reported until some action on the part of the House is had on the Burnside bill. Should the House refuse to pass the Burnside bill, the Army Appropriation bill will be brought forward with Mr. Hewitt's plan of reorganization incorporated therein. Nothing has been done, except in a general way, with the Deficiency bill, which is always the last of the appropriation bills to be reported. The River and Harbor bill is being prepared by the Committee on Commerce, and it is probable that when it is ready those in charge of it will follow the usual practice in reference to this bill, and try to carry it through the House under a suspension of the rules.

THE SOUTHERN CIVIL SERVICE.

ITS REORGANIZATION CONTEMPLATED BY THE ADMINISTRATION—FAILURE OF THE "RECONCILIATION" PLAN—PROBABLE REINSTATEMENT OF EX-MARSHAL PITKIN, OF LOUISIANA.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—There are increasing evidences that the Administration has under consideration a reorganization of the civil service in the South. As will be well remembered, it was represented at the commencement of President Hayes' government that the disorganization of government and society in the Southern States was largely due to the assumed fact that officers intrusted with the execution of Federal laws were aliens to the people among whom they lived, generally unpopular and discreditable to the Administration and party by which they were maintained, and that Southern Democrats defied the law chiefly because they detested its instruments. At the same time, it was represented that were the Administration to intrust the offices in question to men in harmony with, and agreeable to, "the people" of the South, a new era of respect for, and obedience to, the United States laws would follow. Accepting this view of the situation, the Administration entered upon the experiment of complying with the demands made by Southern Democrats. The result is well known. In most of the Southern States the law officers of President Grant's Administration have been replaced by Democrats or lukewarm Republicans who are indorsed by the leading men of the White League. In spite of these changes, however, the manufacture of "moonshine" whisky goes on with even more energy than before "the era of reconciliation." A Democratic District Attorney in South Carolina did not restrain the red-shirt rifle clubs in 1878 more effectually than the Republican officials were able to do in 1876. A Democratic United States Marshal in Georgia has proved that he is unable to prevent the grossest violations of the revenue laws in that State and in Louisiana. A Marshal appointed upon the recommendation of leading Democrats was unable to restrain the political murderers of Tensas and Caddo more effectually than the Republican Marshal Pitkin was able to restrain these fellows in Feliciana and Ouachita. On the other hand, the frauds in New-Orleans, which Mr. Pitkin rendered impossible in 1876, Marshal Wharton permitted to pass unchallenged in 1878. These facts, with many specifications and details are now being pressed upon the attention of the Administration, and there is good ground for the belief that important changes will shortly be made among the Federal officials in Georgia, Louisiana, and South Carolina. For the Marshalship of Louisiana the ex-Marshal, Mr. Pitkin, is the most prominent candidate. He is indorsed by all the strong Republicans of New-Orleans, and by leading business men. The President is reported as having stated that the application of his friends was receiving the most favorable consideration.

THE CHEYENNE OUTBREAK.

A DENIAL OF THE REPORT THAT RATIONS WERE WITHHELD FROM THE INDIANS—ARMY OFFICERS RESPONSIBLE FOR THE DELAY IN THEIR TRANSFER TO THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The Indian Bureau has been accused of withholding from the Cheyennes who recently escaped from the custody of the military authorities at Fort Robinson certain rations to which the Indians are entitled under treaty stipulations, and a report made by Agent Miles on Sept. 30 has been quoted to sustain this charge. An examination of the facts shows that no blame properly attaches to the Indian Bureau in reference to improper treatment of the Cheyennes, and that the charge that the Indians were unlawfully denied coffee and sugar is erroneous, and proceeds from a misunderstanding as to the provisions of the law by which the Secretary of the Interior is bound in issuing rations and annuities to Indians. After making his report of Sept. 30, in which he said, "the full list of rations named in their [the Cheyennes'] treaty of 1876 had not been furnished them," Agent Miles made a more thorough examination to ascertain how far the treaty had been complied with in the matter of furnishing the Indians the rations which they had been promised, and he discovered, to his surprise, that, although they had not been furnished three pounds of beans to each 100 rations, and had not always been regularly supplied with corn, they had, in conformity with treaty stipulations, been supplied with the full equivalent for those commodities. Agent Miles found, in fact, that the Indians had received more than is required by the treaty.

It is true that the rations of coffee and sugar were withheld from all Indians who refused to work, but this was done in accordance with law, and not for the purpose of disciplining the Indians. The coffee and sugar rations are offered the Indians to induce them to perform agricultural or some other useful labor, and unless such labor is performed the Indian Bureau is required to withhold those articles. The act of March 3, 1875, section 3, provides: "That for the purpose of inducing Indians to labor and become self-supporting, it is provided that hereafter, in distributing the supplies and annuities to the Indians for whom the same are appropriated, the agent distributing the same shall require all able-bodied male Indians between the ages of 18 and 45 to perform service upon the reservation for the benefit of themselves or the tribe, at a reasonable rate, to be fixed by the agent in charge, and to an amount equal in value to the supplies to be delivered, and the allowances provided for such Indians shall be distributed to them only upon condition of the performance of such labor under such rules and regulations as the agent may prescribe: Provided, that the Secretary of the Interior may, by written order, except any particular tribe, or portion of a tribe, from the operations of this provision where he deems it proper and expedient." It will thus be seen that the Secretary of the Interior is bound by law to demand that the Indians shall work for their annuities and rations, and as coffee and sugar are regarded by them as articles of luxury, the least that the Secretary can do to comply with the law is to insist that coffee and sugar shall only be issued to such Indians as will "perform service upon the reservation for the benefit of themselves or of the tribe."

The allegation that the dead of Winter was chosen for the return of the Cheyennes to the Indian Territory is not correct. On Nov. 16, while the weather was mild and pleasant, the Indian Bureau requested the military authorities to transfer the Cheyennes, then in their charge as prisoners, to the Indian Territory. The military made no movement in the matter until five weeks later, when a request was made upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for supplies of additional clothing for the Indians. The delay, therefore, in the movement to transfer them is not chargeable to the Interior Department, but to those officers in whose charge they were as prisoners of war.

TALES FOR THE MARINES.

SOME OF THE ASTOUNDING STATEMENTS OF THE ADMINISTRATION ORGAN REGARDING THE NEW-YORK CUSTOM-HOUSE CASES.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The Republican of to-morrow will print the following upon the subject of the New-York nominations:

"It is now very generally conceded that the New-York Custom-house nominations will be eventually confirmed. No action will be had in the premises, however, until after a reply has been received from Collector Arthur by the Senate Commerce Committee to the charges alleged against him in the Executive Message sent to the Senate last Wednesday. These charges are capable of ready and satisfactory explanation, in the opinion of Senator Conkling and his friends, and if they are so explained, the rejection of the pending nomination of Messrs. Merritt, Burt, and Graham may ensue. But it is confidently believed in Administration circles that they cannot be easily answered or disposed of. Among them is an explicit charge that, owing to Gen. Arthur's remissness, the Government lost $375,000 per annum of Customs duties, and gloves and clothes, and cuffs and silks, and $6,000,000 on sugars, although it is proper to add that a portion of this loss on sugars is not directly chargeable to the New-York Custom-house."

IMPORTANT COINAGE BILLS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The Committee on Coinage has agreed upon three bills, which the Chairman—Mr. Stephens—is authorized to report to the House, when that committee is called. The first bill is to redeem trade dollars at par and recoin them into standard silver dollars. The second provides for the retirement of subsidiary silver coins and their recoinage into legal tender dollars. The third is intended to equalize the double metal standard by making it 16 of silver to 1 of gold, instead of 15½ to 1, as at present. The report on the metric system, upon which this committee has been working for some time, will be ready on Wednesday next, and will be presented to the House as soon as possible. It is very comprehensive, and is designed not only to give an authentic history of this system, but to furnish convenient and accurate data for reference.

NOTES FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19, 1879.

Judge Hunt's condition seems to have changed for the worse. He is very sick to-night, but his physician says he does not consider that he is in any immediate danger.

Owing to a difference of opinion regarding the transaction of certain business of the Indian Office, Mr. William M. Leeds, the Chief Clerk of that office, has been suspended for 30 days, during which time there will be an investigation into the existing difficulties. The authorities at the Interior Department are very reticent concerning the affair. Rumors were in circulation that other officers belonging to this office were in trouble, but this is positively denied.

Since the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States sustaining the anti-polygamy law of Congress as applicable to Utah, there has been an increase of petitions from women in all parts of the country asking Congress to make effective the anti-polygamy law of 1862. The Committees on the Judiciary have charge of the subject. Petitions are also received in increased numbers asking for the prevention of the adulteration of sugars and other sweets, and also for the prevention of the adulteration of food.

OHIO POLITICAL SENTIMENT.

THE REPUBLICAN PROGRAMME FAVORABLY RECEIVED—MR. GARFIELD'S SENATORIAL ASPIRATIONS.

CLEVELAND, Jan. 19.—Much satisfaction is expressed by prominent members of the Republican Party in this State with the announcement which was telegraphed from Washington last week, that the programme of the party was to nominate Garfield and Foster for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor next Fall: and although a denial has followed it, still it seems to be generally believed. It is felt that much depends upon the success of the party next Fall, and that the only thing necessary to insure success is the right kind of candidates. Garfield and Foster would make an invincible team. It is understood that Garfield does not desire the Governorship, but he is a confessed candidate for the Senatorship. Without a special effort, it will be difficult for the Republicans to carry the State, and with a Democratic Legislature, Mr. Garfield's chances for the Senatorship are gone. When the victory is won, however, Garfield can be elected Senator, and thus Foster will succeed to the Governorship. The opinion of some of the members of the Legislature, with whom the TIMES' correspondent has conversed, is that all that has been said against Garfield would be brought up, and a bitter personal fight made, but the same men say that this would amount to nothing, as he is always able to carry everything before him in a canvass, and has already exploded these charges. Garfield is thought to be ambitious enough and sufficiently alive to his own interests to see that he cannot fail to be a favorite if he is able to carry the State in such a closely-contested election as that of next Fall promises to be. It is thought by some members of the Legislature that the coming canvass will partake much of the bitterness of the Brough-Vallandigham struggle of 1863. The Democrats will in some way woo the Nationals into the fold of their party, and the two united will make a very strong effort to carry the State. They will not do this, however, as the party has too much of a load to carry.

BUTLER'S PLANS AND HOPES.

HIS FRIENDS ANNOUNCE THAT HE WILL RUN FOR GOVERNOR AGAIN—AN ORGAN TO BE STARTED TO REVILE REPUBLICAN LEADERS.

BOSTON, Jan. 19.—Notwithstanding that the Democratic State Committee was organized last week almost wholly in the interest of the old leaders, and the Butler Democrats were shoved to the rear, it is as confidently asserted as ever that "the General" will run again next Fall. Senator French, his chief man in the Legislature, and his partner in many profitable business schemes, says there is no doubt of it. He and the other Butler men in the Legislature talk freely of their purposes in the next campaign. "No matter," they say in effect, "what the Republican legislators do, we shall be able to make plenty of issues. Whatever measure of retrenchment they may effect, we can honestly claim it to be the result of the 'Butler scare.' If they accomplish little, we can point to their incompetency to effect a genuine reform. Whatever they do, we shall have 'em." A prominent Boston Butler leader is quoted as saying: "One thing we shall not do; we shall not continue the experiment of subsidizing a Boston organ, but we shall issue a campaign daily, manned by sharp young journalists, who will be furnished with plenty of 'points' on which to impale Republican leaders. It will be a war without mercy. We were too lenient last time. Other reputations than ours must suffer, and Gen. Butler's hat will supply 'bricks' enough." The experiment of subsidizing a Boston organ, referred to above, it is believed, has really proved a costly and unsatisfactory one to Butler and the friends who joined him in it, and reports of his intention of purchasing a controlling interest in a paper, or starting a new venture, preferring rather to own than to bribe, have long been circulated about town.

ARCHBISHOP PURCELL'S TROUBLES.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH PROPERTY IN CINCINNATI TO BE PLACED IN THE HANDS OF TRUSTEES FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE ARCHIEPISCOPAL SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITORS.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 19.—The greater part of the property of the Catholic Church in Cincinnati and vicinity will to-morrow be turned over to a Board of Trustees to be managed in the interest of the creditors of Archbishop Purcell. The property consists of St. Peter's Cathedral, St. Joseph's Seminary, the orphan asylum at Cumminsville, the Considine property on Price's Hill, the Cathedral schoolhouse, corner of Elizabeth and Mound streets, the old St. John's Hospital corner of Third and Plum streets, together with a large amount of personal securities, notes, mortgages, accounts, &c. The Trustees are Fathers P. A. Quinn, of the Cathedral; J. C. Albrinck, of Holy Trinity Church; Charles Stewart, a paper-dealer; Joseph P. Rogers, Treasurer of the Marine Railway, and Joseph Grever, of Grever, Tangeman & Co. This board will hereafter manage all of the financial affairs of the diocese in the interest of the members of the church who have deposited their savings with the Archbishop. A thorough examination of the situation discloses the fact that the liabilities of the Archiepiscopal Savings Bank are about $500,000. The property turned over to secure the debt is worth at least $1,000,000, but if it should prove inadequate, every building and piece of ground in Cincinnati owned by the Catholic Church will be placed in the hands of the Trustees. The Trustees have determined to issue bonds to the amount of the indebtedness, which bonds will be payable at any time after three years and within 20. They will bear 5 per cent. interest, and the property turned over to the Trustees will be pledged for their redemption. Catholic people are much pleased at the prospect of a speedy termination of the troubles which have embarrassed the Church. The desire for the retention of the Archbishop in his high office is general among all classes. The report that his resignation has been accepted at Rome is not credited here.

A DEFAULTING BANK TELLER.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 19.—William E. Coffin, until lately the trusted Teller of Lafayette Bank of this City, is a defaulter and fugitive. The managers of the bank are very reticent in regard to the matter, but declare that the deficit will not exceed $10,000. Outside estimates place the amount as high as $25,000. Coffin has been living a fast life for some time, but succeeded so well in covering up his excesses that his employers had no knowledge of what was going on. About two weeks ago he left the city, and his desk has been vacant ever since. His protracted absence led to an examination of his accounts, when it was discovered that special deposits had been tampered with to the amount named above. Those who are familiar with the manner of life of late believe that he has been stealing for some time. "The era of dangers has passed; that of difficulties is about to commence." Certain is now under discussion, and half a dozen Prefects and sub-Prefects will be shelved or sent to other posts of honor and profit. Yet all is speculation on these points, the only sure thing being the dismissal of the Minister of War, in favor of some parliamentary personality, who will apply energetically the military laws voted since 1872, and teach the Army that it belongs to a live Republic, not to that makeshift institution which, for want of a better name, was called the Septennate. The question of the impeachment of the last Ministry is, however, sure to come upon the tapis, and when it does, we shall have trouble. M. Gambetta is understood to be opposed to it as a dangerous precedent, which might serve against him and his coadjutors, should the reactionaries ever get the upper hand, as they may do when the French shall have tired of their present idols. M. Dufaure reasons in the same way, but takes also the higher ground of political morality, and the Marshal positively threatens to resign if his former servants be attacked for obedience to his orders. It is hard to see a way out of the dilemma, and the devil and the deep sea comparison again becomes apposite for those who stand between electoral pressure and a resistance which may split up their now compact majority. Perhaps there may be a compromise, in the shape of a law concerning the real responsibility of Ministers, which will morally castigate the culprits of the 16th May, and if this have a corollary of two or three modifications of the Constitution, in a strictly Republican sense, it will be accepted by the electors, particularly if further supplemented by a weeding out of all magistrates suspected of monarchical leanings, and with some good, thorough prosecutions of clerical establishments. However, to sum up the French situation, I can only say that anything is possible, but that the probabilities are in favor of home complications.

The news from Afghanistan is vague and unsatisfactory, yet the anxious and almost despondent tone of even the British Government organs seems to indicate that the Anglo-Indian forces will not reach Kabul in a simple Veni vidi vici promenade militaire. About a fortnight ago the talented but imaginative correspondent of the Daily News informed his patrons that all was over but shouting; and now it seems that he was misinformed, and that Yakoob Khan, so far from having come to Jalalabad to sue for peace, is raising an army and preparing for a serious resistance, while his respectable parent has gone on to St. Petersburg with his family and 70 lacs of rupees, to ask for Muscovite help and the interference of a European congress. Evidently the poor man is not well posted upon the results of the Berlin meeting, or he would not lose his time in that way, but rather treat directly with the invaders, who, I fancy, would be very glad to get to the other side of the Indus in safety. Major Golam Natchabaud, whoever he may be—and he must be somebody, as his "report" is honored with the title of official—says that there will be no resistance, and that the Afghans don't mean to fight; but who says native means liar, and therefore I am inclined to think that the Major wanted to please the British authorities and get backshish. Somehow or other John Bull is kept in woful ignorance of the Asiatic situation, as the correspondents, either because they do not know anything or because they are not allowed to tell it, never seem to thrive on fiction. But, then, why will newspapers send out men who, in their lofty conviction of the superiority of the pen over the sword, lose no opportunity of airing their sentiments of supreme contempt for the professional soldier? They make themselves enemies of those from whom they might obtain useful information, and the public suffers for their want of tact and breeding. They were humble enough when with the Russians last Summer; but so soon as they get among their own countrymen they seem to consider that highness and mightiness of manner is essential to their importance. It is not pleasant for military men to find themselves criticised ignorantly by scribblers whose strategical qualifications are to have served as a high private in a dragoon regiment which never left the British islands during their term of enlistment, and to have followed in the wake of the German Army as chroniclers of its exploits. No one knows what may be obtained by British gold during the Winter, but if peace be not bought before April, the Standard's wail for reinforcements will not have been uttered one moment too soon to avert disaster.

HOW MONCASI WAS STRANGLED.

THE WOULD-BE REGICIDE PUBLICLY GARROTED.

Madrid Correspondence of the London Standard.

Long before daylight a stream of people poured out of Madrid on the roads leading to the Saladero Prison, and to the spot called "Campo de' Guardias," beyond the northern suburb of Chamberi. It is a lonely, wild, dreary field, something like a common, in view of the distant chain of the Guadarrama, and full in sight of Madrid. It stands between two high roads, and the scaffold had been raised about three feet above the ground, upon large square blocks of stone. It is a rude sort of platform, upon which rises a pole or gibbet, and a wooden bench. The prisoner is made to sit against the gibbet, and is there rapidly strangled by two or three executioners. They had been down to the Campo de Guardias during the night to prepare the scaffold, and they were waiting at daybreak at the Saladero Prison to go through the formality of asking pardon of the convict. In the Saladero it had been a sleepless night with the authorities and those who watched the dozing criminal. Before the day had broke on that cold, chilly morning the priests had aroused Juan Oliva, and had said three masses in succession, while he knelt at last, quite moved and weary, we were told by the Vicar himself. He, however, never, in the course of those 24 hours, expressed any repentance at having attempted to kill the King. He submitted almost cheerfully to be robed in a dark-colored penitent dress and cap, and to have the cord and the black and white cross. He had his hands bound, and he very quietly told his executioner that he willingly pardoned him. At o'clock precisely Judge Molins gave the signal, and all the soldiers in the halls and passages of the Saladero stood to attention. The prisoner was led down stairs by the priests and brethren of the Paz y Caridad. Many of the warders seemed much moved as Moncasi passed, and he nodded to one or two of them. At the door of the Saladero Prison a strong detachment of soldiers of the line was drawn up near to a closed carriage drawn by two mules. An uncouth-looking and ragged driver was on the box, and Moncasi stepped into it without assistance. The two priests sat by his side, and the officer gave the order to march with fixed bayonets. First in the sad procession went two strange, pale individuals, accompanied by warders. They were the Caicrafts of Valladolid, and also, he is Madrid having died lately. Next came the brotherhood with lighted tapers, and a priest in robes bearing aloft a crucifix. Next was the coach, surrounded by the brethren and a double line of soldiers and Police. The escort became silent, and men took their caps off as the procession moved slowly past. It is curious that the vast majority of those present on the road and at the Campo de Guardias were women and young girls. Only a collection of young rogues and ragged youths could hardly be imagined. The female part of this herd was mostly composed of young girls from the popular suburbs, and there were more you could catch sight of old sight-seers, who inspire you with the idea that they oftener than they choose pay the Saladero visits of a permanent character. The crowd on the spot of the execution, I hear from trustworthy authority, was so great that it was impossible to approach the scaffold. The prisoner was led in the carriage, and amid profound silence, within a square formed around the scaffold by Hussars and Infantry. He alighted with the priests, and stepped up to the gibbet very coolly. He sat down, quite surrounded by the priests and brethren of the Paz y Caridad. When they left his side the Valladolid Caicraft had done his work, and Juan Oliva y Moncasi had ceased to live. The crowd very soon dispersed, and not many people remained to gaze on the body, which is exposed until dusk, according to Spanish law, with the garments on. This evening it will be interred. In the crowd on the route and during the execution some sympathy was expressed for the death of so young a criminal, but no demonstration of any kind took place.

A ROMANTIC LAWSUIT.

Paris Correspondence of the London Telegraph.

A curious case has just been engaging the attention of the Paris tribunals. A young man, who lived in a small town in the wilds of the Russian Steppes many years ago, gradually improved in his business until he at length emerged on the Bourse, as the great M. Meyer Garfunkel, the happy possessor of a fortune of several millions of francs. He had married a Mussovite of rare beauty—Mlle. Rosalie Loury—and he ended by adopting another, Mlle. Loury, whom his wife gave out to be her sister. In 1876 M. Garfunkel died, leaving the bulk of his fortune to his wife and his adopted daughter, but excepting therefrom the sum of 1,500,000 francs, which was bequeathed to a Mme. Rabinovitz, living at the town of Bodmis, in Russia. Now this Mme. Rabinovitz has a curious history, according to her own showing. She declares herself to be the only daughter of M. Garfunkel, by a widow named Taoule, whom he wedded in his poorer days, when he was known as Meyer. In support of her pretensions Mme. Rabinovitz presents several letters written to herself by the millionaire, in which he addresses her as ma chère amique et bien-aimée fille, and on the strength of it she claims not merely the million and a half left her by M. Garfunkel, but also the money bequeathed to the two Lourys. "It appears that, according to the French law as well as the Russian, no one is allowed to adopt a child while he has one still living. Hence M. Garfunkel's act was utterly illegal, supposing Mme. Rabinovitz, or Rebecca, as she was called, to have been his child. A most romantic and sensational lawsuit has, therefore, unfortunately for it, arisen, which has, as I said, already enamored the attention of the Paris tribunals.

THE MEGRIMS IN ENGLAND.

WAR AND THE FALSE GOD PROTECTION.

ALL EUROPE RAISING ITS TARIFFS—THE STANCH FREE TRADERS OF BRITAIN WEAKENING—LORD DERBY TAKING A ROSY VIEW OF THE PREVAILING BUSINESS DEPRESSION.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, Jan. 4, 1879.

Europe progresses backward. Despite the philosopher, we go behind the simple system of ethics. Notwithstanding the priest, we fall in the rear of the sublime teachings of Christianity. Liberty is crucified in Germany. Freedom groans on the rack in Russia. Burning villages illuminate Anglo-Indian scaffolds on the borders of the British Empire. The track of war in European Turkey is still red with fire and sword. A million women and children in one district are dying of starvation, the last remnant of the innocent victims sacrificed on the altar of "Russian civilization." In the name of religion the soldiers of the North have "danced among the tombs." In the name of liberty Prussia has enchained Germany. Socialism is being "put down" with the weapons that Bomba used in Italy. Prince Bismarck has reintroduced into the Fatherland the tyrannical edicts of the black old days of Europe. Berlin is practically under martial law. It is in a state of siege. You cannot say your soul is your own there. New prisoners enter the political jails daily. The King goes about surrounded by his guards. Prince Gortschakoff and his master have wiped out the recollection of the liberation of the serfs by reviving banishment to Siberia. The weary march goes on day and night. The victims are young and old, men and women, university students, persons of distinction, the lowly and the great. They fall by the way to feed the wolves. They reach the weird regions of ice and snow to drop dead on the ground already consecrated to thousands of martyrs, whose blood cries in vain to heaven. Progress! Christianity! France increases her troops, and prepares continually to win back her annexed provinces. Germany claims the first tribute of youth's hopes and aspirations in her armies. Italy makes big guns. England inaugurates the financial year with new ships and torpedo-boats on her dock-yard slips. "Peace with honor!" Yes, "peace" with arms in both her hands. "Honor" fortified with 80-ton guns and floating batteries.

PROTECTION AND FREE TRADE.

With guns and bayonets and war-ships once more in the ascendant as arguments and details of international controversy, is it to be wondered at that Europe is setting up the false god "protection?" Prince Bismark lays his iron hand upon the foreign trader, and, strange to say, in direct sympathy with his protectionist views, Switzerland—the model State—raises its tariffs too. Gortschakoff and his master keep the work of protection going in Russia, taking frequent new departures, with a view of crippling England. France subsidizes her sugar trade, and ruins the refiners in Bristol, England. Spain puts up her tariffs against the old country, and Mr. Chamberlain is in doubt whether her time for free commerce has come, keeps her Customs guards still firmly at their posts. The United States stands, morally and commercially, on different ground to that of the European States. A new country, she has had her industries to create and maintain, and if the community has suffered, he has had the happy consciousness that he has paid toll on foreign commodities for the sake of the future prosperity and greatness of his country. Standing erect, though sorrowful and sad in a world bristling with protective tariffs, England still holds by the principles of Cobden and the Manchester school. How long she will continue to do so depends upon how much more suffering she has to endure. The country is passing through strange and bewildering times. On the war-path at the further outposts of the Empire, uncertain how soon the roar of the guns may come nearer home, there is a suspicion of a strain upon the Constitution which alarms nervous people. "Imperialism," however, is a mere parrot-"bogie," an election phantom. The nation laughs at it. Mr. Gladstone puts goggle eyes and grinning teeth into the thing to frighten people. Everybody knows it is a sham, and so does Gladstone himself; but he is desperate, wild, full of passion because the nation will not accept it as a reality. Now, there is a danger of a real god being set up again in "protection." All Europe cannot gradually come under the increasing shadow of "protection" without affecting England, stanch free trader though she be. Indeed, there is an outspoken call for the dethroned monarch. The leading manufacturers of the North want him. Every trade that suffers cries aloud for him. The working classes are worshipers of protection. Traders of all classes want the old god set up again. It is called by various names. Some speak of it as "reciprocity;" others as "self-defense;" some call it "expediency;" others as "check upon foreign competition." "Why, cut it," said a London manufacturer to me yesterday, "England will go to the wall; it is all very well to say that it is better that we, the producers, should suffer than you, the consumers, but what is to become of us as a manufacturing nation? What is to become of our mills, our machinery, our workshops?" I suggested emigration for the workmen, and the transference of capital to more favored countries. "Yes," he replied, "you may think that remark a bit of cynicism, but it hits the point; by heaven, Sir, it is the only remedy. Lord Derby advises the operatives to emigrate; he says nothing about the employer. You are right; we must go, too, and unless things change very quickly you will find this firm with a new address, and it will be somewhere in America, where iron and coal is boundless, where labor is no dearer than it is here, where the resources of the earth are illimitable, and where capital is a bigger power than it is here." A merchant in Mark-lane whom I met shortly afterward took the same line from a different point of view. "The depression is exaggerated," he said; "look at the revenue returns for the past quarter, and you will see an improvement. Now, I'll tell you what will happen. We shall frighten America into reducing her tariffs. She can't prosper unless we prosper, and she can't do much better than she is doing without free trade. Look at England; we are suffering a frightful depression; so is all the world, we are not alone; trade is bad everywhere, and that is why all these silly foreigners are increasing their protective duties. Well, what is the result? Look at our own country, I say; cheap food, cheap sugar, cheap clothing, moderate taxes. The great bulk of the people are not suffering any more than the middle and upper classes can relieve them from. People with small incomes don't suffer. Look at other countries. A few people are ruined at Bristol because of the French sugar bounties, but you and I get cheap sugar. Some of our farmers and bloated landlords are worried about their rents, but bread is cheap and meat is not dear. Where should we be with a heavy duty on wheat and beef, upon all the products that America is sending us? I tell you America is no better off than we are, and never will be until she exercises free trade, and then the two countries will leap into prosperity together and 'wipe the eye' of Europe."

On Thursday evening ex-Minister Derby delivered an important address to the members of the Rochdale Working Men's Club. He is in accord with his late chief, Lord Beaconsfield, in declining to regard the crisis as one without hope of speedy improvement. He thinks we are taking an exaggerated view of what is passing before our eyes. The savings banks' deposits have increased during the past year; so have the returns of national consumption; so has the population increased, which no public speaker thinks it worth while to take into account. He had no new suggestions to make in regard to the causes of our commercial decay. We have overtraded; we have tried to get rich too quickly; we have lent our surplus moneys to foreigners who don't pay; Honduras, Turkey, Spain, Venezuela have gulled us; we have lent more than $1,500,000,000 to States that will never pay us; and the unsettled condition of Europe is dead against a revival of trade. "Till we can have some evidence that peace will be kept in Europe it is idle to expect that trade will revive." Lord Derby seemed to be more hopeful of the revival of commerce than he did of the maintenance of peace. That it is a notable fact that no Cabinet Minister lectures his constituents upon leading questions without references to America; and when comparisons of wages, climate, resources have to be made, no public speaker omits to go for his best illustrations to the United States. Lord Derby does not hesitate to express his opinion that "in this little land of ours we are getting packed too close, and that we have suffered from the stoppage of emigration during the past few years." So long as there are two workingmen for one job, no laws will ever prevent one of them from being badly off. "Just now the Americans have their troubles as well as we, but with their boundless soil they are rapidly accumulating capital, and with their exceptional energy they are sure to rally before long; indeed, I believe the rally has already begun. There are children living who will probably see the United States numbering 200,000,000 inhabitants, and I don't think there is any subject to which leaders of working men can more usefully turn their attention than the supplying to those who want it here accurate and trustworthy intelligence as to their chances beyond the Atlantic, either north or south of the Canadian boundary line. We shall always have men enough left at home, and even if emigration were to go the length of checking the increase here, which it almost certainly will not, surely it is better to have 35,000,000 of human beings leading useful and intelligent lives, rather than 40,000,000 struggling painfully for a bare subsistence."

THE PREVAILING DISTRESS.

The general character of the distress which has spread from one end of the land to the other appears to be against the dogma of the late Lords Derby and Beaconsfield. In the days of the cotton famine the cause of the suffering was patent to all. When a staple trade is struck down, either by war or competition, we have but to wait until things right themselves, and in the meantime, the trades that are prospering can help those which are not. But to-day the trouble is general. Every trade is more or less affected. All branches of industry are suffering. From John O'Groat's to Land's End the cry is the same. And if men will only look into it, the causes of the depression are the same all over the country, and they are simply these: Manufacturers have overstocked themselves, and trades-unions have destroyed the harmonious relationships between capital and labor, necessary to success; we have taught the world to make the things we used to make for it, and the world is manufacturing for itself; to try and fight the tariffs of other nations, we have sold inferior articles, and destroyed confidence in English goods; a policy of dishonesty has crept into our manufactures; the protective tariffs of foreign countries have destroyed certain special trades; the everlasting expectation of a great war has paralyzed enterprise; we have broken down under the competition which we have ourselves promoted and fostered. That the revenue returns justify hope is questionable; they have possibly been bolstered by the absence of charges which are postponed until the next quarter. We have not touched ground. We are still sinking lower. It is useless to deny it. The suffering is perceptible into unreported quarters. At Denbigh Mr. Watkin Williams, M. P., takes this gloomy view of the situation: "The country," he declares, "has by no means reached the lowest depths of distress." But he attributed nearly all the trouble to the foreign policy of the Government, which the unemployed Welsh miners mean to set up as their political programme at the next general election, instead of preaching common sense to workmen as well as masters, advising the one to abolish the trades-unions shackles on labor, and the other to adhere to honest trading. Look at the folly of the Oldham operatives, who struck work in the midst of the present depression, rather than accept a reduction of 5 per cent. in wages, and who now have to give way, after sacrificing $300,000 in wages and driving their trade to other districts and to other countries. The ironworkers of South Yorkshire and North Derbyshire have given notice of a reduction. The unions threaten to resist it. If they do, we shall have 100,000 men on strike in that quarter. Several districts have already, through their trade lodges, voted against the proposed reductions. The engineers of London threaten to turn out against a proposition of the Iron Trades Employers' Association to extend the hours of labor. In face of the continued depression, the masters say they are seriously considering whether they are not justified in repealing the nine-hours arrangement and returning to the rate of 57½ hours as the week's work. This is set forth in a circular issued by the masters, who, in referring to the causes of the present depression, say that the wages and taxes of foreign competitors are less than in England, and that the hours of labor are longer and unrestricted. The stoppage of the Sirhowy Iron Works in the Tredegar Valley, are a grim answer to the report that the Welsh iron trade was going to "look up." The stoppage of the West of England Bank has ruined scores of people in Bristol and South Wales. At some of the North Staffordshire collieries the men have accepted reductions of wages of 5 and 10 per cent. The Mayor's relief fund at Sheffield now reaches nearly $50,000. At Blackburn four other mills have stopped working during the past fortnight, representing some 800 looms. Altogether 15 mills are silent, which would employ 6,500 men when in full work. In all the large centres of trade the distress is so great that it has called into existence an organized system of relief. It is highly creditable to the upper classes that the subscriptions have, on all hands, been large, and that they continue to pour in. The darkest feature of the situation seems to be in the determined resistance of the working classes to admit the necessity of reduced wages. The British workman on strike while his master is only trying to keep his factory open for their mutual benefit in the hope of better times, is a picture of folly, not to say ingratitude, which one can only contemplate with wonder and amazement. The truth is, the English mechanic does not believe that any "foreigner" can compete with him in strength or skill. All trades have machines and appliances by British workers have "licked" the foreigners whenever they have been brought into competition. These legends were probably true once, but times have changed. When I was a boy, English engineers and mechanics were continually being sent for by foreign Governments and companies to make machines and erect them on foreign works. Foreigners come to England now on similar missions. It was a foreigner who (under the direction of Mr. Macdonald, the able chief in the Times office) recently showed me the working of the electric light in that famous establishment. Nobody but "foreigners" seem to be connected with this new light in London. Our city is full of Germans. They are a colony at Bradford. But the British mechanic does not learn, and when the supreme hour of trial comes, as it has come once more, he is helped by public subscriptions to weather the storm at home, or he is assisted to carry his experience and his labor to other lands. When the capitalist imitates him and does likewise, England will become a residential country, and London the workshop for the world. Our manufactory districts will decay like those out-of-the-way old towns that lived on the coaches of former days, and the commercial supremacy of England will be "as dead as a door-nail," a thing to write about and look back upon with wonder and regret.

ERRORS OF MEMORY.

A FEW ILLUSTRATIVE INCIDENTS FROM POLITICAL HISTORY.

From the Utica Observer, Jan. 18.

Yesterday one of the most intelligent citizens of Utica came into the Observer office to find one of Enos T. Throop's Thanksgiving proclamations. A friend of our visitor insisted that Gov. Throop wrote: "We are all small lights." What we think really he wrote was: "Experience is a small light shining about our footsteps to guide us in the path of wisdom." We quote from memory, and perhaps we have made a mistake, for, as we are trying to show, memory is a poor guide. The opposing politicians picked up the phrase and called the Governor "small light Throop." The name clung to him long after the true rendering of the sentence was forgotten.

We had occasion, some months ago, to cite the story of the "Roorback." In 1844, it was charged, on the pretended authority of a fictitious doctor named Roorback, that an English traveler had seen James K. Polk's slaves on their way to the slave market with his initials burned with hot irons into their flesh. Mr. Polk was then running for the Presidency that year, and on recalling the story we substituted his name for Polk's. But before the article was printed the mistake was corrected. To be quite certain that we were right in the last instance we consulted at least 10 men who had participated actively in the canvass of 1844, and not one among them could tell the Roorback story with even tolerable accuracy. Most of them had forgotten all about it, and the rest were confused as to the names, dates, and circumstances.

On another occasion two old Whigs were fighting their battles over again and one remarked that it was wonderful how Harrison came up as a new man and carried the country with such a rush. The other thought so too. They were both surprised and indignant when a young man in their company remarked that Harrison was the Whig candidate for President in 1836, as well as in 1840, and that he was badly beaten the first time that he ran. They sharply rebuked the audacity of the person who attempted to correct them on a matter of history with which they were personally familiar; and they were greatly astonished to find that they were mistaken. Chief-Justice Taney did not render it as the decision of the Supreme Court that the negro has no rights which the white man is bound to respect. Gen. Taylor did not say that we are at peace with all the world and the rest of mankind. The Declaration of Independence does not assert that all men are created free and equal. Gen. Jackson did not offer as a toast: The Federal Union, it must and shall be preserved. If you want to test your memory, correct these misquotations.

THE MIMIC STAGE IN PARIS.

HOW FRENCHMEN ARE AMUSED.

AN OPERATIC FAILURE—THE SERIOUS AT A DISCOUNT—NEW COMEDIES AND SPECTACLES—THE RAGE FOR WILD ANIMALS—INDIA-RUBBER WHALES AND WHITE-WASHED BEARS—THE PLAY OF POLITICS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Friday, Jan. 3, 1879.

Christmas week has been uncommonly fertile in theatrical novelties; some were good, some bad, some indifferent; but to whatever class belonging, every manager, almost, has made it a point of honor to celebrate the holidays by a change in his bill of fare. First in importance comes the opera, where Mr. Halanzier, anxious to terminate his managerial career in a blaze of glory, has brought out "La Reine Blanche." This long-expected lady, celebrated in nursery rhyme for her skill with the distaff and her immense feet, has disappointed everybody, and I think Mr. Halanzier must be very sorry not to have left the failure as an inheritance to his successor. Neither the plot nor the music offers a single point by which to awaken sympathy with the misfortunes and ultimate triumph of the injured spouse of Pepin the Short, the only feeling being one of surprise that the librettist and the composer should have attempted a five-act lyric drama when it was so much easier not to do so. Generally, disapprobation is manifested at the Academy of Music by disdainful silence or animated conversation during the performance, but on this occasion the audience broke with tradition and a tempest of hisses from every tier marked its indignant protest against the very worst piece ever put upon the Parisian stage. It will, perhaps, have one good effect: It will destroy the long cherished delusions of those who still maintained that Frenchmen could compose anything serious. "Polyeucte" was bad enough, but Gounod's reputation, made with Faust, carried it through, and if M. Massmet's "Roi de Lahore" has appeared on the Milanese boards, its success is only due to its beautiful ballet, whereas, here there is not even scenic display to gild the nauseous pill of immelodious, mechanical harmony. I do not know on whose shoulders will fall the mantle of the present impresario, as the Government, after three months' examination of half a dozen different plans and projects, cannot decide whether the next man shall farm out the institution, shall run the machine for himself, or shall be a salaried agent of the Minister of Fine Arts. In any case, we may be certain that things will go from bad to worse, as is only natural when political proclivities, not any special aptitudes, will decide the choice of an administrator. Heaven knows that the present incumbent has never been short of money, and some of his pensioners receive as much as $20,000 per annum; he would have given $40,000 to Faure, if this Prince of Art, as he calls himself, had not put forward other pretensions which were inacceptable, but he cannot keep his head above water, and his despotic manners and bad temper bring him into daily collisions with both composers and artists. Faure left some time ago, Mlle. Krauss, the tenor Gailhard, and the baritone Lasalle, refused to renew their engagements, and, in the course of a few months, the academy will be without a single star. Nobody will care much, for there is no real musical taste among the French. Provincials and foreigners will always go at least once to look at the building, and this will pay current expenses, but the Parisians have long since dethroned Rossini and Meyerbeer in favor of Offenbach and Lecocq, and they never went at any time to the Rue Lepelletier except because it was "good form" to show themselves there twice a week. But that was in the palmy days of the Empire, when there was a court and a galaxy of elegant women to set the fashion, whereas, the official ladies nowadays are not precisely types of distinction and refinement, and, so far as looks go, are much less presentable than a Fulton Market apple-woman in her Sunday clothes. M. Escudier's attempt to resuscitate the Italiens with "Aida" last Winter was pretty successful, so long as public curiosity lasted, but he retired from the speculation, as soon as he perceived that nothing else would draw, and Capoul got quite enough of the "Amants de Verone" in the course of a couple of months, and now that the Salle Ventadour has been sold to M. Soubeyrau, who proposes to construct a monster temple of Mammon, where once Pasta and Grisi, Mario and Ronconi and Tamberlik won their most brilliant triumphs, nothing will be left to dispute the field of lyric glory with operettas except that superannuated institution, the Opera Comique.

Thanks to Mr. Carvalho's prudent husbanding of the Government subsidy, matters are in a little more flourishing condition here than in the more aristocratic establishments higher up the Boulevards, but even this best is bad enough. The latest production is "Suzanne," by Emile Paladhille, and I suppose it may be called a fair success. Susanne is no connection whatever of the lady in the Bible who was so tormented by the attentions of a couple of hoary-headed Celadons, the only old gentlemen connected with the piece being the librettists, MM. Lochroy and Cormon, whose heroine is a young person who fled her parents' roof, because those benighted rusties refused to let their daughter go to school. Her first journey is to Cambridge, where, meeting a virtuous young student, Richard, she is persuaded by him to don cap and gown and follow the lectures at the university, under the name of Claudius. Richard, of course, falls in love; the disguise is penetrated by the authorities, a serious scandal follows, Claudius is expelled with a blemished reputation, resumes, female attire, goes on the stage, becomes a great tragedienne, is first and second acts were a good deal applauded, but until he does something a great deal better than "Suzanne," M. Paladhille's chief claim to distinction will remain based upon his "Mandolinata."

I have so often alluded to the indifference of the Parisians for either the lyric or the legitimate drama, that it would be tiresome to insist upon the fact that none but comedies which are reflections of, or satires upon, social life in the nineteenth century have any chance in competition with spectacular plays. Offenbach's "Brigands" continues the monster receipts of his "Orphée aux Enfers," and that absurd, inane farce, play "Rothomago," at the Chatelet, sees crowds refused admittance, when the Odéon, with a first-class company and pieces signed by authors whose works are masterpieces of style and diction, is forced to give away tickets in order that its houses may not be altogether empty. It is not a very healthy symptom of popular taste, but the craving after something new, and, if possible, horrible, has become a part of their nature. Even legs are no longer attractive. It is true that, the supply of the better quality of this article not being equal to the demand, managers were obliged to put up with spindles or the reverse, but wild animals are a sure card. "Around the World in Eighty Days" set the fashion, with the elephant Jenny, which used to be poked with a sharp stick by her cornac until her lamentable howls proved that she was not made out of India rubber. Then came Macomo's lions, but these only bit the actor Dechayes, and so, not eating anybody, soon lost favor. Bothomago has improved on both, with Karoli, known in the flesh as Brown, but who considers the alias more euphonious, and his snakes gave a delightful thrill of horror to the spectators by snapping off their tamer's thumb last week. The newspapers were full of details of the incident next morning, and tickets could not be procured at anything less than 100 per cent. premium for the next performance, but every one was disappointed, as the lively young python had digested his mensal rabbit, and was therefore torpid and harmless. Not to be outdone by any of their rivals, Messrs. Ritt & Larcobelle, at the Porte St. Martin, have introduced three different sorts of wild animals, if this name can be applied to a condor and a whale as well as to a bear. The sea monster, it is true, is of guttapercha, but opens quite naturally clouds of steam, colored nicely, at the last moment, with Bengal lights, to represent the blood of his death agony. And the condor is a mechanical contrivance of wire and pasteboard, which preserves the illusion of immense size at a prodigious height, even within the restricted limits of the mimic stage. I have not yet seen the "Enfants du Capitaine Grant," in which these aerial, aqueous, and terrestrial monsters appear, but by gossip I am assured that, while the first two are moderately satisfactory, the Polar bears are hugely successful. I say Polar bears, because in order to keep strictly to the letter of the piece, Greenland's fair mountains should have furnished these interesting accessories. But there have been great difficulties in the way. One animal-tamer at Bordeaux had offered three for the "Tour de Monde," but when called upon in the name of Capt. Grant's children, had gone home and left a widow who positively refused to part with her deceased husband's pets. Then M. Vezon was treated with, but he asked 10,000 francs per month, which although considered dear would have been accepted, when some one suggested to write to Uston, in the Pyrenees, where it is asserted the bears, who are on terms of intimacy with the inhabitants, walk about the streets as tame as dogs. Joy filled the heart of the St. Martin managers when these glad tidings were communicated, and forthwith a letter was dispatched to the Mayor of the locality asking for three nice bears. Back came the answer by return mail: "You can have the bears, but they must be prepaid and the money must be deposited with Mr. Schouler, the notary." And the money was deposited and the bears came, and they were quiet and tractable, and could dance to the sound of soft music, but, like all Pyrenean bears, they are black; and so, for the first time in theatrical history, the costumer has been employed to get up brain property, and finding no other more practical means, whitewashes him all over, and then powders freely with starch, so that to the eyes of the Parisians he resembles a genuine denizen of the antarctic regions. There was to have been a bull fight with real bulls and Spanish toreadors, terminating in the real death of an animal or a man—it did not much matter which, as either catastrophe would have been a great attraction, the human's death for choice—but the Animal's Protection Society interfered, as they did at the Hippodrome last Summer, so this exhibition has been postponed until people shall have gotten entirely rid of silly scruples.

Continuing to speak upon hearsay, and reserving my description of the play until I can judge for myself whether it be worth a notice, I will add that the grand ballet of the "Fêtes d'Or" has not been the triumph hoped for. It was to have been danced by a gold mine, where, at the close of the divertissement, a cascade of natural water was made to overflow and inundate the stage. But the frost came, and the pipes froze, and the Municipal Water Committee refused to furnish the necessary supply, which might be wanted where in case of fire, and so a public square at Valenciennes was substituted, and might have been called a public square at San Francisco or Sacramento City, or any other town on the far side of the Atlantic or the Pacific or the Indian Ocean, so very vague is the Parisian idea of geography. Another drama or comedy is in rehearsal, but pray that it may not be a lugubrious tragedy—will be played on the day after to-morrow. Anything is on the cards, as a result to the Senatorial election, and no one feels quite sure what to predict. The Conservatives are positive of a majority in the Provinces, where they pretend their constituents are wearied out with the autocratic airs of their functionaries officials. This would be civil war within three months. M. Gambetta assures his friends that the Radical majority will be at least of seven and twenty votes, which would adjourn the conflict to six months. I am of opinion that the present condition of affairs will not be materially altered, and that we shall remain indefinitely in statu quo. The ex-Dictator is obliged to encourage his party so as not to lose its leadership, but no one would regret more than himself the inauguration of that "era of difficulties" to which he alluded in his late oration at the Grand Hotel. His popularity is already somewhat compromised by his delay in the realization of the certain promised reforms, such as the abolition of God Almighty and the removal of all political disabilities from the transported felons, so that he is forced to pledge himself to both, and to order M. De Marcère to go and do likewise, but, in his heart, he knows that the fruit is not yet ripe enough for plucking, and that he would be driven to take a seat in the new Cabinet, and so lose all his chance for the next Presidency. Nor does he wish to see the Chambers back again in the capital, where the vox populi has already allotted the Luxemburg to the Senate, the Palais Bourbon to the Deputies, and the building lately occupied by the Exposition d'Administration to the Prefect of the Seine and the Municipal Council. But there are indications that the wishes of Belleville will be respected, as the architects, who were under orders to repair the ceilings of the Hall of Deputies at Versailles, have been instructed not to continue their labors; "the locality being merely a temporary residence for the Assembly, the expense becomes unnecessary."

The editor of a satirical journal, La Comédie Politique, announces that he is preparing a series of articles concerning "the rapid and scandalous fortune of the man whose eye was put out in the Café Procope." He requests M. Gambetta to attack him for defamation should any of the revelations be without foundation, and promises, in order that his victim may not feign ignorance, to send him a registered letter every Saturday containing the attacks which are to appear in the next number of his paper. There will be some curious charges and revelations, I fancy, which I will transcribe, when interesting, for the benefit of readers who may not know that in France it is not, as with us, the greater the truth the greater the scandal, and that the accused is obliged to prove innocence, not the accuser to establish guilt.

Letters from Larreguemines state that on the 31st of December a domiciliary visit was made by the German authorities to about 40 inhabitants of French origin, who were denounced for having in their possession plaster-casts of the "Republic," which had been modeled in 1873 at Mr. Schneider's porcelain works. All Mariani's effigies were confiscated and broken, their owners receiving the notification that a renewal of the offense of having anything of the kind on the premises would be regarded as an evidence of affiliation to the International, and would be punished accordingly. On the other hand, a subscription has been publicly started at Arras for a bronze bust of Robespierre, "while we await," says the preamble, "the proper moment to erect a statue to the great political genius of 1793."

SO STRAIGHT HE LEANED BACKWARD.

From the Boston Commercial Bulletin.

The most honest man we have heard of lately was a Washington-street dealer in men's underclothing. A friend of ours bought a pair of shirts of him, at $1 25 each, a few days ago, but, finding them too small, carried them back the next day to exchange them for larger ones of the same kind. The exchange was made without hesitation, but as the buyer was about to retire he was asked to wait a moment. At the end of the moment the cash-boy appeared, and the salesman, taking a half-dollar from his hand, presented it to the customer, informing him that between the time of purchase and the exchange the shirts had been marked down to $1 each, and he was therefore entitled to a half-dollar, the shirts he returned being $1 25 ones, and those he took only $1 ones!

HARD-MONEY DEMOCRATS SCARCE.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer, Jan. 18.

It is said in some quarters that if an alliance is made with the Greenbackers, the hard-money men will desert us and go over to the Republicans. That threat reminds us of the story of a Kentuckian visiting his relatives in old Virginia. In being introduced to the people of that neighborhood, they reminded him on nearly all occasions that "the folks were among the first families." Kaintuck finally asked what had become of all the second families. "Oh," said old Virginia, "they left for Kentucky years ago." So it is with the hard-money men; they left us years ago and went to the Republican Party.

COUNTRY PRODUCE AS LEGAL TENDER.

From the Lincoln (Neb.) Journal, Jan. 16.

One of our prominent attorneys, who was engaged in a suit against the Nebraska State Grange, had occasion to look over the books and papers in the hands of the Secretary, and among other things he found a resolution appointing a committee to urge the Legislature to pass an act to regulate the price of country produce for a period of five years, and to make it legal tender. Imagine a Granger going into Trickey's store and laying down three pumpkins and saying: "Mr. Trickey, please put a crystal in my watch, and here are your pumpkins."

A DOG'S TOOTH DRAWN.

From the Portland (Me.) Press, Jan. 18.

The other day Dr. Macalaster, the dentist, noticed that a dog was evidently suffering from a tooth that had ulcerated. He induced the animal to open its mouth, applied the forceps, and extracted the tooth. During the operation the dog sat quietly on its haunches, and stopped moaning, appearing to fully realize what the Doctor was about. After the tooth was drawn the animal expressed his gratification in many ways.

GLEANINGS FROM THE MAILS

INSTRUCTIONS TO SENATORS.

JEFFERSON DAVIS ON THE RIGHTS OF A STATE—HE CLAIMS THAT TO DENY THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE REPRESENTATIVE TO HIS CONSTITUENCY WOULD BE TO ATTACK THE FOUNDATION OF OUR POLITICAL SYSTEM.

From the Jackson (Miss.) Clarion.

We are gratified to have the opportunity to publish the following letter written by Hon. Jefferson Davis in reply to inquiries designed to elicit his opinion upon a subject of vital importance:

BEAUVOIR POST OFFICE, HARRISON COUNTY, MISS., Dec. 14, 1878.

MY DEAR SIR: I this day received yours of the 12th inst., asking for my opinion as to the right of the Legislature of a State to instruct her Senators in Congress.

Personally a disinterested observer, I stand upon the political river, earnestly watching whatever it may bear, but without any purpose ever again to launch my bark upon it. My opinions, however, upon any subject which interests Mississippi, are, as they always will be, at the service of my friends who may desire to have them.

The Government of the United States is essentially representative, the necessary consequence of the admitted sovereignty of the people, and the individuality of the States. To deny the responsibility of the representative to his constituency would be to attack the

HARPER'S MONTHLY.

—The leading article of foreign travel in the February Harper's relates to the mouth of the Amazons. Maurice Mauris describes the scenery and inhabitants, human and otherwise, of the island of Marajó, which takes in some sort the place of a delta to the greatest river of the world. A little chart of the lower Amazons and a variety of illustrations give the ground plan and elevations, to use architectural slang, of this remarkable fragment of the Brazilian Empire. We read of the civil contests of the inhabitants and the breeding of countless wild horses; we get pictures of typical senhoras among the women of the upper classes and accounts of the fever-stricken india-rubber gatherers. Speaking of the City of Para:

"The rooms are large, with high ceilings, and well ventilated. The furniture is generally of the simplest kind, the ornamental part thereof consisting chiefly of old mirrors, chandeliers, and huge vases of artificial flowers and glass covers. There are often more chairs than in a whole American house; they not only line the walls, but are also disposed in two rows half way across the floor, at right angles with the sofa, as though Brazilians intended to create a small cozy room within the large one. Whenever the notable character of his visitors compels the host to abandon his hammock, the reception takes place within this inclosure, the owner of the house naturally reserving for himself the place of honor—the sofa. It is amusing to regard the ostentatious formalities that attend these visits of ceremony. The conversation is carried on in a subdued, frigid, but extravagantly polite manner, no means of mirth being indulged in by the participants, and the position de rigueur being that of sitting mummies."

A second paper of "Rambles in the South of France," by S. G. W. Benjamin, describes Carcassone, Lourdes, Pau, and Laruns. The opening article consists of a mass of popular effects under the title of "Treasures of the Deep," by J. C. Beard, profusely illustrated in a popular style. Strange bits of natural history, authentic as well as dubious, are scattered through the paper, as, for instance, this account of the origin of ambergris:

"Perhaps the most complete metamorphosis of the character and association connected with any substance in nature is found in the delicate toilet perfume, ambergris, which naturalists tell us is nothing else than the result of a fit of indigestion on the part of the sperm-whale, being, in fact, a kind of intestinal calculus or portion of the food of the whale imperfectly digested. Foxes have a great partiality for ambergris, and congregate on the sea-coast in search of it. They eat it, and return ilth exactly the same state as it was swallowed, in respect to perfume, though changed in color. This is the white ambergris so highly valued. Thus, after passing through the digestive organs of two animals, it retains its delicate and subtle perfume, which recalls that of the fairest flowers, and also retains its value for the toilet."

Commander R. W. Meade writes an appreciative biography of the late Admiral Hiram Paulding, whose widow has been lately petitioning Congress for a recognition of her husband's services. They began during the war of 1812, when Midshipman Paulding fought under MacDonough, in the celebrated victory over the Euzlish fleet. Frederick G. Mather relates again the Winter pleasures enjoyed by the Canadians, the snow-shoe walking, skating, curling, sleighing, and using the toboggan. The installment of "Old Flemish Masters" contains epitomes of four old artists—Van der Weyden, Horlenus, Quentin, and Snyders. The figure heads illustrated paper is called "Education by Hand," in which H. E. Scudder relates the origin and growth of the Institute of Technology in Boston. He speaks of the recent introduction of manual instruction in public schools:

"There has been of late years a growing disposition to criticise our public schools on the ground that they attempt too much and offer a course of instruction out of all proportion to the practical use of the graduate; that knowledge, and not training, is made the end sought, and that in this way we secure a high organization, individual powers and tastes are disregarded. Certainly, the machinery of our public schools has grown more complex and costly, and it is to be feared that the children who leave them are confused, oftentimes, with knowledge rather than athleticised by training in elements of mental power. To a too intellectual training certain offsets have gradually been introduced. The introduction of drawing as a regular part of education has been a marked advance in the right direction, although the best methods of teaching it are still under discussion. The introduction of music in more systematic form came earlier, and was a very important sign of educational progress. Latterly, sewing has been introduced with marked results for good, and the chief regret of its friends has been that there was not some universal implement like the needle in the use of which boys might be trained."

Fiction is not represented in the usual proportion this month. Rebecca Harding Davis has a noticeable short story under the title "A Story of the Plague," in which the woman's character shows good observation, and John Esten Cooke brings in illicit distillers of Virginia to make a tragic background for a rather flimsy love story called "Moonshiners." Mrs. Dinah Mulock-Craik also begins a novel under the name, "Young Mrs. Jardine," which promises to be as quietly good and uneventfully pleasant as her novels generally prove. People who like gossip about musicians will enjoy a notice of Mendelssohn's letters to Moscheles, and the bucolic temperament may discover in "French Farmers," by Phebe Earle Gibbons, various new points of similarity and unlikeness to our own agricultural affairs. The editor of the Easy Chair discusses old New-York, the code of honor in France, the legends about Tell, and the poems of the late Mrs. Whitman, of Providence.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY.

—If there be a question as to the treatment accorded literary men in this country while they are living, there can be none concerning their treatment when dead. Bayard Taylor receives from Mr. R. H. Stoddard not only generous but loving notice in a paper contributed to the February Atlantic. Having been his friend since 1848, and owning many letters written by Taylor from many different places abroad, Mr. Stoddard adds to the pleasure of his style a great deal of information about our recent Minister at Berlin, which could be obtained nowhere else. The biographer rates Bayard Taylor's genius very high. The villa at Kennett-square, built by the late Minister, has a corner-stone under which reposes, according to Bayard Taylor's statement, "a box of zinc, containig a copy of 'Views Afoot;' an original poem by me, to be read 500 years hence by somebody who never heard of me; some coins; a poem by R. H. S., in his own manuscript, and various small things." In 1865 Taylor's friends, at the Century Club, bethought them to burlesque a recent birthday festival in honor of William Cullen Bryant, making Taylor's birthday the peg on which to hang the fun. Mr. Stoddard was naturally one of the prime movers.

Mark Twain's voice is seldom heard at present; and it is well to note that his reappearance shows a finer edge than latterly was the case. "The Recent Great French Duel" is an excellent farce in which Mark Twain performs the part of second to Gambetta in the late ridiculous duel with De Fourton. It is broad, but not broad for Mark Twain. Change of scene has evidently done him good. Clarence Cook is on the war-path in this number; the present victim is the new Roman Catholic Cathedral in this City, of which he says a number of very disagreeable and irritating things which, unfortunately, have a good deal of truth in them. F. G. Ireland writes an essay on "Puritanism and Manners," and William F. Apthorp has a paper on "Musicians and Music-lovers." It is seldom that one hears so much common sense talked about music. It might be called confessions of a musical man. Mr. Apthorp notices the reticence of musicians in speaking of their art, their inability to express themselves, and their disdain of the ordinary dilettanti who insist on a literary or rhetorical account of music or the effect of music. He is encroaching on a great subject and a most obscure one. For people are competent to decide what the effect of music upon themselves and others is; to analyze the proportions in which self, the individuality of the musician, and the quality of the music enter into the gratification one experiences in listening to music is a most delicate task. Mr. Apthorp writes most suggestively and will, it may be hoped, be heard from again on the same topic.

W. W. Story has a rather thin paper, in first part, on "A Roman Holiday Twenty Years Ago," and the special investigator on American social topics, who has been contributing to this magazine, describes in "The Career of a Capitalist" a man whom he personally knows. H. A. Huntington has a fragment from the civil war—"Sword and Awl"—in which there figures a recreant Swede with a French name, whose idea of fighting for the Republic was strictly limited to drawing pay. Richard Grant White tells of his experiences in London streets, and draws comparisons between the two great cities of the England and the United States. The solid contributions are by Arthur G. Sedgwick—"International Copyright by Judicial Decision"—and an unsigned article—"Limited Sovereignty in the United States." Besides the amateur reviews in the Contributors' Club, there is an official, though unsigned, review of various American novels recently published. Mr. Howells brings the lady of "The Arrostook" safely to anchor in Trieste, and commits his hero thoroughly to his tacit engagement with the up-country school-marm. There is a painful scene, but a good one, between the drunkard Hicks and the rest of the little colony on board the ship. The dialogue is as bright as usual. Finally, we must not forget "The Mariner-fiddle of St. Perpetua," a story to which is appended the celebrated name of Harriet Beecher Stowe.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY.

—When we see the cover to this popular favorite undergo some change in design we may be sure that a midsummer or midwinter number is in prospect, a number in which the editors are putting out a double effort to please the many tastes that must be consulted in such a publication. The midwinter issue for 1879 bears a design by F. S. Church, added to the usual semi-architectural design in steam-sawed perforated wood, to which the cover of Scribner's most nearly approaches. A shapely maiden in a well-used Worth dress is marching through a snow-storm with faggots and axe in hand, blowing her fingers to keep them warm. Below sits the most familiar and noticeable bird of Winter, the sly and clamorous crow. Turn the leaf, and you have before you the face of America's greatest singer and philosopher, Ralph Waldo Emerson, taken from life by Wyatt Eaton on the modern analytical system of portraiture to which that artist is devoted. All his efforts have been concentrated on the expression of eyes and mouth. The details are only so far important that some slight peculiarities suggest the monastic, clerical side of Emerson's character. Mr. Emerson no longer looks like an "amiable American eagle," as some one suggested concerning his appearance six or eight years ago; we see the effects of old age in the greater immobility of look. In the series of poets whom Mr. Eaton has been painting this one takes rank with the Bryant.

A singular mixture of foolery, information, and fine work in the way of wood-cuts is to be found in "The Tile Club at Play." Some 8 or 10 artists having made an excursion to the south side of Long Island, a rambling chronicle of their doings and pranks is here recorded. East Hampton contains interesting reminiscences of John Howard Payne, actor, Consul to Tunis, and author of "Home, Sweet Home." Pharaoh, Chief of the Montauk Indians, was sketched on his death-bed, and his venerable features modeled into a tile bas-relief. The following is a specimen of the art-talk among the Tilers:

"'You see,' said the 'Marine,' 'some neighborhoods are very strongly marked with the artistic consciousness. They combine well. They set out their milk-pans to drain in beautiful compositions. Their calves come to the fence in red and white, their old hens scratch under coops fenced in with rotten menhaden-nets, their sea-beaches attract the most beautiful brown weeds. Even figure heads have their gilding washed by the high tides in full sunshine. These places know how to relieve a Samuel Prout roof with a Birket Foster elm tree. Their geese march over the crests of a hilly road, with heads stretched up. Their men are old school-masters, sailors, and wreckers. Their windmills are brown with age and much oiling. Their girls lean in white sprunt szadoes like seal-skins.'"

Upon this mixture of the fine and farcical comes John Muir, with one of his Rocky Mountain talks, this time concerning "The Glacier Meadows of the Sierra." It is not often that the man who can appreciate such things so well, gets a chance to tell of them—or is able to tell of them, for that matter. Edward Eggleston follows with a long word-picture, "Among the Clergy," which the clergy may or may not accept with meekness. A. A. Hayes, Jr., has a burlesque symposium on the Chinese question, in which Chinaman, Frenchman, German, Paddy, and Yankee talk in dialect. Allen C. Redwood has more Confederate reminiscences in "The Fourteenth Regiment of Virginia Infantry, C," and Maurice Thompson writes a dramatic account of "The Doom of Claudius and Cynthia," the scene being the arena at Rome, the executioner the Emperor Commodus, the same whom our young painter Blashfield has attempted to show in a large picture, now on exhibition at Schaus' gallery. Russel Sturgis contributes a paper fully illustrated, on John Leech, and Edmund C. Stedman develops unexpectedly a hobby in "Aerial Navigation." He has a great deal to say that bears directly and indirectly upon air-ships, or aërobats, as we are to call them; predicts their success in the near future, defends Fourier and stock-brokers, and attacks dishonest railway directors. F. P. Stearns has a few pages on a most serious topic of the day, "The Relations of Insanity to Modern Civilization."

Prose fiction is supported by Edward Bellamy in a clever extravaganza called "Potts' Painless Cure." The relations the two young people bear will cause Europeans and Europeanized Americans to raise their pious hands in horror more or less affected. They are lovers, and very loving, but the youth has not yet asked the girl to marry him. When the story does arrive at that point, she still has nothing to do with him, because he has plied her so thoroughly with Potts' Painless Cure! The two serials are, as usual, "Haworths" and "Falconberg." Neither installment is equal in interest to that of preceding numbers. Of poetry, and good poetry, there is no lack. Foremost is R. H. Stoddard, with one of the finest tributes to Bryant which has yet appeared. There are stanzas by R. W. G., and an excellent piece by a new writer, Andrew B. Saxton. H. C. Bunner furnishes satirical verses; Joel Benton and Rose Hawthorne Lathrop some notable stanzas, each. The following promising lines are over a new name—L. Frank Tooker:

A Winter Morning.

The snow-drifts pile the window-ledge,
The frost is keen, the air is still;
The lane that lies below the hill
Is drifted even with the hedge;
Gray skies, and dark trees shaken bare,
Blue smoke that rises straight in air;
And down the west a yellow glare
Is driven like a scythe.

The biography of Ralph Waldo Emerson, by F. B. Sanborn, is one of the best, if not quite the best record of the "great American" which has appeared. Many new points relating to Emerson's ancestry are given, and the fact made known that the greater part of his writings have never yet seen the light. Scarcely any of his sermons have been published; most of his speeches remain uncollected and unedited; many verses and lectures exist only in manuscript. Few or none of the philosophical lectures read at Harvard eight or nine years ago have been printed. They make part of a work on "The Natural History of the Intellect."

ST. NICHOLAS.

—The Kindergarten system has commended itself to many minds of ingenuity, and enters more and more into the literature for children. In St. Nicholas for February we find a "Winter Song" by Mariana B. Slade, in which a certain number of common French terms are committed to memory through the medium of verse. Here is a stanza:

"No more the birds, les oiseaux, sing:
The trees, les arbres, their leaves have lost;
See snow, la neige, o'er everything.
And feel la gelée, or ice, the frost.
L'hiver, the Winter now has come,
Bringing us Noël, Christmas Day.
Les ruisseaux, brooks, with ice are dumb,
And in the snow les enfants play."

This is adding a new complication to the celebrated controversy among book-worms as to what is and what is not macaronic verse. Kindergarten polyglot will be a convenient if not euphonious term for such pedantic effusions. St. Nicholas always has one or more nonsense rhymes to extort a laugh from the ready lips of children. This is Frederick Palmer's contribution to the huge pile of nonsense verses:

"There was an old man of the Nile
Who had a benevolent smile;
When they said, 'Smile again,'
He replied, 'I'm not vain,
But I think I do know how to smile.'"

Julian Hawthorne's fairy tale continues at a thrilling moment, the moment that Prince Henry follows his ball inside Rumpty Dudget's inclosure. Tom, the cat, arrives too late to save him from that hunchback villain, and good fairies have to be brought to the rescue. But the end is not yet. Susan Coolidge begins in this number a story called "Evebright," for which Dielman makes illustrations. Dielman and Kelly are the favorite draughtsmen for St. Nicholas just now. Their methods of work are very different: Dielman is very soft and indefinite in his outlines, while Kelly indulges in the startling brevura drawing that has made for him his success. The latter has a special dramatic sense of a situation, but seems to be doing much more work than is good for him. Note the picture to David Ker's realistic yarn from South Africa, relating to a midnight attack on rhinoceros, and the headpiece to Stockton's "Jolly Fellowship." Hawthorne's fairy tale is illustrated by Alfred Fredericks.

A little story of science is told the children by Prof. D. S. Jordan in "A Story of a Stone," the stone being a kind of coral animal that lived in Wisconsin when the sea still covered the major part of North America. M. D. Ruff discourses pleasantly on violins, describing the rebeck, the viola, the guitar-shaped fiddle, and other instruments. Along with technical information on the violin, James H. Flint gives the history of one of its masters—Paganini—in "Little Nicholas, and How He Became a Great Musician." L. L. Beman recounts the origin of the jumping jack, and the great charity instituted by the inventor and illustrates of that popular toy. There are verses—"The Shining Little House," by H. H., and further revelations of the domestic affairs of "The Peterkins," by Lucretia P. Hale. Amalie La Forge has a boy's story with a moral—"Teddy's Heroes"—and Charles Barnard a tale from Manchester mills concerning a little girl who worked as a "Half-Timer," Thomas Moran supplying the illustration.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE.

—The Hungarian artist, Michael Munkacsy, is the subject of some very pleasant gossip in the Lippincott for February. The writer speaks from the stand-point of an early friend and fellow-student at Düsseldorf, when Munkacsy was entirely unknown to fame and only considered eccentric by the other painters of the town. Mr. Tait appears to have been intimate with Munkacsy up to very recent times. We are told of the early struggles of the artist as apprentice to a carpenter, next to a house painter, then as a penniless fabricator of third-class paintings. With the opening of the Paris Salon of 1870 his picture called "Le Dernier Jour d'un Condamné," pointed him out to Goupil, the picture-dealer, who made a rush for the rising genius. The picture was painted to order for an American, and is now in this country. Prosperity found him ready to indulge his taste for luxury and splendor with as much ardor as adversity made him long-suffering; he now inhabits one of the most noted studios in Paris, near Meissonier and Goupil, and is married to a young widow of fortune, whose portrait is to be seen in the picture of "The Studio," exhibited at one time in this City. Edward King, who contributes to this number of Lippincott's another installment of his articles on Hungary, speaks in this way of Munkacsy's personal appearance while alluding to the types of nationality to be observed in Pesth:

"In a few years the last brigand will have vanished, in company with the remaining bits of costume to which certain people in Hungary still fondly cling. Let the artist who would catch the picturesque aspects of peasant-life in this country hasten, for the young generation is getting into the hideous black clothes, slouch hats, and sombre pesticoats that offend the eye in Northern Germany. Munkacsy has painted a few bits from sketches made among the lower classes of his fellow-countrymen. How fresh, original, and sympathetic they are! And what a noble head the artist himself has! It is a real Hungarian type, symmetrical, strong, framed in handsome beard, and crowned with finely-colored hair. When Munkacsy walks on the Paris boulevards, passers who do not know him turn to stare at him. If he is not something exceptional, he ought to be," they say to themselves. One sees dozens of striking faces in the course of a day's walk in Pesth."

In regard to the artistic standing of Munkacsy, we may listen to what Mr. John R. Tait has to say of him, without forgetting, however, that it is from a personal friend and fellow-laborer who probably has been more or less influenced by the Hungarian:

"In an age when art too frequently ministers to a depraved sensuality, or to supreme sentimentality, and delights in barbaric decoration, in brutal realism, and in the delineation of morbid sensations or trivial anecdotes, it is refreshing and worthy of note to witness the recognition this young Hungarian has obtained by work which aims at the noble, the pure, fresh inspiration of nature, and which, while far from being didactic or tendenziös, seldom fail to leave in the beholder the impression of a high moral aim and noble impulse."

We have learned to look at the name of Felix L. Oswald for articles on South America containing more than usually trustworthy accounts of natural objects. The present paper relates to the formation, in 1759, of the volcano of Jorullo, in the State of Michoacan, Central Mexico, and the enormous chasm which occupies the site of a great and once fertile plain. It is this barranca which gives the paper its title of "A Gate to the Nether World," for it is a crater 3 miles long and 80 yards wide, having perpendicular sides and unfathomable depth. One portion of the barranca has an unsavory reputation for ejecting great masses of rock suddenly to the distance of many miles, exactly as if shot from a mortar. The Jorullo volcano is interesting to geologists for being an exception to the rule that volcanic action shows itself on the edges of the ocean. Under the title "In a Cabinet," Frederic M. Bird discourses instructively about coins and Roman Emperors, while the fiction for the month is in the hands of a number of women writers more or less well known. Rebecca Harding Davis writes "The Colonel's Venture;" Ellen W. Olney, "Through Winding Ways;" Mary N. Prescott, "Carrie Pane;" Margaret J. Preston, verses called "Not Worth the While;" E. S. F., a sonnet on "Ferns," and Howard Glyndon, verses called "Substitution." Mary E. Blair finds in France the subject for her "Daughters of the Legion of Honor," and Maria P. Woodbridge has an American biographical sketch under the title of "The Ladies' Days of the Blennerhassetts." Margaret Sullivan writes on "Lord Beaconsfield," and the anonymous writer of "Women's Husbands" gives chapters 3 and 4 of "Narcissus."

THE PRINCETON REVIEW.

—Instead of reserving its best efforts for the opening number of the new year, this solid bi-monthly expended itself on the November-December issue of the year just passed. For January and February we have no such remarkable series of papers as the preceding review could boast; the list falls again to the usual mark of respectable mediocrity. Dr. John W. Draper, of the University of New-York, does a little toward raising the standard in a paper on "The Political Effect of the Decline of Faith in Continental Europe." It is not the first time, he says, that Europe has exhibited a decline in belief, a weakening of those restraints which religion has over public life. There is once more an impending crisis. To whom shall we attribute this disorder—whose fault is it?

"Scarcely is the question uttered—the ecclesiastic exclaims: Is is all due to science. She has been incessantly obtruding her pestilent opinions, she has undermined the whole fabric on which men were living, and here we have the result. For the tranquillity of life, the repose which society once enjoyed, there is nothing but unsettledness and misery. Then to believe that each must bear his own burden and take care of himself, that there is nothing outside to help him. She has insidiously taught him that the intellectual heritage delivered to him by his forefathers through so many centuries is only a delusion, and by such suggestions has brought him into a condition of individual discomfort and social discontent. Even if in be true that medieval life was passed in a world of errors, what does that matter? Shall we not estimate the value of any philosophical system by the happiness it can confer? Is not a man who believes that the earth is flat and finds comfort in the conclusions he can draw therefrom better off than he who thinks that it is a globe—an idea which may plunge him into an abyss of irreligion and misery?

"The anger thus manifested against those who point back to the Middle Ages, their thought, and their manner of life, is not unlike the hostility manifested by many a pious Athenian in the old days. When a shipmaster who had returned from a voyage to the mysterious mouths of the Nile declared that none of the people living there had ever heard of Proteus, 'the old man of the sea, who tended his ocean calves in the shadow of the rocky shores,' and who could divulge all future events if caught and properly constrained—such a shipmaster might well expect the displeasure of those who had faith in the faith of old times, and those who had an interest in the prosperity of oracles.

"What had this shipmaster on this traveler done to bring upon himself public malediction? He had only related facts that had come under his own observation. There was no fault, no crime in that. Such was the manner in which the legends and the religious traditions connected with them disappeared from the popular mind. They were found out."

Dr. Draper has no direct suggestion to make on the subject, and his paper is merely suggestive; he may set one thinking, but will give no conclusions. Prof. Francis A. Walker, of Yale College, has an exhaustive Essay, "The Monetary Conferences of 1867 and 1878," on the present condition of the finances of the United States and Europe. He concludes that for us there are only four ways open. First—We may let things drift, continuing, under the present law, to coin silver at the rate of $2,000,000 or $4,000,000 a month. Second—We may stop the coinage of silver, but accumulate silver bullion in the Treasury to an equal or greater value. Third—We may drop all concern about silver, repeal the Allison bill, resume specie payments on a gold basis, and either remain permanently gold monometallic or agree to the re-establishment of bimetallism in Europe, if those States will take the trouble, expense and risk involved in setting it up again. Fourth—We may remove all restrictions upon the coinage of silver dollars. Of these four, the second is that to which Prof. Walker inclines. England, in 1816, and Germany, in 1867, are the authors of the present difficulties in the finances of the world.

Chief-Justice Cooley, of Michigan, has a legal essay on "The Surrender of Fugitives from Justice," and Prof. Thorold Rogers, of the University of Oxford, supplements the paper which he spoke on by his dissertation on "Causes of Commercial Depression." Among them he reckons the changes in gold or silver currency, to which the former paper is entirely devoted. Dr. J. Hutchinson Stirling, of Edinburgh, indulges in the favorite pastime of the Scottish divine—metaphysics—and writes on "The Philosophy of Causality." The more strictly ecclesiastical papers are by President W. D. Killen, of Belfast Presbyterian College, "The Conscience as Witness for Christ;" by Dr. Stuart Robinson, of Louisville, "The Pulpit and Skeptical Culture," and by Prof. Bernhard Weiss, of the University of Berlin, "The Day of Christ as Described in Paul." Prof. B. T. Coan, of the University of Michigan, has a paper on "Moral Government; Its Two Postulates—the Freedom of Man and the Personality of God." He denies that the monistic theory of evolution has succeeded in filling up the gap between the anthropoid ape and man even in the line of morphology, and is confident that he cannot fill up the chasm in the line of psychology.

LITERARY NOTES.

—My Guardian is a pleasant, lively novel by Ada Cambridge, reprinted by D. Appleton & Co. The wicked guardian and the sordid guardian have been shown very often in print. The present guardian is the hero of the book, and, after much tribulation, is united to his ward.

—Harper & Brothers include in their "Half-hour Series" "Goldsmith's Vicar of Wakefield," and a "Primer of Spanish Literature," by Helen S. Conant. The new novel of "The Library of American Fiction" is "Captain Nelson," a romance of colonial days, by Samuel Adams Drake.

—Rev. Henry T. Cheever issues a volume of "Autobiography and Memorials of Ichabod Washburn," to show how a large business was developed and large wealth acquired for the uses of benevolence. It traces the rise of Mr. Washburn from a position of labor to that of capital, from employe to employer, and explains his methods of making his charities do the greatest amount of good.

—Paul Heyse, the popular German novelist, whose In Paradise stands twelfth on the list of Appleton's translations of foreign authors, supplies the fifteenth volume with four short stories: "Count Ernest's House," "The Dead Lake," "The Fury," (D'Arrabiata,) and "Judith Stern." Mr. E. L. Burlingame has edited this book also, and gives a few pages to introduce Heyse more thoroughly to his American audience.

—Dr. Henry Raymond Rogers, of Dunkirk, N. Y., prints a little book of Theories of the Great Physical Forces, in which he advances the idea that the sun is not incandescent, but cool and habitable. The brightness of the fluid (vito-magnetic) between the sun and earth intercepts the view. The light of the moon and planets is not a borrowed light, but purely co-operative. He thinks light is instantaneous, and not measurable, as supposed.

—Porter & Coates, Philadelphia, will publish about the middle of the present year the third volume of the Count de Paris' History of the Civil War. It will contain without abridgment the fifth and sixth volumes of the French edition, and will embrace the account of the battles of Gettysburg, Vicksburg, Port Hudson, and other events of the war, to Jan. 1, 1864. The fourth volume, completing the work, is expected during the year.

—Derby Brothers publish for Mrs. Hugh L. Brinckley certain vigorous paragraphs in a small book called A Woman's Thoughts About Men. In this the essayist turns the tables on men, and assumes their position when ridiculing the foibles of women. What Mrs. Brinckley says may be quite true, but the world will not take notice of old facts related in old ways. Only a novel dress will serve to point the moral against fops, egotists, and faithless husbands.

—Mr. S. L. Frey, author of the paper entitled "Relic Hunting on the Mohawk," in a recent number of the American Naturalist, has recently made a "find" of a most interesting character, comprising skulls of very peculiar formation, and several implements of unknown use. He considers the articles suggestive of a much more ancient race than the Indians or the Mound-builders, and will soon give the facts to the public through one of the magazines.

—Prof Boyesen's book on Goethe and Schiller has had the benefit of the late Bayard Taylor's suggestions, and is said to give in general the latest results of German scholarship. Works as late as Grimm's last year's Lectures on Goethe have been drawn upon for material. The review of Goethe's life and work takes in all the German researches, and is further furnished as to facts, and the essay on Schiller is said to be hardly less minute than that on Schiller's friend and master.

—The London Society for Promoting Christian Knowlege issues, through Pott, Young & Co., of New-York, four neatly-printed little books on the "Conversion of the West." They treat respectively on "The Celts," "The Northmen," "The English," and "The Continental Nations." The last-mentioned is by Very Rev. Charles Merivale; the others by Rev. G. F. Maclear, Head Master of King's College School. Each book contains one or more maps, and can be read easily in four or five hours by a leisurely reader.

—The recent discussions concerning priority of invention of the speaking telephone prepare the way for a more general interest in a new publication by D. Appleton & Co. This is a volume on The Speaking Telephone, Electric Light, and Other Recent Electrical Inventions, by George B. Prescott. According to Mr. Preece, as here quoted, the early experiments were sometimes too good to be true. A learned scientist was called upon to say something to be heard 50 miles off. The sage hesitated, and then said, "Hey diddle, diddle—follow that up!" He then put the telephone to his ear, and announced with glee: "He says, cat and the fiddle!" The next day it was found that the real answer of the speaker 50 miles away was, "Please repeat."

—A new international journal, ecclesiastical and religious, has been started in London and New-York under the title of The Catholic Presbyterian. In this City Anson D. F. Randolph & Co. will be the publishers, and Revs. William Adams, John Hall, and T. W. Chambers on the Advising Committee. On that of Great Britain and Ireland are Profs. Flint, Rainy, and Calderwood, of Edinburgh. The editor is Prof. W. G. Blaikie, D. D., F. R. S. E., represented in this City by Dr. G. D. Matthews. The January number of this religious monthly contains a paper on "Missionary Sacrifices," from the unpublished manuscripts of the late David Livingstone; an article, by Eugène Réveillaud, on "Religious Reform in France," and something about the centenary of Voltaire, by E. de Pressensé, of Paris.

—Scribner & Co., the publishers of Scribner's Monthly and St. Nicholas, enter the field as book publishers with a volume of "Spiritual Songs," selected and arranged by Rev. Charles S. Robinson, D. D. The psalms and hymns are divided among various departments, such as for the Lord's day, the house of prayer, the sacrifice of praise, &c., and are governed by two indexes, of subjects and of first lines of hymns, as well as by an index of tunes, of authors, and of meters. There is also an index of first lines of stanzas, excepting the first stanza, they being given in the former index. Another still refers to Scripture texts. The music for church and choir is printed in the text at no fixed point on the page. Clear large type and a sober binding add to the attractions of this devotional volume.

—Mr. H. S. King, of the firm of Henry, King & Co., Cornhill, London, died last month, leaving $800,000. He succeeded the celebrated book-selling house of Smith, Elder & Co. in a part of their business, including "the old stand" in Cornhill. This firm, who, it will be remembered, were the first to recognize the superlative merits of Currer Bell, formed, also, close relations with Thackeray, and became the publishers of the Cornhill Magazine, when it adventured under his editorship. Subsequently Mr. Smith determined to start the Pall Mall Gazette, taking its name from Arthur Pendennis' paper. Among its leading contributors was Thackeray's bon camarado "Big Higgins"—better known as "Jacob Omnium," from his letters to the Times under that signature—a familiar figure to all Londoners of 35 and upward. The house of Smith & Elder had for years curiously combined a banking and publishing business, arising out of a design to accommodate both in financial and literary matters a great East India connection. Thus, they were particularly well known to the Col. Newcomes, Mr. Binneys, &c.; in a word, all that class with which Thackeray, the son of an Anglo-Indian, was familiar in his youth. Mr. King was a remarkably fortunate man, who rose from being clerk in a book-seller's store at Brighton to marrying a Duke's niece and dying a millionaire. He bore an exemplary character.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

A BOATMAN ON FREE CANALS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Allow me to say a word in regard to your editorial in THE WEEKLY TIMES of Jan. 8, 1879, "The State Canals." I am a boatman, and have had a practical experience of 15 years on the canals of this State and on the Canadian canals. In regard to low tolls, I don't think there is a single boatman who can truthfully say he has been benefited one cent. As tolls have been reduced so have freights been reduced, so that the real gainers have been the shippers. In regard to Mr. G. W. Schuyler's plan of changing the size of the lock, also the shape of the boats, it looks to me to be simply nonsense. Why, in order to have boats of 275 tons burden pass easily in the canals, the entire length of the Erie, Oswego, and Champlain Canals would have to be doubled in size, also all the locks. The largest class boats now in use on the canals are 115 feet keel for burden, and there is not an inch of room to spare. And how Mr. Schuyler, or any other man, can build 1,000 miles of canal and 181 locks and about 400 bridges for the sum of $7,000,000 is more than I can tell, and then to give the use of the canals to the boatmen and shippers free—well, it would be generous. I think the tax-payers of this State have got all are willing to give; they want in the shape of the new Capitol at Albany without getting another in the shape of free canals. Here is my plan: Let the canals be made self supporting; do away with some of the high-salaried canal officers, who do nothing but draw their pay, and, in fact, let the canals alone for a few years. At no time in 15 years have the canals been in better shape than they are now, and with some small ordinary repairs they will do very well as they are for the next 10 years.

A SLOW COURT.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The Court of Common Pleas is at present the slowest court in this County. This is not to be wondered at. One of its Judges is the most part of the year doing duty in the Supreme Court, by virtue of a Gubernatorial mandate. Now, robbing "Peter to pay Paul" is very poor policy, indeed, generally. In this instance suitors suffer as well as their lawyers. Two years ago all the causes on the calendar of the Court of Common Pleas were called and disposed of, either by trial or otherwise. Why not pursue the same course again, and give an opportunity to litigants to have their suits determined? The way things are going on at present there is no telling when a case will be reached on the day calendar. It is well known that when the General Term of the Court is in session the Trial Terms are almost completely neglected. With only two available Judges, one of whom holds Chambers, the jury calendar makes little or no progress when the General Term sits. Is there no remedy for this evil? Let me remark, in passing, that our Supreme Court, once so slow, has got ahead of the Common Pleas, and for this progress we are indebted to a Judge of the self-same Common Pleas.

LAWYER.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 15, 1879.

SOME WRONGS OF ARTISANS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

A householder who fails to use common sense in the employment of men or the purchase of goods should not complain. As a rule, in New-York, nine out of ten men in the different mechanical branches of trade served no apprenticeship, are incompetent and ignorant, and hire men like themselves, in order to lord it over them, and deceive the people who, as householders, complain of the general imposition practiced on them.

There are carpenters, masons, plumbers, tin and stove men who served an apprenticeship and learned their trades under the old masters; they worked, and took a pride in doing their work, well, until forced out to make room for the unprincipled upstarts who are grinding the life out of artisan and householder alike to make money. A man who can work and is not ashamed or afraid to work should receive the householders' support, and be paid, not as a begger receives his pittance, but as a man who has well-earned his money; until they do this, they must expect the poor work they are. I will give some points—how many an artisan could give—of these very householders in many cases. I will give one: A contractor calls for estimates on two houses; he gets all save a few cents; the lowest one will not pay for the brand of tin required for the roofs; the solder, charcoal, resin, nails, and paint are a loss. The cornices, leaders, and gutters, with all the work, are thrown in. Now, tell me how can artisans be honest and stand such a process as this? H. M. R.

ORSINI BOMBS.

Naples Correspondence of the London Times.

One of the necessary elements of happiness to the Neapolitan—noise—has been, too, prohibited by the Police. Such prohibitions have year after year been attended by no result, but this year great activity has been displayed and a large seizure made of fire-works, especially of the loudest and most dangerous, called bombs. They are sold commonly in the shops, or have been, under the suggestive name of "Orsini bombs." Though made of paper, they inflict very dangerous wounds, as the Hospital of the Pellegrini can report, and occasion such a terrible alarm in the neighborhood as to prove nervous or the sick. It is by no means pleasant to have one of these explode between your legs while taking an evening stroll, and the Police have done good service in seizing large quantities. Very early in the week 4,000 of these Orsini bombs had been captured: later, and in almost every quarter of the city, many hundred of others had been seized. Some of these were weighed as upward of two pounds, others one pound and upward; so you may easily imagine what consternation might have been spread and what wounds inflicted by their explosion. By proper energy and the determined execution of the existing laws, these and many other criminal nuisances might long ago have been prevented; but the laws are never strictly enforced. There is a law which sanctions capital punishment in cases of murder; but murderers and mutilators and hack his neighbor to pieces in Italy—nay, may, even attempt to assassinate the sovereign—without this law being executed. Of what use is it to talk about the all-sufficiency of existing laws if they are never enforced? No doubt the political agitation under which the country is heaving has not a little contributed to the social distress which prevails here. In various ways it creates a feeling of uncertainty which reacts on industry. People do not know what they are to expect or hope for, and so there is a general uneasiness.

A TURKEY LOSES HIS CLOTHES WHILE DRUNK.

From the Bangor (Me.) Whig, Jan. 13.

A Glenburn farmer came into the city recently, and among other things purchased some rice and a pint of whisky. Fearing that the bottle might get broken on the way home, he placed it in the box containing the rice. When he reached home and took the box from the pung he found that the stopple had got out of the bottle, and rice and whisky were thoroughly mixed. He saved the contents of the box behind the barn, and in a short time a huge turkey came along and, as he was not as particular as the farmer, gobbled up the medicated rice. Shortly after this the farmer was greatly surprised to find the turkey lying out behind the barn "dead as a door-nail," and vowing vengeance on the man who sold him whisky rank enough to kill a turkey, he carried the bird into the house. The farmer was soon after seen carrying the naked bird—as every feather was gone with the exception of the wings and tail—out behind the stable, where he left it on the snow. The next morning when he entered the stable, it being hardly light, he detected what he thought was the ghost of that intemperate turkey and could almost feel his hair rise; but he made up his mind to investigate the matter and boldly advanced. Imagine his surprise, on getting nearer, to discover the bird shivering on the roost, and looking at him with reproachful eyes for having stolen his clothes while helplessly drunk. At last accounts the turkey was cold as well as could be expected during this zero weather.

A NEGRO WOMAN'S LOVE FOR HER CHILD.

From the Abbeville (S. C.) Medium.

A little negro, 2 or 3 years old, fell into Mr. J. D. Pace's well near Hodges last week, and was almost miraculously delivered from death, by its mother. The well was 40 feet deep and the child fell to the bottom. The mother was some 50 yards distant from the well at the time of the accident, but reached to the rescue and descended the well, holding to the wall rock and the piping of the pump. The child was found clinging to the pump up to its mouth in water and beyond the power of speech. The woman placed it in a bucket which had been lowered to her, and with this load on her head safely climbed back to the surface again. But few such instances as this of

BRANCH OFFICES OF THE TIMES.

THE TIMES Up-town Office—No. 1,238 Broadway.
Paris Office of THE TIMES—No. 39 Rue de Lafayette.
THE TIMES is on sale in London at No. 449 Strand, W. C., from Henry F. Gillig & Co., and at Mr. Stevens', No. 4 Trafalgar-square.

The Signal Service Bureau report indicates for to-day in this region, colder north-west to south-west winds, partly cloudy or clear weather, and rising, followed by falling, barometer. The temperature will rise slowly during Monday night.

Only six weeks of Congress now remain, and there continues just as much of a rush of bills as there could be if the session were to last six months longer. On Friday the Senate bills numbered 1,642, and those in the House 5,861. Many of the largest appropriation bills have yet to be matured in committee, and very few of the general appropriation bills have been passed. There was at the beginning of the session the usual preliminary advertisement of the hopeful forwardness of the business in the hands of the Appropriations Committee, and the usual tame and impotent conclusion now stares us in the face. The appropriation bills block the way. They will be imperfectly considered, and general legislation will fail of being considered at all. To-day being a day when bills may be introduced under "a call of the States," there will be another avalanche, and a debate which may consume the time of an entire sitting is liable to spring up at any moment.

The large losses by the recent fires in Grand-street and Worth-street, in this City, have awakened a lively discussion among business men. Millions of property have been wiped out of existence in a few hours. The admirable Fire Department of the City has been unable to cope with either of these fires, its efforts finally being restricted to keeping the flames from spreading far and wide. Reporters of THE TIMES have gathered the opinions of many experts who are conversant with the character of the business buildings of the City; and it will be seen that there is a general belief that these so-called fire-proof structures are not what they seem. They are easily set on fire, and once the flames are started the building is doomed. If there should be a brisk gale blowing when some such fire as that which occurred in Worth-street was under full headway, nothing could prevent the destruction of a vast amount of property. The laws regulating construction are imperfect; they are not enforced; and greedy builders save money by weakening their work just where it should be strongest. "Contract work" is the bane of our present system of building. There have been many large losses lately, which are directly chargeable to defects which could and should be remedied. It is time that these expensive lessons were heeded.

As might have been expected, there is a disagreement between the Indian Bureau and military authorities as to the causes of the late escape of Cheyennes from Fort Robinson. It was charged that the Indians had not been sufficiently fed, and that rather than go back to the Indian Territory in the dead of Winter they fled to the mountains. On the other hand, it is now asserted that full rations were served out to the Cheyennes, and that the only complaint made by the Indians was that they were not allowed supplies of coffee, sugar, and other articles only offered to them as inducements to work. And it is further explained that the Indian Bureau requested the military authorities as long ago as Nov. 16, when the weather was mild and pleasant, to make the proposed transfer. The delay of five weeks gave the Cheyennes opportunity and motive for an escape. Unless this statement is disproved, the responsibility for the Cheyenne stampede, as well as for its bloody consequences, rests with the military people.

A reorganization of the civil service in the South is said to be under consideration. The last changes were made in the interest of peace, good-will, and sectional harmony. The proposed reorganization is to be made in the interest of law and order. At the beginning of the present term of Administration it was urged that the disorders in the South were due to the dissatisfaction of the people with the law officers, most of whom were Republicans, or "Radicals." The policy of conciliation demanded the removal of these men, if the laws of the Republic were to be enforced. It was too much to ask of men, who had lately been conciliated, that they should be amenable to laws administered by officers whose political affiliations were objectionable. The change has not been altogether for the better. Not to put too fine a point, there is more lawlessness in the South now than there was when the hated Radicals represented the power of the Government. Senator GORDON's appointees in Georgia do not enforce the laws, and there is an impression prevailing in Washington that the people of some of the States do not so much object to the officers as to the statutes. Singularly enough, THE TIMES long since advanced this very reasonable theory.

"The Democratic Legislature of 1879," we are told by a New-Orleans Democratic journal, "has built itself a lasting monument in the hearts of the people," by ordering a convention to frame a new Constitution for Louisiana. Those who are interested in the "true inwardness" of this enthusiastic outburst on the part of an organ of the de facto Government in Louisiana, will find it in some of the statements of our Washington correspondent yesterday. The Constitution which is now to be overthrown limits the debt of the City of New-Orleans, limits State taxation, and sets apart a fixed annual contribution to pay the interest on the State debt. These features are disagreeable to the gentlemen who are at present engaged in plundering Louisiana, and it is largely on this account, we suspect, that they have been engaged in building for themselves "a lasting monument" on its ruins.

That extremely elastic politician, Gen. B. F. BUTLER, so far from being flattened out by his defeat in Massachusetts, rebounds with new determination. He announces his intention to run for Governor again next Autumn, and he is confident that this time he "will make the trip." The General is early in the field; in fact, he has camped among his dead and wounded, and his plan of campaign is sketched on what was thought to be his own political coffin. He will have a newspaper organ to begin with, and thus a profession which has suffered great indignities at the hands of the Claimant may at last be avenged. There was danger that Massachusetts politics might become dully respectable. With assurance of the perpetual candidacy of BUTLER, the political field in the Bay State will be lively for years to come.

LIGHT FROM LOUISIANA.

The letter of our special correspondent with the Teller committee in Louisiana gives some of the facts which have already been gathered there. He does not, of course, seek to anticipate the judgment of the committee based on complete testimony and covering a wide field. But he sets forth in a succinct fashion the conclusions which he has himself derived from the testimony already taken from both parties in regard to matters in three parishes or counties. It will be seen that the question of the right of free suffrage in this case takes an entirely new form. The problem to be solved by the regular Democrats was still the suppression of the negro vote; but the negroes had new allies, worked for different aims, and left their oppressors without any of the pretenses by which their conduct has hitherto been justified, or at least excused. There was no longer any combination between negroes and Northern whites, and not essentially a combination of negroes and "scalawags," which is the slang of the section for Southern white Republicans. The negroes practically abandoned their own claim to direct representation in local government by nominating native white Democrats, and ex-Confederates at that, for local offices, Mr. FAIRFAX, a negro candidate for Congress, being the only one of his race who was prominently concerned in the campaign.

It might be supposed that this would be a successful experiment. It was a very interesting and a promising one. It showed the possession of political sagacity, within its sphere, of a sufficiently high order. It was exactly what their Southern critics, and a good many Northern ones, have always insisted was impossible with the negroes, an abandonment of everything like clannishness, a willingness to accept white leaders, a shrewd subordination of mere partisanship to larger interests; in a word, genuine political self-control. We should say that such an incident ought to delight the heart of Mr. HAYES. If he could have cited its success as due to his policy, it would have been a strong point, the first and only one, so far as we have observed, in its favor. It was a fair attempt to wipe out the color line, to associate the two races in a healthy and practical political partnership, and to secure good "home rule" by the same sensible processes that have so long and so successfully been employed in other parts of the Union.

Unfortunately, it did not work in the present instance. The men whose utterly unfounded, unjust, and undemocratic supremacy HAYES established in the Nicholls Government, are not the men to abandon a purpose because it has no sound bases in reason and fair play. If they had, as they have so often pretended, been fighting to prevent negro rule and to secure the management of local and State affairs by native white Democrats, they would not have interfered with the plan which our correspondent describes. They could not in decency have done so. They might, as Northern politicians would have done, have contended against it on grounds of party regularity, and to secure their personal control; but they would have seen that violence and fraud were at last without excuse. That they did not see this is due to the fact that they are blinded by hatred and selfish lust of power, and it shows how much reliance is to be placed on the pleas by which they justified their former insurrection and usurpation. They went on recklessly in their old path. They cheated their white rivals and "bull-dozed" their black ones, and they resorted to the most violent and unscrupulous means to raise the race issue, and so to intimidate the negroes' new-made white allies, by fear of loss of social caste, from using their influence to defend their followers. The net result of their whippings, hangings, murders, and driving of negroes into exile, is the loss of at least two Republican members in the House of Representatives—no mean contribution to the power of their party in the national councils, and one which the country can appreciate when the organization of the next House is made.

But it is possible that the experiment has not been so hopelessly lost as it seems to have been. It will help to open the eyes of the country to the real character of the mean and vulgar despotism in the South to which the Democratic Party owes the degree of power it has already obtained, and by which it seeks to control all branches of the Federal Government. And the experiment may not—probably will not—be without its fruits in Louisiana, and possibly in other Southern States as well. The ice is broken, and white Democrats have led negro Republicans in a conflict with the "regular" machine. The sense of justice, and of self-interest also, has been aroused, and the victims of the miserably corrupt and ambitious clique who now rule Louisiana with a rod of iron, are not helpless and despised black men only, but white Democrats, men of property and local standing, with interests and political aspirations of their own. These men cannot but see, in the reckless misgovernment of the "regulars," an added incentive to resent the persecution and fraud to which they and their friends have been subjected. Our correspondent points out that already the white residents of the sugar districts have quietly compelled the agents of the Nicholls system of fraud and violence to behave themselves in those districts, because, if they did not, business interests of great magnitude would be ruined. The same motive, though not so strong or so obvious, exists in the rest of the State, and must make itself felt. The local quarrel in New-Orleans was an instance of its force. Corruption in the body politic, as in the human body, will work its own cure, sooner or later, if the body itself be strong enough.

INSURANCE AND THE LATE FIRES.

The immediate effect upon the fire insurance companies of the two great fires which have recently occurred in this City will be a lessening by a large amount of their financial resources at a time when they can ill-afford to spare a single dollar of their assets. As the merchants and property-owners who suffered loss in the fires of Tuesday and Friday nights were, with hardly an exception, well protected by insurance policies, the companies that stood behind them are to-day poorer by at least $3,500,000 than they were on the 1st day of January. The risks were well distributed, and hence the loss does not fall with overpowering force on any one corporation. Contributions to the amount of several hundreds of thousands of dollars will have to be made by the underwriters of Hartford, Boston, and Philadelphia, while the insurance companies of England, Germany, and France that have agencies here will have to pay as their share not less than $500,000. But though corporate insolvency may not be the result of these fires, as it was of the far greater conflagrations in Chicago and Boston, the underwriters see swept out of their coffers in the first half-month of the new year a sum sufficient to represent the larger part of their earnings during the whole of last year. How is this to be replaced? This is a question which the officers of insurance companies cannot fail to ask themselves and each other, when they recollect how hard it has been to pay ordinary running expenses and every-day losses out of the premiums that have been received for some time past. If the insurance business throughout the country is to be carried on as it has been for the last three years, it is safe to say that the money that the companies are now called upon to pay out will never be returned to them. In order to get back what has been lost, a change in the present system of doing business will have to be made.

Those who hold shares in our local fire insurance companies—and the number must be large, as $25,000,000 is invested in this manner—do not need to be told that, since the National Board of Underwriters abandoned its active work, the rates of premium all over the country have been pressed down by the underbidding of competing companies. This has forced the weaker organizations into a suspension of business, and has deprived many of the stronger ones of profits other than those obtained from their investments. It is true that in this respect the insurance companies have not fared differently from corporations and individuals who have been, during the same period, engaged in mercantile pursuits. But it should be remembered that fire underwriting is a peculiarly hazardous occupation, and those who risk money in it deserve to receive larger returns than are to be obtained from ordinary investments. If they do not, as a rule, get from 10 to 12 per cent. per annum on the par value of their stock, the chances are that in a series of years they will be out of pocket, for every now and then a sweeping fire compels the shareholders to make good an impairment in capital, if, indeed, it does not absorb all the assets of their company. Now, during the past three years, the profits upon the gross capital of all the companies doing business in this country have been considerably below the point mentioned above, although at the same time no fires of notable magnitude have occurred. With the opening of this year, however, we seem to be entering upon an era of great losses, and this, too, at a time when the companies are in anything but a prosperous condition.

It may seem hard to the merchant or the owner of real estate whose income has been cut down by the prevailing stagnation in trade to be told that he must pay higher rates of insurance if he wishes to receive adequate protection; but this must none the less be said. All insurance is to this extent mutual—that rates of premium have to correspond to the volume of loss. If warehouses are put up that can, with their valuable contents, be destroyed in an hour, we must continue to pay for our folly until we are taught by sad experience to build in a safer and better manner. The means of relief does not rest with insurance companies, for they merely protect property as they find it. but it is in the power of property-owners to put up buildings that will not burn down, and in this way to reduce the rates of insurance to the same level that they are in France, where the charges are only about one-tenth of what they now are here. In the meantime, the companies, if they would continue to exist, must demand a return commensurate to the risk they assume. This must not, and cannot, be done in this City alone, for the premiums of an entire year received for insuring property in this City would hardly more than pay for these two losses, and there are yet many months and many fires to be added to the present score before the 1st of January comes again. The action should be general, beginning, as is necessary, in the large cities, and extending into the country districts. Already steps have been taken in this direction in San Francisco, St. Louis, Boston, and this City, and companies doing a large agency business, as most of our New-York companies are, have only to properly use their influence to cause effective local boards to be formed in a hundred different localities within the next three months. The well-known National Board, which has its head-quarters here, is somewhat in disfavor on account of its past intermeddling with local affairs; but if its managers could be persuaded to adopt a new policy, its now disused machinery might be set in motion to some purpose.

COMPROMISE OF PUBLIC DEBTS.

In 1875, the debt then standing at about $4,000,000, the creditors of the City of Mobile accepted $510 in 6 per cent. bonds in exchange for $1,000 of the old 8 per cents., the reduction being 25 per cent. from the interest rate, and 49 per cent. from the principal. The debt now stands at $1,785,000 of those bonds, which are in default since last May, and a new proposition comes up to reduce the interest to 2 per cent. for the next ten years, to 3 per cent. for the following ten, and to 4 per cent. for the remaining seven years before the maturity of the bonds; the alternative hinted at is the abolition of the city itself, in the technical sense, by the repeal of its charter. The bonds of Mobile are quoted nominally here at 25, as are those of Memphis, where the same expedient for procuring financial relief has lately been proposed. Besides the seven Southern States which may be said to have no financial standing, there are nine Southern cities, some of whose bonds are quoted at 60 or below, and seven whose bonds are at or under 50.

A few years ago, one of those peculiar "cities," which exist more on paper than in any other place, having ceased to derive satisfaction from the debt by which it had mortgaged a future growth that remained future, sought to dispose of the trouble by the original expedient of moving the city itself over its existing boundaries, to a new spot on the prairie; when other cities, too large to be physically moved, contemplate destroying their identity and expunging their debts by a legal fiction, it becomes as idle to discuss the equity as the legality of the scheme. The United States Supreme Court—as shown in the very recent decision that a city cannot tax its own bonds in the hands of holders, because in borrowing money States and cities are not acting as sovereignties but come down to the level of individuals—has not been slack to uphold the rights of bondholders; but it is idle to urge that a contract cannot be abrogated by subsequently repealing a charter. The counsel of an imprisoned debtor once reiterated the assurance that he could not be put in jail upon the existing state of facts, whereupon the other, with some warmth, insisted that nevertheless he was in jail. We have already shown, in exhaustive reviews of the subject of remedies for public creditors, that there is practically no way of enforcing their rights to the extent of getting the money. Municipal corporations are not liable to punishment; their revenues are exempt from seizure, either in the Treasury or in transit to it; in some States, their private property—that is, such as is held for profit and not for public trusts or uses—is liable to execution, but in fact they have no property of such a sort. If recusant, there is no course but to overcome their recusance and make them raise the money by tax; for this there is no recourse except the barren one of a mandamus or order, which the Supreme Court will grant as often as the creditor desires. As for sending officers to make a levy, or permitting private property to be touched, the court has repeatedly declined to do either. If the public body does not pay, the courts will order it to pay; if it will not do so then, why, it need not.

This is simply the fact of the case, and it is not easy to see why any city should take the trouble to get its charter repealed in order to throw off a debt which, practically, is not collectible. Aside from the matter of the amount and character of the original debt, the real obstacles to the payment of the amount to which the Southern debts have been, or might be, reduced are two: a very bungling revenue arrangement—such as we have recently pointed out in the case of Virginia—and a rooted unwillingness to be taxed. The rate which is to be imposed is understood to be what can be collected, and what can be collected is understood to be what the people are perfectly willing to pay. Reducing the tax rate is considered to be refraining from asking the people to submit to any inconvenience, and there is scarcely any disposition to recognize that any duty is owed to the creditor; on the contrary, he is regarded as an odious and conscienceless person for wanting anything. This feeling is shown even in official documents, as when the City Auditor of Mobile remarked that "unscrupulous bondholders succeeded in grinding out of the poverty of our people the satisfaction of their claims;" but it is not strange that public officials defer to the sentiment of their constituencies.

This being the case, there seems to be no basis for compromises, for they require good faith as a condition precedent. The Funding Association is trying to effect reductions to a reasonable and permanent basis; but until there is visibly a change in the disposition of the indebted communities, there is no sort of guaranty that the first scaling is not merely a convenient step for reaching the second. In some instances this has proved so, and it is in human nature that it should be so. But if it is to be the rule, or if there can be no such change wrought as will give reasonable promise of a better issue, then, we feel compelled to say, it is better that the whole idea of negotiation were abandoned. Inasmuch as any community has only to do nothing at all in order to practically escape paying its debts, there is no reason why it should take the trouble to commit legal hari-kari, or to announce a formal repudiation, unless it deliberately chooses to take the position of absolute and final refusal. Simply not paying, it comes into discredit, but leaves the possibility of paying some time hereafter; publicly declaring that it disowns its debts, it writes its own epitaph financially. To do this is not necessary, and yet, unless compromises can have better promise hereafter, we incline to think it best for all interests that no more be made, and that the alternative to payment be flat repudiation. And this, for the reason that scaling, without a fixed resolve to keep faith, reaches the same end, and does it by the successive steps which conceal that end from right and blunt conscience and sagacious self-interest together. It is a demoralizing and ruinous process, because a gradual one, for the easy descent into avernus is always down a ladder of short steps, never by a plunge; but if the plunge had to be contemplated at first, it might deter from taking it.

THE BOARD OF NAVAL ASSISTANTS.

Just before the holiday recess, Mr. HARRIS introduced into the House, with the sanction of the Naval Committee, a bill to create a Board of Naval Assistants—a measure of almost as grave importance to the future of the Navy as the Burnside bill is to the future of the Army. There is much to be said against this project, and no doubt it will all be said, and said strongly, by those whose powers and privileges would be curtailed or superseded. The faults of such a board would, like its merits, somewhat resemble those of a Board of Admiralty; but despite its manifest drawbacks, and despite the unusually good bureau service which happens now to exist, we think the project well worth consideration.

Mr. HARRIS' present bill is substantially the same as the one framed by that Congressman and reported at the last session. It has now, however, been amended by the committee, apparently with a view to disarm opposition, rather than with the hope of making it in all respects such a bill as the committee would like to report. Certainly, the sum of three millions, which last April's bill proposed to devote annually to the construction of vessels, was not extravagant, in view of the low condition to which Congress has suffered the Navy to dwindle; but it has now doubtless been considered a less revolutionary proposition to rely, instead, on such annual contributions to the construction fund as Congress may see fit to make. The main feature of the bill remains, namely, the appointment of a board which shall hereafter substantially take charge of the building and altering of vessels and engines for the Navy, and of armament and equipment. That some such authority is sorely needed the history of the past twenty years furnishes ample evidence; it is not too much to say that had it always existed, and been properly constituted, the scandals which have hung about the department as far back almost as the outbreak of the war for secession, would have been spared to the country, while the Navy would have had something to show for its scores of squandered millions. While in form the present bill and its predecessor of the last session are new, they are not entirely novel in substance. A Board of Navy Commissioners existed very many years ago, and performed much service. Its leanings, however, were so strongly to the side of retrenchment, close accountability, and the rigorous saving of candle-ends, that it become rather unpopular. It is singular at this day to imagine even the existence of such a governmental board; but it flourished in times when there was no public debt, and when the only resource for an overburdened Treasury was a division of surplus money among the States. Naturally, it became the object of criticism, precisely as any such board will become. In fact, the very multiplicity of minor details to which it gave its attention eventually caused it to be a clog to the easy working of the service, so that it fell under the aggregated weight of its own minute and manifold labors.

In the year 1842 the board was abolished, and the bureau system took its place. There is little question that the latter was called for, but experience under both might have spared the old board from utter extinction, and simply have distributed its routine details to bureaus. Twenty years later, when the war had broken out, and every nerve was strained to improvise a great Navy, the bureau system was enlarged and changed to meet the new conditions, and, as with most things so magnified, its defects became apparent. However, at that time, unstinted appropriations furnished means for repairing all wastes and blunders, and there was little time for criticising, and even less disposition to do so, when the Navy proved almost uniformly successful and of enormous value. The Secretary, also, was then fortunate in possessing as his assistant Mr. G. V. FOX, a man of extraordinary executive ability, who triumphed over many defects of system. But before the war had ended, and notably as soon as it was ended, the revelations of mismanagement became shocking. Wretched models, rotten hulls, worthless materials, incorrect dimensions and calculations, and tons upon tons of costly machinery only fit for the scrap-heap, to which a good part of it went, told year after year of the defective policy. Meanwhile, successive Secretaries were found to be depending for advice on persons outside the Navy concerning technical details. If the bureau chief immediately concerned could work in with these extra-naval counselors, something was gained for harmony, if not always for economy and integrity. But when in some cases it turned out that these advisers were contractors, or politicians playing into the hands of contractors, the degree of evil and scandal may be imagined—or, rather, may be remembered.

It is now generally admitted that the Navy must be reconstructed. Accordingly, this is the time to revise the system of reconstruction, and, first of all, to settle upon the authorities to whom it shall be intrusted, and who shall be held responsible for it. Of course, it would be easy to criticise what is the matter of first importance, namely, the composition of the proposed board. Here, however, the discussion trenches upon a difficult and sensitive point, namely, the relative representation of the line and the staff on the board. The plan actually agreed upon is the selection of the five chiefs of bureaus, who, of course, are to be first, and making the other five members to consist of "two line officers on the active list not below the rank of Captain," with three other persons, either civilians or active or retired naval officers—one, an expert in steam engineering; a second, in naval construction; a third, in ordnance. These five are to be appointed by the President, with the consent of the Senate, for their wide-reaching and important duties.

If these appointments should be properly made, the Board of Naval Assistants would apparently be one in which the Navy and the country could have confidence. The scope for mistakes of judgment is certainly more contracted than in the case of the British Admiralty Board, which consists of two Admirals, a Captain, and two members of Parliament. It may be suggested that as the Board of Assistants would be twice as large as the Admiralty Board, it would also be open to a possibly hampering diversity of opinion. Still, of our present system the Naval Committee last year said: "There is, and can be, no head to the bureau system; it is not, and never will be, a unit, acting harmoniously for the best good of the Navy." What the Board of Assistants, properly constituted, should bring to their work is, first, honesty; second, experience; third, intelligence and sound professional judgment. All these would find abundant scope for operation.

People who have faith in the published theories and opinions of physicians must be kept, one might think, in perpetual alarm about their health. They are very apt to learn every few weeks that something they have been doing or eating regularly, under the impression that it is very wholesome, is just the contrary; that the thing, whatever it be, cannot be continued without serious, perhaps fatal, consequences. Articles of food that have been esteemed very healthful are pronounced a fertile cause of disease, and are to be shunned as deadly. The latest alleged discovery of this kind is that the unoffending potato begets diphtheria. Several physicians of some local repute in the West have endeavored to sustain this theory, showing, however, more ingenuity than judgment thereby. All that is clearly shown is that some persons who eat potatoes have diphtheria, which is credible enough, since everybody eats potatoes. Some time ago it was claimed, on medical authority, that tomatoes generate cancer, and it has been asserted that grapes beget rheumatism. We can hardly think of any sort of diet which has not been declared very injurious some time by somebody. We expect every day to hear that fresh air is poisonous; that regular exercise is debilitating; that frequent change of linen does incalculable harm. According to physicians, taken as a body, nothing is quite safe. One tells you that to be entirely healthy you must pursue this course; another tells you that just such a course will destroy you. Among such a multiplicity of contradictory counselors the best rule is to listen to all, and obey your own common sense.

The project proposed some time since in Great Britain by leading Jews of the country to buy Palestine is said to have been completed. The ROTHSCHILDS, MONTEFIORES, and other prominent and wealthy financiers have entire confidence, it is reported, in the success of the undertaking, and are moving energetically toward its early achievement. The Secretary of the association formed for the purpose, who is, by the by, a Christian in creed, says that the Jews of the whole world seem to be in sympathy with the plan, and will do their utmost, individually and collectively, to further it. Those familiar with Palestine will not regard it as specially desirable, for its main features are not very attractive. It is not an extensive country—not more than 145 miles long and 45 miles broad, on an average—and ought to be bought cheap. The plain of Philistia is its best part, the soil being of rich brown loam, without a stone. It is now, as it has always been, a vast grain-field—an ocean of wheat without a break or fence. Its extraordinary fertility is shown by the fact that it has produced the same succession of crops year after year for 40 centuries without artificial aid. Many tourists have such numberless associations with Palestine that they have idealized it prodigiously; but to a man who views it without bias it is a dreary, disagreeable land, its undulating surface, rounded hills separated by narrow glens, and its crevasses striking the eye monotonously and unpleasantly. So much has been said for generations of the Jews regaining possession of Jerusalem, that it is agreeable to think that they are likely to do so at last. They certainly deserve Jerusalem.

Americans are apt to think that they are recognized everywhere abroad, as they easily may be, by their pronounced and well-nigh unmistakable traits. Their opinion is correct, too, so far as most beaten routes of travel and many of the large cities are concerned. But in not a few of these the American is likely to be confounded with the Englishman, who stands for any and all who speak the English tongue. In Rimini, Cesena, Forli, Bergamo, Urbino, Velletri, Volterra, and other Italian towns, every American is presumed to be an Englishman, if his race be known at all. So it is in out-of-the-way places in Germany and Austria and in various quarters of the East. But at any number of villages, and even in considerable towns off direct lines in France, Spain, Russia, and the Levant, neither America nor Americans have ever been heard of. Where they have been heard of nothing is known, often, of their form of government, their history, customs, or language, which is likely to be thought Spanish. The average Continental European is prone to regard the United States and all North and South America as the same, without any notion of their extent. He is prone to consider Boston an outlying suburb of Buenos Ayres; the City of Mexico as a ward of New-York; Rio and Philadelphia on opposite sides of some river; Vera Cruz the capital of Milwaukee, and Chicago and Quito in the same county. It doubtless strikes the stay-at-home American as very queer that any foreigner should never have learned of the existence of the United States, but when he goes abroad he will find that but a small portion of the globe is acquainted with his habitat.

Prices at hotels in our large cities are generally, considering their accommodations, such as few reasonable men should object to, although the many have to pay at houses on the American plan for a good deal which the few get and they do not want. One charge, however, made at all the hotels—the charge for fires—is undeniably disproportioned to other rates, and may, indeed, be called exorbitant. The usual price, to transient customers, is $1 a day. A ton of coal sells ordinarily for about $5, and a bushel—there are about 100 bushels to a ton—commonly suffices for an average daily fire, making the material for the fire cost but 5 cents. Then the manner of managing, or mismanaging, fires at most hotels is as peculiar as it is unsatisfactory. The occupant of a room, having neither poker nor coal at hand, is forced to ring his bell more than once when he wants the fire replenished or improved. Generally, it takes time and taxes patience to get the fireman again; and, if the occupant be a bachelor or alone, and ordinarily irritable, he grows disgusted, and goes off. When he returns the fire is out, and he is not apt to make any effort toward its rekindling. But he pays his dollar precisely as though he had had a good fire all day and far into the night. As a rule, men who have rooms alone at an inn do not have fires six hours a day. Some of the hotels charge transient people only 75 cents, and many reduce the rate to 50 cents daily for regulars; but even this rate is so much dearer than it should be that we wonder it is not abated.

The official permission to marry given by the Old Catholics, led by Dr. DOLLINGER, to their priests, is accompanied with such restrictions as must be rather ungrateful to the class to whom it has been graciously extended. The Bishop must first be consulted respecting the fitness of the woman selected for connubial honors by the ecclesiastic; and, secondly, she must, it is alleged, please the majority of the congregation over which he presides. This would seem to amount to an insurmountable obstacle—to be granting a permission that cannot be made valid. We have no definite knowledge of the quality of the Old Catholic congregations; but if they resemble the majority of congregations of other churches, the feminine members can never be induced to approve of the woman the priest has elected, unless she be very plain and wholly unattractive. In order to gain their suffrages, she must be devoid of all grace of person, mind, or manner; for very pious women are prone, as a rule, to such a prejudice in favor of, and to such a spiritu-sentimental admiration for, their Pastor that they would not be willing he should marry any one but themselves. Then, the need of the approbation of the Bishop is very awkward. Hardly any man can see with the eyes of a lover, who is presumed to be either blind or supremely biased. The priest may think his sweetheart fit for a wife, but his superior will hold, in all likelihood, a different opinion. On the whole, the priestly permission to marry appears to be little more than nominal.

Dr. J. J. N. PELDFOUECK, who died recently at Madison, Ind., without attracting any notice, was a French exile, and had lived there for many years. He had been a friend and associate of VICTOR HUGO and men of his stamp; he was an ardent lover of freedom and a firm believer in republicanism, not for his native land alone, but for the whole civilized globe. He took active and prominent part in the revolution of 1848; lost an arm while commanding one of the barricades of Paris, and carried to the grave a deep scar from a wound received about the same time. He was bitterly hostile to LOUIS NAPOLEON from the beginning; opposed, along with LAMARTINE, ARAGO, and other Liberals, every advance of the usurper toward supreme power, and fled from France at the date of the coup d'état, feeling that he would be marked for vengeance. He refused to return to France, as he might have done afterward, during the Empire; but following its overthrow he resolved to go back. Poverty, illness, and age interfered, though he still meditated returning up to the last hour. He had been wealthy and a noted physician at home; but he left property and practice behind him when he sought voluntary exile. He was well known in Madison by his tall, erect figure, striking face, long gray hair and whiskers, and martial bearing. He was about 70, and, unlike most of his compatriots, he seldom if ever spoke of himself, though voluble and eloquent on the subject of France and French politics.

A TRIBUTE TO THE BLACK MAN.

WHAT A DEMOCRATIC PAPER SAYS—BEAUFORT COUNTY AS PROSPEROUS AS ANY IN SOUTH CAROLINA, NOTWITHSTANDING ITS COLORED MAJORITY—SMALLS' GREAT INFLUENCE WITH HIS RACE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The following tribute to the black men of Beaufort County, South Carolina, from a recent issue of the Beaufort Tribune, a Democratic journal, refutes the slanders upon that class of citizens which are constantly put forth by Democratic newspapers in the South and Democratic orators in the North. In a leading editorial the Tribune says:

"With all the prejudice that exists toward Beaufort County and its acknowledged negro majority and alleged negro domination, we defy comparison with any other county in the State for the comparative prosperity of its laboring population, and for the quietness and law-abiding character of its citizens. If even the argument against the possibility of the two races being able to abide together peacefully needs to be refuted, it is only necessary to consider the conditions in which the colored and white dwell here together, not only in unity, but with harmoniousness and accord. There is an undoubted majority in this county of 10 colored to 1 white, and so far from an antagonism existing between the two races, we assert with perfect sincerity, and with a degree of pride, that the mutual relation between the two are as distinctly preserved as if the white, instead of the colored race were in the preponderancy. The only oppression, if any, is in the absorption by the colored of most of the offices of profit and trust that are dependent upon the popular vote; but we feel certain that even that cause of complaint might be covered if the same rule was not observed by the white inhabitants of other counties enjoying like advantages where the white and colored voters are more equally divided or where the white predominates. We think we are correct in asserting our belief that the most influential leaders among the blacks were in favor during the last campaign of putting forward better tickets for the support of all classes than were unfortunately foisted upon them. We believe that Smalls, who is certainly the most influential black man in the Republican Party of the State to-day, advocated a generous and discriminative one to be made of better elements than were put forward for the popular support. We think that but for the uncertain conditions that rested upon his case before the Supreme Court, whereby his active exertions were to bring about a better state of things were kept in abeyance, he would have dictated terms of distribution of some of the important county offices as would have satisfied the most unconciliatory and promising of both races and of both political parties. There is no use disguising the fact that Smalls' influence among his race and people is overwhelming and could be made good use of. In our estimation he is not a bitter or violent party leader, and could be arrayed upon the side of good government with the slightest encouragement, and with the least countenance from his political opposers. Whatever of justice there may be in the conduct of his trial, which resulted in his condemnation, we can see no reason for withholding from him the same chances of condoning his offenses as have been granted to others by a magnanimous exercise of clemency and mercy. We do not propose to be his apologist, but we do think that it might be a wise and considerate policy to let up upon him, in view of his enforced retirement from public life. He will ever be a prophet among his race; need he be made a martyr, too? But we have digressed, we started out to say and we can prove that we compare favorably with other counties in material pro-perity. Our laboring population, composed almost entirely of negroes, are peaceful, quiet, orderly, and very prosperous. Among our agricultural population we assert that they are less addicted to drunkenness and crime than the rural population of other counties. They are industrious and are producing a surplus for export upon less outlay and at less expense and under greater disadvantages than any similar population in this or any other part of the State. They have no advances made to them by capital and they produce a sufficiency of the raw material to equal the demand. They work to disadvantage, but they nevertheless are producers of no mean amount of what brings money into circulation and add their share to the productive industries of the country. We think that the negro population of our Sea Islands are as hard working, as civil, as orderly a class as are to be found in any land and as long as they are as productively useful as they now are, we see no reason why they should not have some representation in our Legislatures. It is only unfortunate that the people do not address themselves to the task of so conciliating their political prejudices as would cause them to fuse in better elements to give force and character to the representation they should concentrate upon instead of being the dupes of loud mouthed and incompetent members of their own race, simply because they are black. We believe that our staesmen have been guilty of shortsightedness in not compromising with their prejudices, and in not endeavoring to overcome them instead of embittering them."

AMUSEMENTS.

THE SUNDAY CONCERT AT BOOTH'S.

Mr. Strakosch's concert at Booth's Theatre last evening only drew a fairly good audience as to numbers, but what they lacked in this respect they made up in enthusiasm. The principal attractions of the evening were Mme. Teresa Carreno and M. Reményi as instrumentalists, and the vocalists were Señorita Gallmberti, Miss Giulia Mario, and Signor Lazarini. The singing was not worthy of special mention, for it did not rise above the level of the commonplace at any time during the evening. Mme. Carreno achieved a success and was twice deservedly encored. She played for her first selections a minuet arranged by Dulcken and Rubinstein's transcription of the march from Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens," and later in the evening Liszt's familiar "Rhapsodie Hongroise," No. 2. She gave these compositions with the finish and grace of a thorough artist, and her performance elicited the genuine applause which positive merit is pretty certain to command. Mme. Carreno responded to the recalls she received, notwithstanding the fatigue of the long

NEW-YORK'S GREAT PERIL.

THE WORST BUILT CITY IN THE WORLD.

LESSONS OF THE RECENT LARGE FIRES—THE SORT OF BUILDINGS THAT ARE PUT UP NOWADAYS — A TALK WITH UNDERWRITER HARRISON AND OTHER AUTHORITIES—WHAT AN OLD FIREMAN SAYS.

The recent large fires, which could not be got under control until they had entirely destroyed the buildings in which they originated, have given rise to question as to the character of the construction of the business buildings in New-York. Were these buildings constructed to withstand fire, or were they very generally so built as to offer every facility to the flames, and to baffle all efforts of a fire department whose efficiency nobody will dispute? That is a question of direct interest to every business man. The answers to it, obtained by a TIMES reporter, agree, without exception, in condemning the condition of the thousands of buildings which contain stock valued at many hundreds of millions of dollars. "This is the worst-built City in the world, startling as the statement may sound," said Mr. James W. Harrison, Chief of the Board of Fire Underwriters, and a gentleman thoroughly acquainted with the character of the City's buildings. "It actually frightens me when I look over my lists and see what miles of fire-traps we possess. It has only been through God's providence, as it seems to me, that the City has not been burned out half a dozen times over. We will not learn by experience. The buildings that are regarded as fine, substantial buildings go down like a flash, one after another, but what man about to build changes his plans any on that account? Sometimes I think the people who build are crazy in their recklessness and disregard of every principle of safety. It is wild to talk of fire-proof buildings in New-York. Count a few buildings out, and there are no structures left to which that term can be applied even relatively. How can there be any security where there are rows of great buildings with party-walls merely, built by contract, all show and sham? Go where you will, party-walls are the rule, not the exception. Our people seem to have an idea that the larger the building, the cheaper they can get it, and the more display they can make, the more they can accomplish. This being so, of course the proprietors of buildings aim to meet the demands of tenants, and the result is what can be seen by walking through any of the down-town streets where the vast trade of the City is done. Capitalists are not responsible for this state of things. When a man can save money by putting up an unsafe building, he is going to do it if there is no law to stop him. The laws are wholly responsible. The builder puts his money in a showy exterior, and heeds little what the material is which is to be hidden from sight. The law must prevent him from doing this. But what poor laws we have are not carried out. There is a law, for instance, which says that no building shall be of greater span than 75 feet without a partition wall. Yet, look at the building on Crosby-street, just above the scene of the recent fire. There is a span of 100 feet without any wall as required. After the great fire of December, 1835," Mr. Harrison continued, "capitalists were really awakened to the necessity of more substantial buildings. They put up a class of buildings considered fire-proof, as things were then understood, and those buildings, on the site of the great fire, are to-day the safest buildings in the City, because they are low, easily reached, and have independent walls. True, many of these are old and dilapidated now, but they were solid and substantial as buildings were regarded in their day. The more modern structures, as a rule, have tended toward the dangerous and unsubstantial. Building has steadily retrograded, with a few notable exceptions, instead of progressing. This is not from any lack of talent. We have the best architects in the world, but they are helpless. Next to the poor laws, and the failure to enforce even these, comes the evil of the contract system. Suppose a capitalist has a piece of ground 100 by 200 feet, which he wishes to cover with a building that will make a showy store and rent well. He gets from the architect plans which, if strictly carried out, would result in the production of a good, sound structure, more than moderately safe. But the plans are not carried out. The capitalist advertises for contracts. One builder offers to put up the building according to the plans for $175,000, say, or about the sum the architect estimated that the building should cost. Another contractor offers to do the work for $130,000, and still a third for $100,000. I have known many cases where the difference in the bids was fully one-half of the entire amount. The result is easy to forecast. The capitalist says to himself that if he can get his building erected in showy style and to the plans indicate, for half the money estimated by the architect as requisite, the tenant will never know the difference, and a large sum will be left free for other investments. The contractor must and must save himself somewhere, and does it by using inferior material for the walls. Thus the new building is rotten precisely where it should be, and appears to be, strong. Any business man of ordinary intelligence must know that where there is an extraordinary a difference in the bids of the contractors there is also dishonesty somewhere. As a member of the School Board, I have seen the evils of the contract system daily. In that case the law compels the award to the lowest bidder, and contracts have been given under that law when it was certain that the City was to be swindled."

Speaking of the buildings that were burned in Worth-street, Mr. Harrison said they were perhaps fairly representative of the general run of the buildings in that district, although there were less showy structures through White, Walker, Franklin, and other streets, which were of somewhat better character. None of the buildings, however, could be classed as safe or anything like fire-proof, and a fire once well under way, with a wind to help it along, would be absolutely unconfinable. We have stood the best fire department in the land, but no fire department could cope with a fire that got a good start in New-York. This fact the merchants generally understood, and by all the modern appliances endeavored to guard against the start of a fire. The modern appliances, as in the case of the buildings just destroyed, proved of little avail. They never did anything except swell the rates of insurance.

As an interesting fact in connection with the history of these buildings, and interesting further in showing how recklessly the builders proceed in their work, Mr. Harrison said that when he began to make his insurance reserves of New-York, he found that these showy structures had what was termed a half-mansard roof. That is, the builders had carried up an additional story without partitions, the walls such as divided the buildings on the lower floors, but with mere plaster partitions. Had not this defect been discovered and remedied, the fire of Friday night would have had full sweep through the attic, and the firemen would have found themselves driven from the field. Just such carelessness and disregard of the elevator shafts, which are most potent in spreading the flames, to be trapped. There are several simple and inexpensive methods for doing this and shutting off the draft. A valuable suggestion, in my opinion, is that of laying floors of solid wood six inches thick; in other words, a floor of beams smoothed on the upper side. This would not cost more than a brick floor, would do away with the necessity for partition walls to a great extent, and would baffle fire for a long time. There is one further point to which public attention ought to be directed at once. Through Fourteenth, Twenty-third, and the other up-town streets where the retail trade is establishing itself, many dwelling-houses are being built over into stores. The builders leave the old, thin, party walls, hardly substantial enough for dwellings, build on at the rear, put up a fancy front, and stuff the buildings full of inflammable merchandise. If we do not have a roaring blaze at no distant day as a result, I will lose my guess. The laws which allow this are all wrong. Why, let such a thing be tried in Paris, and see how quick the offenders would be brought up for it. It is simply astonishing that such reckless things can be done. I can only say that when I began my study of the buildings of New-York in detail, six years ago, I was positively frightened to discover what kind of a fire-trap City we live in, with four and a half miles of almost continuous framework along Water-street on the outside, and with square after square of buildings within not much better able to stand flame."

Mr. Leopold Eidlitz, the architect, who has for 30 years or more watched the progress of building in this City, said that the buildings in New-York deserving to rank as fire-proof, could be counted on a man's fingers. One reason was the shallow pretense that fire-proof buildings cost too much. The question was made one of expense, whereas, no such objection was raised when money was consumed in show. "The buildings just burned in Worth-street are a fair example of the modern idea in building," said Mr. Eidlitz. "They were built with a view to a showy exterior, an exterior cast in iron to represent marble—an imitation in cheap material. Any amount necessary to the display was given readily, but the owner could not afford to make the structure safe. It seems, however, that if builders are too poor to erect a fire-proof building, they certainly are too poor to erect a building that is not fire-proof. The idea prevails that a building which is in itself weak and unsafe can be protected by fire facilities. This is an utter mistake. Nothing can atone for the lack of good, solid brick walls and arches. A store that is built of brick, with iron beams and brick arches, is not fire-proof when filled with inflammable goods; yet how many of our stores fulfill those conditions, even! As for the cast-iron fronts, they ought not to be tolerated. A more objectionable feature could not well have been introduced into building than this use of cast-iron. There seems to be an opinion that when a building has iron beams and an iron front it is safe. In fact, it could not be more unsafe. No sooner does the heat become intense than the iron front and beams and columns buckle, and the building is in ruins. The only way to make iron beams useful is to cover them with interior arches. Iron fronts can never be made unobjectionable, while they cost more than handsome brick ones. Wooden floors have no place in business buildings filled with inflammable goods. Then there are ventilating flues which do not ventilate, but which vie with the elevator shafts as draughts for fires. Spaces made by 'furring' the walls are left unfilled, and these aid in carrying flames from floor to floor. At the fire firemen have been surprised at the rise of a fire from a lower story to the roof when there was no apparent means of its propagation. Any one familiar with the building of the establishments could have explained the secret passages serving as vents. The only way to remove the danger of elevator shafts, in my opinion, is to build these outside the main structure, giving them outside windows to draw the fire away from the building, not into it, as the present shafts do."

Mr. Eidlitz was equally radical with Mr. Harrison in his opinion of the City's buildings. He did not believe that a fire, obtaining headway on a floor of any one of the great commercial buildings, could be checked by any possibility. The building was doomed, no matter how efficient the Fire Department. There was no chance to compete with flames. It was instructive to note the difference between the buildings of this City and those of any European city. Here there was far more exterior treatment than in any other part of the world, but the interiors were a sham; while in Europe the interior was the part looked after. He did not believe in the claim that more light was wanted, a claim that had produced the buildings with large windows. These windows had to be covered with shades to keep out the light, and there was never need on such pretext to give up the room required for good, sound brick or stone piers. The tendency of building was not toward improvement. The interest of the owner was to erect a building that would rent well, and this he did without regard to safety, without caring whether the insurance rates would be high, apparently without any special consideration of the subject. It seemed as though many of the insurance companies had a tacit interest in this class of buildings, since they insured them at rates out of all proportion to the actual risk. Were the buildings what they ought to be, and the insurance premiums on a low basis, some companies might lose their showy business, and hence prefer the present condition. Mr. Eidlitz thought the only remedy lay in the passage of stringent building laws. No more shells ought to be put up in New-York. The fire laws of Paris, Vienna, Berlin, and other foreign cities required all blocks to have an interior court accessible to fire engines. The areas were not so extensive, and there was every protection of stout partition walls. Here the buildings were not only not accessible courts, but were filled with wooden matter, which served as kindling-wood for a fire. There should be in every block one or two independent partition walls capable to resist the progress of flames. As it was, the walls were thin, and outside walls were often so weak that they could not stand alone, and were supported by the beams. These were of iron, and when the fire contracted them, of course the whole structure fell in a heap. As an instance of the loose method of building, Mr. Eidlitz cited the case of a builder who put in iron beams and brick arches, and thinking they were not strong enough, used wooden partitions, and "furred" out the walls with wood, thus rendering his building peculiarly liable to destruction. The City was full of weak and dangerous buildings, but repeated warnings and disasters had apparently little or no effect in the way of improvement.

"This is a fast age. Perhaps it's not original to say, but we live fast, die fast, build fast, and burn fast—that's the truth of it." That was the answer to the first question put by a TIMES reporter to a veteran fireman, a member of the old Volunteer Fire Department in its palmy days, a faithful servant later on in the paid department, and a man who has taken active interest in every important fire that has occurred in New-York within 25 years. It was evident that this veteran had a poor opinion of the men who built the City. He knew, both by experience and by observation, what the character was of the numerous buildings which he had seen destroyed, and he judged that the majority of those standing were no more safely or strongly constructed than were those crumbled into ruins. The veteran gave it as the opinion of the experts in the Fire Department, without exception, that when a fire got started among the pine goods in the cellars of the buildings of large area, say of over 40 feet front, there was no chance to save the building, and the efforts were all directed to confining the fire to that building. All the modern contrivances of skylights, light shafts, elevator shafts, ventilators, and holes, hollow columns, &c., added to Georgia pine floors, were too much for any fire department. The great heights of the buildings, and the difficulty of gaining access to the upper floors and roofs, were further points of difficulty. The firemen would rather deal with the older buildings than the new ones, and felt all right when they were called for a solid brick building. Of these, however, there were few. As the veteran forcibly expressed it, the new iron buildings were nothing but "forests of timber with a tight jacket of iron, which shut the fire in and the firemen out." As an incident of the recent fire in Worth-street, he said the adjoining buildings were found to be without access to the upper floors except by the elevator, the stairways having been floored over. Thus the firemen were kept from reaching the roof, and this was only one of many such experiences. No city offers such difficulties to the firemen and such easy chance to the flames, said the veteran, as the result of his quarter of a century of experience.

PRINCETON STUDENTS ARRESTED.

TRENTON, Jan. 19.—Twenty-four Princeton students, who had been making Saturday night hideous in this city, by going about the streets insulting ladies and using offensive and indecent language, were arrested by the Police this morning between 1 and 2 o'clock. They were making their escape in two sleighs, and attempted to brain one of the officers with a whisky bottle as he seized the lines of the horses attached to the leading sleigh. They were taken to the City Jail and locked up. Their friends were informed of the fact, and through their intercession Police Justice Swing held court at 2 A. M. and liberated the gang upon each paying a fine and costs of court, amounting to $3 85. They were warned that a fine would not be accepted another time, but that the punishment would be a committal to the County Jail for 30 days. For some time past the students have invaded Trenton at night, and acted in such a disorderly manner as to be the subject of complaint.

A BROOKLYN CLERGYMAN'S CALL.

NEWPORT, Jan. 19.—Rev. Henry J. Van Dyke, Jr., of Brooklyn, N. Y., has accepted a call from the United Congregational Church of this city. He will be ordained and enter upon his duties here early next month.

THROWN FROM A SLEIGH AND KILLED.

Mrs. Mary Graham, aged 43, wife of John Graham, of No. 252 Sheriff-street, was out sleighing with her husband yesterday. During the trip the sleigh was overturned and Mrs. Graham was thrown out. She did not appear to have received any injury, nor did she complain of pain. Soon after her return home, however, and while seated at the supper table last evening, she suddenly fell back in her chair and expired. It is supposed that death was the result of some internal injury caused by being thrown from the sleigh. An inquest will be held to-day.

OBITUARY NOTES.

Dr. John B. Biddle, Dean of Jefferson College, a well-known physician and a medical author of some repute, died in Philadelphia yesterday.

Joseph C. Grubb, a member of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, died at his residence, in Wilmington, yesterday morning, after a lingering illness.

THE EARLY VEGETABLES.

WHERE NEW-YORK'S SUPPLY COMES FROM.

THE WONDERFUL VARIETY AND ABUNDANCE OF THE MARKETS—PRICES WHICH SOME BRING—LUXURIES OF WEALTHY PALATES.

That there are no markets in the world equal to the markets of this City is a favorite boast of New-Yorkers. That the market buildings are not referred to in making this boast is evident to any one getting a glimpse of the ancient barn-like structures dignified by the names of Washington and Fulton Markets; but that the wonderful variety and abundance of the food products of half the world which are displayed in these forlorn looking buildings are what the boast refers to is at once evident to any one who makes a tour through them. The quantity of meat will surprise him, but the variety of fruits and vegetables will astonish him still more. At all seasons he will find a variety of vegetables unknown to any other market in the world, and find them, too, months in advance of their regular seasons, for the people of this City will have and are willing to pay for rare vegetables, just as they seek after the rarest fruits, flowers, and a hundred other luxuries.

Of the early vegetables which reach the New-York markets some of the very first to arrive do not come from the far South, as one would naturally suppose, but from the far North. Rhubarb, the first of the vegetables, is sent here in January from the farm of Col. Rhodes, near Quebec. There it is raised in dark galleries 20 feet under ground, and heated by steam. The rhubarb grown in these galleries is very large, very tender, and almost white. For shipment, each stalk is carefully wrapped in soft paper, and they are put up in bunches weighing two and one-half pounds. In this market it can only be procured in one stand, and there it sells for $3 per dozen bunches. By the 1st of March rhubarb comes in from Jamaica, Long Island, that brings $1 50 per bunch. Many of the Brussels' sprouts now in the market also come from Canada, the remainder being from Shelter Island. Cucumbers, of which the delicate little white pine variety came to this market from Boston as early as the 10th of last month, sold here for $6 per dozen at wholesale. They now bring half that price. This year, for the first time, a few very early cucumbers were sent in from Gravesend, Long Island, but they were so inferior to the White Pines that they only brought $3 50 per dozen. By the middle of next month the long Worcester cucumbers from Worcester, Mass., will be in the market, and will bring $3 50 per dozen. For 15 years New-York has received its finest lettuce, or salad, as the marketmen call it, from Boston, and, for the last three days, there has not been a head of Boston lettuce in the market, the first time such a thing has happened since the supply began to come from that quarter. The Boston lettuce is very white, crisp, and well-headed, and market gardeners in other parts of the country try in vain to imitate it. A few years ago a Jamaica, Long Island, gardener sent to Boston for men who knew the business and told them to raise Boston lettuce on his farm at any expense of money or time they tried, but without success. Radishes are now in the market six to and sell at from $3 to $5 per 100 bunches, eight being in a bunch. Formerly, all the radishes, long and round, came from Boston, but during the past few years New-Jersey has been sending in round radishes, until now Boston sends on only a few of the long and more delicate variety. Tomatoes were in the market the 15th of last November, but the demand for them was very slight. The first this season came from Nassau, wrapped in soft paper, and packed in crates. The Bermuda tomatoes will begin arriving early in February. Bermuda potatoes will be here next week, but they will be old crop potatoes, and will sell for $5 to $7 per barrel. The new Bermuda potatoes will arrive by the 1st of March, and will be worth $2 per barrel more than the early Jersey. As high as $17 per barrel has been paid in Washington Market for the first new Bermuda potatoes.

Onions come in from Bermuda with the potatoes, and sell for $2 per crate. Fancy prices are also sometimes paid for these, and $10 per crate was paid last year for the very first in the market. Bermuda beets will arrive about the last of February, and will retail at from 5 to 10 cents apiece. Bermuda forms only cucumbers to this City, but they were always yellow and old by the time they reached here, and none will come this year. Last year, the first asparagus came to this City from South Carolina, in February, and this season the same firm will probably have it as early this year; but, generally, the first comes from Florida early in March. Shipments then arrive from Savannah, Charleston, Norfolk, Baltimore, New-Jersey, Long Island, and Southern New-York, whence it is sent in about the 1st of May. The earliest asparagus sells at $1 15 per bunch, and the first Oyster Bay "grass," which is the finest of all, always sells for $1 per bunch. By the 1st of June it is in abundance and sells for 75 cents per dozen bunches. Last year a few boxes were sent down from Canada, but the experiment was a failure. A few peas were sent in this market from the New-Orleans three weeks ago, but there was no demand for them. The regular supply will begin to arrive next week from Lake City, Fla., and will bring about $10 per crate. These crates nominally hold a bushel, but are thinking fine if they hold enough, used wooden partitions, and "furred" out the walls with wood, thus rendering his building peculiarly liable to destruction. The City was full of weak and dangerous buildings, but repeated warnings and disasters had apparently little or no effect in the way of improvement.

"This is a fast age. Perhaps it's not original to say, but we live fast, die fast, build fast, and burn fast—that's the truth of it." men, and the like. Some of them drove horses that would have excited the sympathies of Mr. Henry Bergh—lean, rough-coated creatures, alike innocent of speed and spirit. These were not the rule, however, for high-bred spirited teams could be counted by scores in the midst of the long procession.

AN OLD POLITICIAN DYING.

EX-SHERIFF BRENNAN'S ILLNESS—THE STORY OF HIS LIFE.

Ex-Sheriff Matthew T. Brennan, who has been lying dangerously ill at his residence, on the Boulevard, was reported as very low late last night, and Dr. Raborg, who has been his medical attendant, telegraphed to Police Head-quarters that Mr. Brennan would probably die before morning. Mr. Brennan was the product of an era in New-York politics so entirely of the past that it seems like ancient history. Born in the First Ward, of poor Irish parents, his education was confined to the elementary branches taught in the common schools, and in early youth he was apprenticed to the trade of molder. While yet a boy, and notwithstanding the malformation of a foot, he became noted as a fireman in the old Volunteer Department, and soon became Foreman of Engine No. 21. As in many another case in those days, his service as a fireman was the stepping-stone to political preferment. His first official position was that of Assessor of the Sixth Ward. While holding this place he secured the friendship of Thomas J. Barr, then an Alderman, and many years afterward, through Brennan's influence, a Police Commissioner, and was appointed Captain of the Sixth Ward Police. He was so active, earnest, and zealous in the discharge of his duties in this position that in 1854, when preferment was for merit, he was elected Police Justice for the Second District, then composed of the Fourth, Sixth, and Fourteenth Wards. He held this place for a number of years, and in 1863 was elected Controller on the Democratic ticket. He earned the gratitude of the people during his term of office by firmly refusing to obey a resolution of the Common Council directing him as Controller to issue fractional currency in the name of the City. In 1868 he was appointed a Police Commissioner, and while holding this office, obtained the Tammany nomination for Sheriff, to which office he was elected in November, 1870. During his term as Sheriff came the exposé of the Tammany Ring, and it became his duty to be the jailer of many of his former political associates, including William M. Tweed and Henry W. Genet. It is not yet forgotten how the latter escaped from the custody of one of his deputies, and that, as a consequence, Mr. Brennan was arrested for dereliction of duty and imprisoned for 30 days in Ludlow-Street Jail. This was a severe blow to him, and he felt the stigma keenly. It was long supposed that he had amassed a great fortune during his political career, but it has of late become known that he retired to private life with hardly a competence, and even some of that has been swallowed up by unfortunate speculations in real estate.

A BANK OFFICER IN JAIL.

JOHN HALLIARD'S PROBABLE ARRAIGNMENT IN COURT TO-DAY.

John Halliard, one of the indicted officers of the Mechanics' and Laborers' Savings Bank, of Jersey City, who was placed in the Hudson County Jail in default of bail on Saturday, remained there yesterday. He will probably be arraigned this morning on the third of the indictments found against him, which accuses him with having conspired with Thomas C. O'Callaghan, the present President of the bank, and others, to defraud the depositors by concealing the fact of the bank's insolvency. He will be required to give bail in $2,500 on this indictment, making a total of $10,000 of bail in all. Mr. Halliard's arrest on Saturday on a charge of having defrauded Father Timothy out of $1,025 seems not to have been effected with a view of pressing the charge. Father Timothy is Father Superior of the monastery at Weehawken, and it was through Mr. Halliard that he effected his insurances on the building. In August last he gave Mr. Halliard $1,925 with which to pay off a mortgage on the monastery, due to the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of this City. Instead of paying off the mortgage he used the money in settling one of his own debts. Father Timothy went before Justice Aldrider several days ago and accused Halliard of having embezzled the money. His offense is a simple breach of trust, and the warrant was sworn out only for the purpose of holding Halliard until a civil suit for the recovery of the money could be begun. Halliard was arrested and put under $2,000 bonds to appear for trial. The civil suit will be commenced to-day, and Mr. Halliard will be placed under bonds to abide its issue.

Mr. Halliard was for many years one of the most highly-esteemed residents of the county. Implicit confidence in his integrity led to carelessness on the part of the bank officers, and finally brought upon the bank the embarrassments which caused its suspension. Three months ago an imputation against his honor would have been regarded as a libel, and bail for any amount might have been procured for him. He was formerly a Methodist, but has since converted to Roman Catholicism by Father Hecker, and became the intimate friend and agent of the clergy of the Newark Diocese. It is said that his purchases for the Roman Catholic Church led to the financial embarrassments which have proved his ruin.

FEDERAL OFFICERS ARRESTED.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY MAYER AND MARSHAL TURNER, OF ALABAMA, HELD FOR CONTEMPT OF A STATE COURT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—Information has been received at the Department of Justice of the arrest, by warrant of State or municipal authority, in Alabama, of United States District Attorney Mayer and United States Marshal Turner, the latter being now in jail and the former having been released on a writ of habeas corpus issued by United States District Judge Bruce. The circumstances are that a municipal or State court in Selma issued subpœnas to District Attorney Mayer, Marshal Turner, and Mr. Dimmock, Clerk of the court, commanding them to appear and bring before it the ballot-boxes and ballots used in the elections of last November. These ballot-boxes and ballots were, at the time in question, being used by the Grand Jury of the United States Circuit Court, sitting at Montgomery, as evidence in certain cases therein, pending the finding of indictments for violations of the Election laws of the United States. The State Court assumed that they were required at Selma for similar uses in certain cases of violation of the State Election laws. The officers made due return to the process served upon them, to the effect that the ballot-boxes and ballots were not in their possession or under their personal control, but were in the custody of the United States Circuit Court. When the process had been thus returned to the State court, the Judge of the latter instantly issued writs of attachment for the bodies of Mayer and Turner, and directed their commitment for contempt. District Attorney Mayer telegraphed to Attorney-General Devens for instructions, and was advised to prepare himself for a release under a writ of habeas corpus in the event of the execution of the threat to arrest him. This he did, and being arrested at Huntsville last Saturday, whither he had gone in attendance on his official duty, he was released on a writ issued by Judge Bruce. But Marshal Turner, who was not thus forearmed, was arrested and committed to jail. At the latest accounts he was in custody, and under the laws of the State regulating commitments for contempt of the State Courts, would remain in confinement for five days, subject to immediate recommitment, as soon as released, for another five days, so long as the contempt rests against him. Meanwhile, the ballot-boxes and ballots remain in possession of the court, and the case in which they are to be used as evidence has been adjourned until April.

METHODIST SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONGRESS.

BUFFALO, Jan. 19.—The eleventh Methodist Episcopal Sunday-school Congress and Anniversary of the Sunday-school Union and Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church is in session here, and will continue until Tuesday. Meetings were held to-night in the Grace and Delaware-Avenue Methodist Episcopal Churches, at which addresses were delivered by Rev. C. H. Payne, D. D., of Delaware, Ohio; Rev. T. L. Flood, editor of the Chautauqua Assembly Herald; Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D., of Plainfield, N. J.; Rev. T. M. Freeman, D. D., of New-York City; Rev. W. Case, of Akron, Ohio; Rev. Dr. Bates, of Wesleyan College, Oberlin, Ohio, and Rev. Dr. Cushing, of New-York City.

MARINE DISASTERS.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 19.—The steam-ship Lord Eslington, Philadelphia for Antwerp, Jan. 14, before reported damaged by ice off Newcastle, Del., has returned for repairs.

The schooner Addiella Corson, from Charleston, reports that she experienced heavy south-west to north-west gales during the entire passage, and lost and split sails.

THE MUTUAL LIFE TROUBLES.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Jan. 19.—The committee provided for by a resolution of the policy-holders in the New-York Mutual Life Insurance Company at the meeting of Friday evening has since been appointed by the Chairman. Its members are George L. Clarke, William S. Slater, and Johathan Chace.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 19.—It is announced here on good authority that the firm of Dodd, Brown & Co. will resume business shortly, arrangements favorable to such action having been made with their creditors.

THE COMMUNIPAW DEPOT.

JERSEY CITY'S BRIDGE PROJECT.

A SCHEME THAT HAS GROWN INTO A POLITICAL ISSUE IN NEW-JERSEY—A DESPERATE TRIAL OF STRENGTH BETWEEN TWO RAILROAD CORPORATIONS.

TRENTON, Jan. 19.—When Jersey City, by an act of consolidation, took all the suburban cities into her arms a few years ago, she acquired control over that part of Lafayette which was, and is yet, known as Communipaw. Communipaw is a narrow neck of land, severed from the lower section of Jersey City by the Morris Canal basin. By its charter, the Morris Canal and Banking Company, now a lessee of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, is obliged to keep open a passage-way, from its basin to the river, 150 feet in width, so as to permit of the passage of river craft. This water-way is much used by the Matthiessen & Weicher Sugar Company, whose refineries stand on the basin at the foot of Washington-street, Jersey City, and by the steel-works, which are situated at points further westward. Communipaw is the home of a few fishermen and of many market gardeners. Its chief claim to distinction lies in the fact that it is the eastern terminus of the New-Jersey Central Railroad.

A few years ago the railroad company began to feel lonesome, and longed for a connection with the main section of Jersey City. Nothing prevented it but the little water-gap owned by the Morris Canal. To fill this in was impracticable for two reasons. First, because it was a work not easy of accomplishment, and in the second place, the clause in the Morris Canal charter commanding that a navigable water-way be kept open prevented it. To bridge over the gap, as the basin is called, was the only practicable scheme that suggested itself. The advantages of a bridge over the Morris Canal basin were at once pointed out to the residents of Jersey City. It followed that Jersey City began to clamor for a bridge over the gap from the foot of Washington-street. They have made in previous years determined efforts to secure legislation to authorize its construction, but they have been as often defeated. This season the demand that a bridge be constructed at Washington-street was renewed with such vigor that it became an issue not only in local, but in State, politics. When, at the Fall elections, the people of Jersey City nominated their Assembymen, they required pledges of them that they would support the Washington-Street bridge project, and the fact that Mr. Speaker Jackson voted last year for the bill was one of the main features of his canvass for the Speakership of the present Assembly.

But though the clamor for the bridge has been especially loud during the last two or three years, the scheme itself cannot be said to be a new one. It is said that the bridging of the gap was in contemplation when Washington-street was first laid out. When the authorities graded the street they neglected to condemn the Morris Canal Company's property for a right of way over the basin. They thought they could take that without compensation to anybody. They discovered their error when they undertook to proceed to the erection of the contemplated bridge. Morris Canal Company applied for an injunction, claiming that the City had made no tender of compensation to the company. It was granted, and on argument the injunction was made perpetual. Most of the legislation stated for the agitation of the project has been designed to devise a method of evading the injunction. Against these bills the Lehigh Valley Company, urging that the construction of the bridge might imperil the lease by the State to the Morris Canal, which is worth $25,000 per year to the State, has been the only visible objector. It is said, however, that that railroad company have positive promises with the Pennsylvania Railroad, which, naturally enough, opposes anything which the competing corporations regard as of advantage to their business. This year it is said that the Central Railroad is not acting in its strength. The Baltimore and Ohio people are declared to have made preparations to make their Eastern terminus at the Communipaw depot, and the struggle for the little span of iron over the gap is really a hand-to-hand encounter between the two great trunk lines of the country. Soon after the organization of the present Legislature, Mr. Dusenberry, of Hudson, introduced a bill by which, it is hoped, the injunction may be set aside and the work begun.

THE WEATHER.

SYNOPSIS AND INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20—1 A. M.—The barometer has risen in the Southern States east of the Mississippi, with colder northerly winds and clear weather, except light rains on the Atlantic coast. The temperature has fallen in the Middle States and New-England, with clear weather and northwesterly winds. Light snows have prevailed in the lake region, with colder westerly winds, and in the western portion falling barometer. The barometer has fallen in the North-west, with clear weather, southerly to westerly winds, and higher temperature. The rivers have risen 5 feet at Pittsburg, 19 inches at Cincinnati, 25 inches at Cairo, 19 inches at Memphis, and 8 inches at Nashville, where it is 10 inches below the danger line. The Tennessee has fallen 3 feet at Chattanooga.

INDICATIONS.

For the Middle States, colder north-west to south-west winds, partly cloudy or clear weather, and rising, followed by falling, barometer. The temperature will rise slowly during Monday night.

For the South Atlantic States, north-west to south-west winds, partly cloudy or clear weather, lower temperature than on Sunday, and rising barometer.

For the Gulf States, clear or partly cloudy weather, slowly rising temperature, falling barometer, and northerly winds, shifting to westerly and southerly.

For Tennessee and the Ohio Valley, partly cloudy weather, with rising temperature, south-east to south-west winds, and falling barometer.

For the lower lake region, westerly to southerly winds, partly cloudy weather, on Monday, with rising, followed by falling barometer, partly cloudy weather, and light snow.

For the upper lake region, slight rise in temperature and partly cloudy weather, with areas of snow and falling barometer.

For the Upper Mississippi and Lower Missouri Valleys, partly cloudy or clear weather, with southerly to westerly winds, falling barometer and stationary or rising temperature.

For New-England, colder northerly to westerly winds, with rising barometer, partly cloudy weather, and, in the northern portions, light snow.

For the Pacific regions, generally clear or fair weather will prevail.

The rivers will change but slightly.

Cautionary off-shore signals continue at Smithville, Wilmington, Macon, Cape Lookout, Cape Hatteras, Kitty Hawk, Cape Henry, Norfolk, Lewes, Cape May, Atlantic City, Barnegat, and Sandy Hook.

IN THIS CITY.

The following record shows the changes in the temperature for the past 24 hours, in comparison with the corresponding date of last year, as indicated by the thermometer at Hudnut's pharmacy:

AN EAST SIDE AFFRAY.

Matthias Kett, a 'longshoreman, residing at No. 64 Goerck-street, entertained several friends at his house last night, and about 11 o'clock started out to escort them to the cars. At Broome and Goerck streets the party found a number of men engaged in a fight. One of Kett's friends took part in the disturbance, and was being roughly handled, when Kett interfered to protect him. Edward Murray, a laborer, of No. 20 Broome-street, one of the brawlers, attacked Kett, and drawing a revolver, fired three shots in quick succession at him. One of the bullets struck Kett on the left side, inflicting a severe flesh wound. Kett then seized Murray, wrenched the pistol from his grasp, and struck him on the head and face with the butt end of the weapon, inflicting several severe scalp wounds. He dragged Murray along Broome-street toward Attorney-street, continuing to strike him, and would probably have beaten him to death but for the opportune arrival of a Police officer, who released Murray and took Kett to the Delancey-Street Police Station. Murray was covered with blood from the wounds on his head, and was almost exhausted from loss of blood. Police Surgeon Fluhrer dressed his wounds, after which he was taken to Bellevue Hospital. The Doctor also examined the pistol-shot wound in Kett's side, but as it was not serious Kett was detained at the station-house.

THE RIVER ICE-GORGES.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 19.—The ice-gorge on the Monongahela River, which had slipped above Greensboro, Penn., from about 15 miles below Morgantown, West Va., began to move at 12:50 o'clock yesterday morning.

The ice in the Monongahela River here began to move about noon to-day, and has been running steadily since. The Allegheny and Youghiogheny Rivers are still closed, and, as it has turned colder, it is not probable that they will break up at present. No damage has been done here, but considerable is reported from up the Monongahela. So far as is known, only one tow-boat—the Dauntless—has been sunk. Twenty-two empty coal barges and three coal tipples have been carried away or destroyed. The river is rising slowly. It has been snowing since 4 o'clock this afternoon.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 19.—The ice blockade in the James River has been broken by the steamers Wyanoke and Old Dominion. The latter steamer arrived here y

TALMAGE FOR THE PLAINTIFF.

PAUL AS A SENSATIONALIST—RELIGION AND SOMNOLENCE COMICALLY CONSIDERED—VISITING THE SLUMS A COMMON PRACTICE AMONG MINISTERS.

On Mr. Talmage's table yesterday was a large cross of camellias, tube roses, roses of various colors, and forget-me-nots, set in a broad, brown wicker base, filled with ferns and smilax. Across its horizontal arm were the words, "Help For All." Mr. Talmage's text was Acts xix. 23: "There arose no small stir about that way." The stir, he said, was made by Paul, who was upsetting everything by his sermons. The people of Ephesus had brought out about $9,000 worth of bad books, and had made a bonfire of them, in answer to his appeals. He had spoiled the business of selling medallions of Diana, and the merchants had held an indignation meeting, and had resolved that this thing must stop. Everybody was wondering what he would do next. Never before, nor since, had there been such a sensation. "What is a sensation?" asked the speaker. "Webster defines it, as an excited state of thought or feeling, and I can't see anything more valuable; but as the word 'conservatism' has been twisted from its noble sense to mean stupid do-nothingism, so the word 'sensation' has been twisted to mean everything erratic and reprehensible. No one ever accomplished any good in Church or State without making a sensation. Sensation is life; stagnation is death. When I am called a sensationalist I take it as a compliment. [Laughter.] I have often wished it were more true. God helping me, I will make it more true. [Applause.] When I was a layman and in the pews, I noticed that religion was associated with dullness. When a Governor is to be nominated or financial questions are to be discussed, the people are all awake; but when Christ is to be crowned or the eternal wealth or pauperization of the soul are the topics, everybody is somnolent. I noticed that there was something radically wrong with the Church. We all remember how, in our boyhood days, we made use of every art to remain awake in church. We ate caraway-seeds [laughter] and cloves, and held one foot up until it was numb, [renewed laughter] and pinched ourselves until we were black and blue, or received a stimulus from a big brother who stuck a pin into us, [great laughter] or a look from an elder sister that made us sink into the ground in shame at our lack of self-abnegation. Then we looked up at the deacon's pew and saw the seven sleepers [roars of laughter] who had lost their hold after the second head, and thought there must still be some chance for us when such good men gave way. [Renewed laughter.] I venture to say that there is more sleeping done in churches than in any other buildings on the face of the earth. [Laughter.] They are the great dormitories of civilization. [Renewed laughter.] Men who are troubled with insomnia at home come to church and enjoy refreshing slumber. What chloral and anodynes cannot do the long sermon and prayer accomplishes. [Laughter.] When the minister crawls on: 'Now, in brief, eighteenthly,' men put their heads down upon the fronts of their pews and pretend to be overcome with emotion, when the truth is they cannot remain awake any longer." [Great laughter.]

Here Mr. Talmage told the familiar story of the sleepy Scotchman who, being advised by his minister from the pulpit to take a pinch of snuff, reported that the snuff would be better in the sermon. This sentiment was received with an astonishing outburst of hand-clapping and stamping of feet that lasted several seconds. The speaker continued: "With all the artillery of heaven at hand, why should not a minister be able to keep his hearers awake? What would be thought of a man at a banquet who should take his watch out every few minutes to see how soon he might stop eating meringue pie? [Laughter.] Yet church services are a banquet of the highest order. I have no patience when I see them all made up of napkin-ring and finger-bowl, with nothing to satisfy the appetites of the guests. I say to young men preparing for the ministry, if you want audiences, make a stir. What do the general public care about the conventionalities of religion or about the sesquipedalian words with which some ministers crawl through the services? They do know, though, that the chief anxiety of such is lest they may look at the wrong place in the notes of their sermons. [Laughter.] They know, too, that had three months' education in his life, will be found to have done more for the race than we whose manifold bands and surplices are not enough to keep us from freezing to death in an ecclesiasticism twenty degrees below zero. [Laughter.]

"I have always tried to avoid explaining to you what I did not understand myself. I believe that there are three persons in one God, and that Christ had a divine and human nature, but I cannot explain how it is, and I won't try to. During the first years of my ministry I did try, but I found the greatest difficulty in the task. Sometimes, when I had finished and was consoling myself with the hope that my hearers understood what I was saying better than I did, some plain man at the foot of the pulpit would ask me a question that would throw me into the greatest confusion, and I would have to tell him, 'I'll see you some other time.' [Great laughter.] There was a great fire in my house the other day. I burned up 500 manuscript sermons. [Laughter.] When I began preaching, I used to write out every word I was going to say, and these were the results. They contained explanations of all the mysteries of religion and of the doctrine of election that were about as clear as a Scotch mist or a San Francisco fog. [Laughter.] But I thought, as they lay in the grate, that there was more warmth in them than ever before. There is nothing in this world so enchanting as religion if we look at it fairly, but if we place it upon the dissecting table and rip its heart out, we make it loathsome and a corpse.

"It has always been my resolution to smite sin, reckless of the consequences. The reason it flourishes is that it is not called by its right name. Ministers should be artillerists, and should let others, provide the ambulances. The reason my sermons make a stir is that they are true. If you fire a stone, at a lot of dogs on a common, which one is it that howls? The one that is hit. [Laughter.] It is a bad sign of the times that so many ministers can be made to shut up. You might as well try to stop the yellow fever by saying nothing about it. When I began to preach about the vices of the great cities, I went in person to see what they were. Some people thought I should have stopped on Brooklyn Heights, loaded my gun with blank cartridge, pointed it at the Fourth Ward, New-York, shut my eyes, turned my head back, pulled the trigger, and made for Bushwick. [Great laughter.] Because I didn't, many ministers became frantic. From what my dear brethren said, it would be thought that I was the first minister that ever penetrated the slums. I could name some of the best evangelists of the two cities who preceded me. The Police who took me around told me they had taken them, too. [Roars of laughter.] I could make a big disturbance in some congregations if I wanted to tell tales, but I won't. [Renewed laughter.] The difference between us has been that they said nothing about what they saw, while I told my people everything, and uttered a warning to young men to look out. The bar of God will decide which was the best plan. Some years ago I preached a series of sermons on the average American theatre. Afterward I was told that I had talked of theatres as they existed 200 years ago. If I recur to the subject, I will go the rounds, and see for myself. I have done looking through other peoples' spectacles. [Laughter.] God has has given me a pair of good eyes, and I am going to use them.

"I have always sought the most startling and arousing themes I could find, and I will always do so. Where sensation is the plaintiff, and stagnation the defendant, I will always be found acting as attorney for the plaintiff. [Laughter.] I have tried to preach sermons that would not leave my hearers in the lurch. We don't want a religion that will take us smoothly over the few miles of road on this earth, and then put us out on the snow-bank of the grave. You will bear witness that, during the past 10 years, I have preached Christ, and have not hidden any of the old truths."

SKATING AT GILMORE'S GARDEN.

THE PLACE TRANSFORMED INTO AN IMMENSE RINK.

Of the long list of transformation scenes witnessed in Gilmore's Garden since its erection as the Hippodrome, and including those necessary to prepare it for circuses, Gospel meetings, wrestling matches, flower shows, dog shows, concerts, balls, receptions, walking matches, shooting exhibitions, lacrosse matches, athletic tournaments, temperance meetings, and the hundred and one uses to which it has been put, none has been so complete and wonderful as that exhibited there at present. The vast arena has become a skating-rink, and is now the bed of a frozen lake, covering 18,000 square feet and having a surface like glass. No snow can interfere with the pleasure of the skaters here, and no warm weather can take away their ice, which is artificial, and is made by a process that is as effective when the ice outside is melting and snow is becoming slush as when the mercury stands many degrees below zero. From the outer walls of the Garden all traces of circus, walking match and athletic games have disappeared, and they are now covered by thousands of posters displaying the well-known sign of the red ball that so gladdens the hearts of skaters.

To effect this change a vast amount of labor has been necessary. First, the great heaters had to be removed and the racing tracks leveled. Then the whole of the vast space had to be floored over, and in the centre, where the rink now is, the floor was laid very carefully of narrow strips closely jointed. This portion of the floor, 280 feet long by 70 feet wide, was inclosed until it resembled a gigantic box. Then the floor was covered with water-proof roofing material, and over it all a vast system of 1-inch iron pipes were laid four inches apart, like a great gridiron. A line of 6-inch feed-pipes, with which the smaller pipes were connected, were placed around three sides of the inclosure and about a foot above its surface. In all, 10 miles of pipe were laid and jointed. In the meantime, a huge tank 260 feet long, and capable of holding 5,000 gallons of freezing mixture, had been built beneath the northern gallery, and a steam pump of the largest size had been placed in position at the north-east corner of the lake. Of the freezing mixture, all that is apparent is salt and brine. On Friday the water was turned on and the freezing was begun; but so much water on so warm a floor was not to be easily frozen, and the work progressed slowly. All Friday night the men worked, and on Saturday hundreds of barrels of snow were carried in from the outside and mixed with the water, that the skating surface might be prepared more quickly. The work on Saturday was somewhat delayed by the men who were attempting to remove the great sounding-board that used to hang above the band-stand in the middle of the garden. By carelessness it was allowed to fall, and was shattered from its position directly into the centre of the rink, where it was shattered. It was some time before the wreck was cleared away, and it was discovered that some of the pipes on which it had fallen were broken. On Saturday afternoon one end of the rink was finished, and Mr. Frank Swift, the champion skater of America, who was watching the formation of the lake, put on his skates and was the first person to try it. He pronounced the ice capital, very hard, and as fine a surface as he had ever skated. Yesterday afternoon ice had been formed over the entire surface, and it only remained to flood the rink several times to a slight depth, allow it to freeze, and turn it over to the skaters. This morning a few minutes after 9 o'clock the rink was thrown open to the public. One of the chief advantages claimed by the projectors of this enterprise is that the ice will not be affected by the temperature of the air, and they intend keeping the temperature of the Garden up to 60° all the time, so that spectators may sit in comfort and watch the skaters. Gilmore's Band is to furnish music afternoons and evenings, and Frank Swift and other experts are to be constantly on hand to give exhibitions and instruction in fancy skating. At night, in addition to the arches of colored lights with which the place is already provided, it will be illuminated by five electric lights. The ice in this rink is the largest single sheet ever formed artificially, the one most nearly approaching it in size having been one in England containing 5,000 square feet, formed by the same process.

THE DEATH OF WILLIAM J. CADMUS.

PROBABLY NEITHER ACCIDENTAL NOR SELF-SOUGHT—AN INQUEST TO BE HELD.

There are circumstances surrounding the discovery of the body of William J. Cadmus, at Communipaw, N. J., which cannot be explained easily upon the theory that his death was either accidental or self-sought. The Police incorrectly stated Saturday night that the body had been taken from the waters of the Bay. The remains were found near Jerolemon's boat-house, on the Communipaw shore. The dead man lay over a log, his face being in the water, and his feet on the snow. The condition of the snow shows clearly enough that, since the snow fell, the tide had not risen at that point more than three inches. This fact disposes at once of the theory of Mr. Cadmus having fallen overboard from a boat, and his body having been washed to the shore. Nor is there any evidence that he walked to the place where the corpse lay. The boy who discovered the body says there was not a foot-print in the snow leading to the spot. It has been surmised that he may have walked close to the river front and, fallen in the water, but the discovery of his hat on the washbench just at the end of the pier, where he lay, would not seem to bear out that supposition. The absence of any marks on his body of such violence as might have caused death, militates against the theory that he was murdered, but it is thought possible that he may have been struck with a sand-club, or that poison may have been put in some liquor drunk by him; that having been killed outright, his body was cast into the river, he was taken over the water in a boat and thrown where his body was found. He never went from home with less than from $50 to $100 in his pockets. When the body was discovered only 14 cents in money was found on it. Mr. Cadmus' gold watch, worth $250, is also missing. It is known that he purchased a return ticket from New-York, which was not found in his pockets.

The body was removed to his home at Bayonne on Saturday. The County Physician, who made a post-mortem examination, has ordered Coroner Parsiow to hold an inquest. The Coroner says that when he visited Bayonne yesterday, he found a slight depression in the forehead above the nose, and a discoloration above the right eye is visible. A sand-club, it used, would not have left any specially vivid marks, upon the body.

Mr. Cadmus was a very highly respected resident of Bayonne. He was one of a numerous family of the same name living in that city. He was also a relative of Chief of Police Bunkirk, and of Assessing Capt. Simmons, of the Jersey City Police force. For years he has done no business except to collect the interest upon his money, which is all invested in mortgages. The value of the property left by him is estimated at $100,000.

ASSAULT ON AN EDITOR DENOUNCED.

The Germans and Swiss of Paterson are greatly excited over the recent assault by Jacob Horandt and his son upon Otto Stutzbach, editor of the Passaic County Journal. About 100 Swiss, employed under Horandt in Pelgram & Meyer's silk-mill, published a long card a few days ago in the Paterson Volksfreund, a rival German paper, in which they denounced Stutzbach in the most emphatic phrases of Vaterland, and boldly justified Horandt for chastizing him. Yesterday afternoon a German mass-meeting was held at Germania Hall, under the auspices of Stutzbach's friends, to denounce the assault, and to induce the present Grand Jury to find an indictment against the assailants. The meeting was a large and earnest one, and, listened to speeches by several eloquent Germans, one of whom compared Horandt to Bismarck in his rough efforts to squelch freedom of the press. The principal speaker was George Winters, of this City; the other speakers were Messrs. Walding, Kopp and Hoffmann, of Paterson. Mr. Kopp presided. Resolutions were adopted requesting the Grand Jury "to thoroughly investigate the assault, and to mete out justice to Horandt and his son for their dastardly attack," and also requesting the Judges of the courts to punish the assailants in the event of their conviction. It was also decided to have these resolutions circulated for signatures before presentation to the Grand Jury and the Judges.

IDENTIFYING A SUICIDE'S REMAINS.

A well-dressed woman yesterday called at the Police Head-quarters, Stapleton, and made inquiries about the unknown man who committed suicide on Friday evening by jumping from the Staten Island ferry-boat Westfield. She was shown an account-book that was found on the boat, and immediately recognized it as having belonged to her husband. She said the latter has been book-keeper for a firm in this City, and had been very much troubled of late owing to the discovery of a deficiency in his accounts which he was unable to make good. She also said that on Friday evening she and the firm by whom her husband was employed, had each received a letter from her husband in which the writer stated that when the letters would be received his body would be at the bottom of the East River. She refused to give her name or that of her husband, who, she said, was 57 years old.

A PEDESTRIAN FAILS IN HIS TASK.

Benjamin W. Fowler started last Monday to walk 400 miles in six days, at Carom Hall, Flushing. At midnight on Saturday he had covered 311 miles. As it was impossible for him to complete the task within the required time, which expired at noon yesterday, he was taken from the track by his backers.

REMOVING ICE AND SNOW.

CLEANING THE MAIN THOROUGHFARES.

SIXTEEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY MEN AND MANY HORSES AND CARTS AT WORK ON BROADWAY AND PARK-ROW—HOW THE WORK WAS PLANNED AND ACCOMPLISHED.

A vigorous attempt to clear the principal thoroughfares of the City from the snow, which, since the last storm, has so greatly impeded traffic, was begun at an early hour yesterday morning by the Street-cleaning Bureau, and the work will be kept up from day to day until the greater part of the snow is removed, unless a warm rain sets in, and thus saves the department the labor and the City Treasury a heavy cost. The experience gained in the Winter of 1877, when the bureau met with its first great snow-cleaning difficulty, was not thrown away upon its officers, and the storm had not ceased on Thursday before Commissioner Nichols and Inspector Gunner were preparing a system by which the greatest number of streets could be cleaned in the shortest time. Their plan was not perfected until Friday night, and, in the meantime, the regular carts of the bureau were kept employed in removing the snow from some of the worst-blockaded streets, and on Saturday afternoon and evening did good service in Wall-street. There are only 80 carts, but it was determined to press into the work some 500 ash-carts and a sufficient force of laborers to work them to advantage. Permission to dump the snow from convenient piers on each river had to be obtained, and therefore the Police Captains of the various precincts were directed to see the lessees of the piers required. This being done, 10 piers on the North and 16 on the East River were selected, all being below Twenty-sixth-street, and then 300 Italians, with several of their number to act as foremen, were hired in one lot from an agent, and all was ready. The plan arranged comprised an attack first upon Broadway, from the Battery to Twenty-sixth-street and Park and Tryon rows, and then on certain of the side streets. Broadway and Park and Tryon rows were laid out into three divisions. That from the Battery to Chambers-street was in charge of Capt. Hedden, the neighborhood of the newspaper offices was given to Roundsman Stevens, and from Chambers-street to Twenty-sixth-street was supervised by Deputy Inspector Plunkett; Commissioner Nichols and Inspector Gunner had general command, and with them were 40 officers of the Street-cleaning Bureau. The divisions were subdivided into sections of three blocks, and on each of these was placed an officer, whose duty it was to see that the men kept at work and that each cartman was given a ticket for every load he took to the river.

These preliminaries being arranged, the force moved at 6:30 yesterday morning. It comprised 600 carts and their drivers, 700 regular street-sweepers of the department, the 300 Italians and the officers, or 1,650 men in all. So well had the plans been arranged that the driver of each cart and every laborer knew the night before just where he was to report in the morning, and Capt. Hedden at the corner of Fulton-street, Roundsman Steeves in front of the TIMES Building, and Deputy Inspector Plunkett at the corner of Bond-street and Broadway, all had their gangs at work before 7 o'clock. The only men not permanently attached were the Italians, and these were taken from section to section, as one was found where the regular force met with extraordinary difficulties, or more snow than at other points. Every man at first worked with a will, and the carts were rapidly dispatched when loaded, but by noon the novelty flagged, and the men became somewhat weary of incessant shoveling and picking. The horses also soon tired out with drawing the carts through the side streets, drep with snow, and the brief rest at dinner-time was gladly hailed. All had been notified to bring food with them, and the horses were fed from nose-bags. Not a man was allowed to leave the work. At 3 o'clock Roundsman Stevens finished his section, having made a clean job of it, and deposited in the rivers 718 loads of snow. To do this he had 33 carts and drivers and 47 laborers. He and his men were then sent up to aid Deputy Inspector Plunkett. The work on Broadway was not as cleanly done as Tryon-row, as the snow had been packed into ice by travel, and the amount was much greater, owing to its falling from the buildings on both sides of the street. It was impossible to remove the snow on the great piles on the sides and skim the surface as far as possible down toward the pavement, but in many places the ice loosened easily, and parts of Broadway were, therefore, well cleaned. In the lower sections the carts had short distances to go to the rivers, and 20 trips by each were made; but further up town the journeys were longer, and 12 trips was the average. The number of loads each driver was credited for the distance traveled, and cart, horse, and driver were paid $3 for a so-called day's work, and for additional loads an extra sum was paid. The men were allowed $1 60 for eight hours' work and also allowance for extra time, so that some of them made from $1 75 to $2, according to the time they remained at work. As a general rule they worked well, but toward evening they were almost exhausted and one by one left the ranks, and the work had to cease for want of laborers. The sidewalks of Broadway were lined throughout the day with crowds of sight-seers, who watched the movements of the force with interest and frequently offered advice or asked them all sorts of questions. One gentleman in particular became quite indignant because one of the laborers refused to answer his questions, but was appeased upon being told by the foreman, who pointed out the offending man, "He Italian, he speakee no English." The Italians worked on the co-operative plan, all sharing alike, and thus they responded cheerfully to the orders of their foreman, whose extra pay of $2 they would have a share. When darkness set in, Broadway from the Battery to Fourteenth-street was fairly clear of the snow heaps at the sides and much of the snow on the pavement, but it will require another going over to be said to be thoroughly clear. Owing to the clearance already made by the snow-plows and sweeping-machines in the Fourth-avenue, and by the cable-cars in the cross-town street railways, the centres of the thoroughfares bounding Union-square were clear of snow, but there were heavy banks piled alongside the tracks. The broad sidewalks, also, had been cleared, and their accumulations were added to the heavy masses along the curbing. In addition to this there was the comparatively clean and untrampled snow which covered the large spaces at the angles of the streets, which made a very large, superficial area to be worked on by the shovelers, and rendered this section of the job a greater task than it seemed to be at a casual glance. The result of the day's work was done slightingly, for the reason that the force assigned to it was insufficient. The greatest blunder or oversight was in not employing here a sufficient number of carts. The shovel men early in the day had surrounded the Lincoln statue with 50 pyramids of ice and snow, and these mounds were there, undisturbed, when the sun went down. To some extent the same state of affairs existed in the south-east corner of the square, around the Washington statue. On the Broadway line, west of the square, the cleaning was not attempted to be carried down to the pavement, but five or six inches of snow were scattered over the surface, apparently to avoid the necessity of carting it away. The plaza at the north side of the square was left almost untouched, and very little work was done on the Fourth-avenue side.

The section of Broadway from Seventeenth-street north to Twenty-third-street, and the open space in front of the Fifth-Avenue Hotel and around the Worth Monument, as far as Twenty-sixth-street, were cleared of snow on Thursday and Friday nights of last week, and traffic is in no wise impeded in that limited neighborhood. Inspector Gunner estimates that the expense of yesterday's work will be fully $4,000. For this amount he has taken away about 11,000 loads of snow and ice, weighing 3,500 tons, and for the amount of work done the cost has been much less than in the Winter of 1877, when it took four days to clear Broadway, and 24,666 loads were removed at a cost of $12,526 64. The Inspector attributes this, saving to the care in which the work was planned, and laid out before the men began. To-day he will finish Broadway and then attack Fulton, Cortlandt, Dey, Warren, Leonard, Fourteenth, and Twenty-third streets, thus opening up certain cross streets for the use of heavily-loaded teams. He will leave the Bowery to the last, as the cleared car tracks in the middle give plenty of room for teams, and Chatham-street will not require his services, as the Third-Avenue Railroad Company are now clearing it for their own convenience.

DEATH OF A SEA CAPTAIN.

Capt. Jerome Caton, of the schooner W. G. R. Mowry, which arrived from Old Harbor yesterday, fell sick shortly after leaving that port. He died on the 9th inst., and was buried at sea. He was a native of Calais, Me.

MR. JAMES ORTON REPORTED MISSING.

Mr. James Orton, a son of the late William Orton, President of the Western Union Telegraph Company, is missing from his home. No. 413 West Twenty-third-street. It is stated that the young man, who is a student at the Columbia College Law School, left home about 2 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, taking with him a present which he had purchased as a birth-day gift for his older brother, intending to leave it at a jewelry store on Sixth-avenue to have his brother's initials engraved upon it. Since that time he has not been seen or heard from by any of his relatives or friends. Inquiries were made at the jewelry store Saturday night, and it was found that he had not been there. His relatives, becoming alarmed at his unaccountable absence, called at the Central Office yesterday, and had the records of arrests and accidents searched, but no trace of the missing man was discovered. A general alarm was sent by telegraph to all the Police stations in the City, giving a description of Mr. Orton and directing the Police to search for him. Young Orton is 19 years of age, and is said to be of very steady habits. His friends are utterly at a loss to account for his failure to return home.

IMPROVING A CITY'S GOVERNMENT.

A BILL TO REGULATE THE EXPENDITURES OF PASSAIC AND PROVIDE FOR PAYING ITS DEBT.

A number of the tax-payers of Passaic City, N. J., have taken steps to carry out Gov. McClellan's excellent advice on the subject of municipal retrenchment and reform as a necessary preliminary to the reduction of debt and taxation. Passaic has an assessed valuation of $2,928,000. Its bonded debt is $169,800, and its other obligations amount to about $40,000 more, making the total indebtedness about $209,000. The tax-rate last year was 2.17. A committee of citizens have had a bill prepared, which will be introduced in the Legislature this evening, looking to an improved municipal administration. The bill is, on its face, applicable to all cities of less than 5,000 inhabitants, (and there are 12 such miniature "cities" in New-Jersey, some of them having but 1,200 souls,) but is really limited to Passaic by certain qualifications. The present City Council and Board of Education consist each of nine members, three from each ward, elected annually. Hereafter they are to consist of two members from each ward, elected in alternate years for two years, whereby a concentration of responsibility will be secured, as well as a continuance of experienced men in office. By the new bill the members of both boards will have to be freeholders for a year before their election, and to have paid taxes on real estate at least three months before such election. If not so qualified their election will be void. The tax-rate for all merely local expenses, exclusive of the payment of any installments of bonds falling due, is limited to 1¼ per cent, on the valuations of the preceding year. The various appropriations may be altered by a three-fourths vote of the Council, but the aggregate amount of the appropriations is not to be exceeded. No money is to be expended in anticipation of the collection of taxes for any city purposes, except for the payment of debt or of interest, or in fulfilling contracts under seal, unless by a three-fourths vote of the Council. The increase of the bonded indebtedness of the city is absolutely prohibited. The greater part of the present city debt was incurred by reason of the non-collection of taxes and street assessments, now amounting to $157,000, but as the arrears of taxes and assessments have come in they have been used to meet current expenses—a practice true of most other cities in New-Jersey. The new bill provides that all collections of arrears of taxes and assessments shall be at once paid over to the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, to be by them reserved in cash and applied exclusively to the payment of the indebtedness incurred in consequence of such arrears. In order to remedy the general complaint of inequalities in assessments prevalent in cities, it is provided that all the Assessors shall together constitute a board, and shall make their assessments according to uniform rules and regulations prescribed by the board, and a majority of the Assessors must certify to each other's assessments. Provision is also made for reducing the number and compensation of city officers. The revenue is also to be increased by raising the license fee to not less than $75, and it is provided that all receipts from licenses shall be appropriated, first, to the support of the poor, and, secondly, to the maintenance of a Police force. It is thought that the tax-payers may thus be wholly relieved from taxation for the poor and the Police.

Although this act is intended to affect Passaic City only, it is probable that the tax-payers of several other cities will seek to have its provisions applied to their own municipalities, in order to secure the same relief which the Passaic people desire. This piecemeal municipal legislation is very unsatisfactory, but it is resulting in the building up of a series of general city laws for New-Jersey that in a few years may be consolidated into a codified system appliesable to all the cities of the State.

MEANS FOR SAVING LIFE.

SOME RESULTS OF RECENT EXPERIMENTS—A REPORT TO THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE.

The Secretary of the Treasury applied to the Secretary of War, in the early part of 1875, for assistance in the prosecution of experiments for the improvement of the life-saving apparatus which was at that time under charge of Capt. J. H. Merryman, United States revenue marine. Lieut. D. A. Lyle, of the Ordnance Department, was specially assigned to the duty in addition to his regular duties at the National Armory, Springfield, Mass. The result of these experiments is embodied in a report recently made to Gen. Benét, Chief of Ordnance, by Lieut. Lyle. The Lieutenant began his experiments with a three-inch muzzle-loading rifled mortar, but this was found to be unsatisfactory, because the system of loading lacked simplicity, and the heated gas was liable to enter the axial cavity and burn off the line from the shell or blow off the cap. Then there was danger that wire ropes, whether composed of copper or iron, would not sustain the shock of the charge, or the twisting of the line to the rotation of a projectile fired from a rifled gun. In consequence of these objections Lieut. Lyle determined to cut loose from rifled mortars and side supernumeraries, and to try smooth-bore guns. Bronze guns of this kind were therefore selected, for the reason that guns made of that metal are not liable to burst, while the only external injury which they are liable to suffer is the breaking of the trunnions. Small charges only being used, there is no danger of excessive erosion, and the character of the metal makes it easy to keep the bore clean. The projectiles used in the experiments were modifications of Capt. Manby's shot, reduced in calibre and weight, and being carefully turned and finished to fit the bore of the gun accurately. The gun-carriages were made with wooden cheeks bound with iron. Navy cannon-powder was found to be best adapted for the purpose, and the lines chosen were made of linen, as being preferable to hemp, and were attached to long wire shanks extending beyond the muzzles of the guns. In conducting the experiments, the best range secured was 694 2-3 yards, the maximum distance necessary for the requirements of the life-saving service along the coasts being 400 yards. It was found that projectiles carrying lines rarely take more than 8½ seconds in their flight, while from 5 to 15 seconds is all the allowance necessary for the lines to fall to the ground, something, however, depending upon the angle of elevation at which the gun is fired, and the weight of the line. From extreme examples it was seen that about 25 seconds is required for the piece and allow the shot to describe its trajectory and permit the line to settle upon the ground or in the water. Lieut. Lyle, accordingly, found that the gun or mortar, in case of a wreck, should be prepared for firing, and with hazard stretched taut, the gunner should await a favorable lull of the wind, or the moment of least violence in the gale, and then to fire the piece without loss of time. Lieut. Lyle's report is embellished with over 50 plates and diagrams.

OCEAN STEAMERS IN A STORM.

VOYAGES OF THE NEVADA, ALGERIA, AND CELTIC—A GLITTERING SCENE AT SEA.

The steam-ship Nevada, of the Guion Line, which arrived from Liverpool yesterday, experienced extremely tempestuous weather during her voyage, but received no damages. She sailed from Liverpool, in company with the Algeria, of the Cunard Line, on Saturday, Jan. 4, and touched at Queenstown on the following afternoon. On the 7th a heavy south-west gale set in, and the head seas made it difficult for her to make any progress. Large quantities of water were shipped, and little or no sail could be carried. The weather moderated somewhat on the 8th, but increased to a terrific gale on the following day, when it became necessary to haul the ship up to the sea. She was then making not more than three miles an hour. Hail squalls of great violence frequently passed over her. On the morning of the 11th the gale, which was accompanied by heavy rains, increased to a hurricane, and at midnight the squalls of hail, sleet and snow were terrific. The weather continued very heavy until the 15th, when it became very cold, and the salt water as it broke over the sides froze on the snow which covered the spars, rigging, and decks until the steamer had the appearance of an iceberg. During the night the moon came out from behind a cloud, and, shining on the snow and ice, produced a scene of rare beauty. The spars and rigging glittered under the soft light thrown upon them; the blocks on the yard-arms glistened like jewels, and the ropes had the appearance of silk. Such of the passengers as were well enough to leave their berths came on deck to observe the spectacle. The weather continued severe until after the Banks of Newfoundland were passed.

The steam-ship Algeria, of the Cunard Line, which left in company with the Nevada, and arrived late Saturday evening, also encountered very heavy gales. During a terrible storm on the 11th a heavy sea broke over her starboard bulwarks, sweeping the deck and tearing away iron stanchions like so many lathes. The starboard side of the bridge, one of the life-boats, the fore skylight and the fore companion were washed away, and one of the boats was stove in. An anchor broke loose and did considerable damage before it could be secured.

The Celtic, of the White Star Line, which arrived from Liverpool yesterday, had five or six days of very severe weather, but made a good passage. She had head gales and seas to contend with during this time, and shipped a great deal of water, but no accidents occurred.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

One hundred and twenty-five deaths were reported at the Bureau of Vital Statistics for the 24 hours ending at noon yesterday. Fourteen were from scarlet fever, and four from diphtheria.

During a fight at No. 293 Bowery early yesterday morning, George Vetter, of No. 275 East Tenth-street, was knocked down by a stranger, and received a severe scalp wound. He was attended by Police Surgeon Maclay, and went home.

Prof. D. L. Ventura will deliver five lectures at No. 11 East Fourteenth-street on the evenings of Jan. 27 and 29, and Feb. 3, 5, and 10, respectively. The lectures are collectively entitled "From Italy to America," and are described as an "unedited novel."

On Saturday evening the residence of Mr. B. D. McCahill, No. 256 East Forty-ninth-street, was entered by sneak-thieves and robbed of jewelry and wearing apparel valued at $100. Sneak-thieves also visited the residence of Mr. Myron Spear, in East Fifty-eighth-street, and carried off silverware valued at $79.

The opening game of the Brunswick and Balke tournament will be played to-night in the great hall of Cooper Institute, between Messrs. Albert Garnier and Jacob Schaefer, two of the strongest contestants entered. The game will be French carom, 600 points up, and will be began promptly at 8 o'clock. A large attendance of lady spectators is expected. The new international rules will be signed by the competitors this afternoon.

The Bradstreet Company has issued a very large folio volume of commercial reports, giving the names and standing of bankers, merchants, manufacturers, and others doing business in this country and Canada. These names are arranged by States, cities, towns, &c., the nearest banks and telegraph and railway stations are given, and good compilations are furnished of the collection laws of the various States and Provinces. The volume will prove of use to every business man.

Godfrey Hunter, the colored sailor, who was arrested on Saturday on the arrival of the barken-tine Samos, from Trieste, at the instance of his Captain, William Hanrihan, who charged him with an attempt at murder, was yesterday arraigned before Justice Otterbourg, in the Tombs Police Court. The magistrate decided that, as the assault was committed on the high seas, he had no jurisdiction in the matter, and he directed the prisoner to be handed over to the Federal authorities.

BROOKLYN.

During a quarrel Saturday night between Michael Kane, a laborer, residing at No. 204 Tillary-street, and his wife, the former struck the latter on the head with a bar of iron, inflicting a severe wound. Kane was arrested, and locked up in the First Precinct Station-house. He will be arraigned before Justice Walsh to-day for trial on a charge of felonious assault.

Hugh Nolan, who has occupied the house No. 46 Dykeman-street for the past 15 years, was served with a warrant Saturday afternoon, issued by Justice Ferry, on complaint of Noel B. Sanborn, the owner of the premises, who charges him with being a "squatter." Sanborn wants possession of the property, and as Nolan refused to vacate the premises when notified to do so, the owner applied to the court for redress.

Henry Gibbons, who was locked up in the Tenth Precinct Station-house late Friday night, supposed to be insane, and removed to the City Hospital Saturday morning, died yesterday afternoon. The man slipped and fell on the ice previous to being placed in the station-house, and when examined by a physician, a depression was found in the back of his head. The physician thinks that Gibbons' skull was fractured. Coroner Simms will hold an inquest.

ANECDOTES OF GRANT IN DUBLIN.

From the London World, Jan. 8.

The Dublin banquet to Gen. Grant was necessarily on Friday night, consequently the new Lord Mayor, Sir John Barrington, had a difficulty to contend with, as I need hardly say the heretics present were in the minority. However, the big knight was quite equal to the emergency; the menu was emphatically marine, and from the oysters and turtle to the anchovy toast a delicate consideration was shown for both the appetites and consciences of his guests. The General was peculiarly reticent, reserved manner seems to have greatly impressed his Irish friends. The ancient manuscripts in Trinity College are displayed for him on a table; but, as one of the fellows says mournfully, he pays no more attention to them "than if they were a row of old boots in a pantry." And at another scientific institution a garrulous old custodian of certain precisosities is introduced; tells of his visit to America long ago, how he is "bound to it" by bonds and ties and sympathies, and heaven knows what else, and how he means one day to go there again. "How long since you were in America?" says the little heavy man, looking out of his keen gray eyes. "Fifty years ago. Ah, yes! and I'm sure that in my next voyage—" "Yes, Sir; you'll find the country considerably changed. Good day," says the General dryly, and cuts short the session. One thing only seemed to awaken his interest. In the Royal Irish Academy there is preserved Wolfe's original manuscript of the "Burial of Sir John Moore," and the General stops about before it and reads it deliberately from beginning to end.

THE NATIONAL BANKS OF MAINE.

From the Lewiston (Me.) Journal, Jan. 18.

The national banks of Maine the past year certainly have not earned their stockholders 5 per cent. interest—(after taxes were paid)—that is, in 1878 the savings banks of Maine made at least as large dividends, on an average, as the national banks of the State. One national bank in Bangor has just closed up its affairs, and another is about doing so. One or two national banks in this city finally passed the July dividend, and very many of the banks of the State have passed at least one dividend of the year 1878. One of the Waterville banks has passed three dividends within three years, paying one year only 3 per cent., and the other two years 5 per cent. In fact, the Maine banks come about 7 per cent. short of earning "double" interest, and short of 12 per cent. short of "triple" interest. Of course, under the law which requires 10 per cent. of net earnings to be reserved for the contingencies of losses, all the old banks, which have not have had heavy losses, now have a good surplus. But as the banks are managed, the stockholders are not getting the past five years, many of the present stockholders own their stock at 125 or upward, so that a dividend even of 10 per cent. on a share, after taxes are paid, does not net them over 6 per cent. interest on their investment.

VOL. XXVIII.....NO. 8537. NEW-YORK, TUESDAY, JANUARY 21, 1879. PRICE FOUR CENTS.

NEW-YORK'S NEXT SENATOR.

ROSCOE CONKLING RENOMINATED.

SENATOR ROBERTSON CHAIRMAN OF THE CAUCUS—GEN. HUSTED'S ADDRESS IN MAKING THE NOMINATION—EVERY MEMBER OF THE CAUCUS VOTES FOR THE PRESENT SENATOR.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 20.—Roscoe Conkling was to-night chosen unanimously as the Republican candidate for United States Senator. The occasion called forth one of the largest audiences that has gathered in the new Assembly Chamber. Ladies came as early as 6 o'clock, fearing there would be a crush, but the crowd was not large before 7 o'clock, and few persons were unable to get inside the chamber who desired to do so at that time. As the session of the Assembly was to precede the caucus, the seats in the circle were all filled at 7, when Speaker Alvord rapped for order. The usual opening prayer was said, the tramp of visitors continuing meanwhile along the stone halls and up the stairways. The galleries filled up and the floor of the House was occupied far out toward the folding-doors that lead into the lobby.

A few familiar faces of prominent persons were seen among the audience. Along the wall at the left of the Speaker were Gen. C. A. Arthur, A. B. Cornell, and John F. Smyth. In a seat behind the Clerk's desk was ex-Senator Cole, cheerful and bright of eye as ever. In the ladies' gallery above the Speaker's desk was the new Clerk of the New-York Common Council, Jacob M. Patterson, Jr. Congressman Richard Crowley, W. A. Cobb, and Mr. Henry R. Pierson were also among those who were present. The session of the Assembly was brief and unimportant. After the adjournment the Democratic members stlipped away; the Republican Senators came in and occupied their places.

The sight at 8 o'clock was a brilliant one. The light from many gas-jets fell upon the crowded floor and galleries and upon aisles occupied by spectators who could not find seats or standing room elsewhere. At that hour the Chairman of the Senate Caucus Committee called the caucus to order, and nominated Senator Robertson as Chairman. Senator Robertson, in taking the chair and thanking the caucus for the honor extended to him, referred briefly to the services of Senator Conkling, and stated that they were about to take the preliminary steps for the election of a man whose intellectual greatness and unquestioned skill as a politician were acknowledged by all Republicans. On motion of Gen. Husted, Gen. George H. Sharpe and Henry A. Glidden were made Secretaries. The roll was called and only Senator Goebel and Assemblyman Wadsworth were absent.

"The gentleman from Rockland, Gen. Husted," said Senator Robertson, and the "Bald Eagle," who had risen in his place, hesitated long enough to give every man and woman in the chamber a chance to fix their eyes upon him. Then he went on slowly and impressively to move that the caucus proceed to the nomination of a candidate for United States Senator, and to say that in that connection he desired to present the name of Roscoe Conkling.

Twelve years ago, he said, the State of New-York designated Roscoe Conkling as one of her representatives in the Senate of the United States. As a member of the popular branch of the national Congress, he had, during the dark days, demonstrated his patriotism, his courage, his sagacity, and his wisdom. The unflinching and steadfast champion of freedom, the prop and shield of the Administration, the friend and counsel of Lincoln, he was the pride of his constituents, as he was the foremost representative from his State. His transfer to a position where his commanding talents, his surpassing eloquence, and his ripe experience would enable him to render still more enduring service to the Union was demanded by a popular will that silenced all other aspirants. Entering the Senate at that period of doubt and gloom which enshrouded the Johnson Administration, "unmoved by power and unappalled by fear," spurning the blandishments and bidding defiance to the threats of the dispensers of patronage and place, he flung down the gage of battle, and casting himself into the breach, bearing proudly afloat the banner of his party, he marched forward with an unfaltering tread and with the weapons of abiding truth and matchless oratory. He held firmly at bay a treacherous and traitorous Executive. For two years he combated as well the secret as the open enemies of his country. From every conflict he came forth triumphantly, and to the hero of the battle-field amid the plaudits of the Union was transmitted until the escutcheon for which the great emancipator died. The exaltation of Gen. Grant to the chief magistracy was the inaugural of a new era, and from that moment dates the prosperity which, ever increasing, betokens to-day a future such as the world has never seen."

"I am manfully as he had sustained the patriot martyr," said Mr. Husted, "did Roscoe Conkling, with unflagging zeal, with like fidelity, and with equal ability and courage, sustain the patriot soldier of the Republic. With the close of his Senatorial term a great crisis confronted the nation, the dissatisfied and the unsatisfied joined hands with the implacable foe. Then did his great genius make manifest its powers and its strength. Inspired by duty and patriotism, alike fearless of danger or consequences, relying on the justice of his cause, with clarion voice he sounded the keynote of victory, and with undaunted purpose and an enthusiasm that brooked no opposition, he fought the battles of that memorable campaign to an issue as successful as it was glorious. Again the victor of Appomattox was made the guardian of liberty and human rights. Again the Republic was preserved. Again the hope was cherished that the war had not been all in vain. With universal acclaim the Republicans of New-York demanded Mr. Conkling's return to the Senate. The Legislature seconded the demand, and by the unanimous vote of his party he was again made a Senator of the United States, and then for four years more, side by side and shoulder to shoulder, in defense of great principles and in furtherance of great measures, the soldier and the statesman struggled for and maintained the rights of the American people, and in the executive chamber and in the Senate hall they won most signal victories for public integrity, public faith, and public honor. Inseparably connected on the pages of history will their names go down to grateful posterity. Their deeds will be embalmed in the memories and minds of men forever. Where are these two strong men now? The one, receiving, at the close of his official career, the benedictions of a loving people, is to-day the recipient of courtesies such as never before were accorded to "the greatest of the earth." Prince and peasant vie with each other in their endeavor to show their admiration and respect for Ulysses S. Grant. All nations bow before the soldier-citizen. The other, closing his second term of Senatorial service, stands forth "the first among his peers"—the recognized exponent of Republican doctrine—the unchallenged statesman of America. To-night the representatives of the Republican Party, voicing the people's call, summon him again to the post of duty and of honor. The annals of the State present no record such as this.

"'Oh, such a day,
So fought, so followed, and so fairly won.
Came not till now to dignify the times
Since Cæsar's fortunes.'

"Fellow-Republicans," concluded the speaker, "let us remember that in honoring such a leader the glory is reflected on ourselves. 'Titles of honor add nothing to his worth, who is himself an honor to his title.' Six years ago it was my opportunity to second his nomination. It is now my privilege to name Roscoe Conkling for the position of United States Senator. Sir, in order to make the expression of the popular voice the more emphatic and pronounced, I move that each member of this caucus, as his name is called, rise in his place and designate the candidate of his choice."

Senator Pomeroy followed with a review of Senator Conkling's course, to show how greatly he had aided the Republican Party in the great work it had performed. He regarded it as the duty of this caucus to renominate Roscoe Conkling.

Mr. Sloan said he could find no reason whatever for not renominating Roscoe Conkling to the position he had so well and truly filled for 12 years. He said there were other men in the party who would adorn the position, but was there one who was so well fitted by experience and ability for it? He thought there was not such a man in the State apart from Roscoe Conkling. Besides, he believed it was the wish of the people, so plainly expressed at the late election that he who runs may read, that Mr. Conkling should be re-elected.

Messrs. Alvord, Terry, Strahan, Hayes, and Eidman also addressed the caucus in support of the nomination of Roscoe Conkling.

The roll was then called, and Roscoe Conkling was named by all present and answering, only one, Mr. Wadsworth, failing to answer, he being absent.

The Chair announced the unanimous nomination of Roscoe Conkling, which was received with applause.

The roll call was then proceeded with. Every Senator and Assemblyman responded for Conkling. The only member of the Assembly who had contemplated voting for another candidate was Mr. Skinner, of Jefferson. He had made up his mind, without consulting any other member, to name Hon. William M. Evarts, but Mr. Sloan, who feared that the opposition would be construed as an indication of hostility on the part of his friends, induced Mr. Skinner to refrain from carrying out his purpose, and to join the rest of the Assembly in making the nomination at least apparently unanimous.

The Clerk announced the result to Senator Robertson, who declared that Roscoe Conkling, having received the votes of the Republican Senators and Assemblymen, was the unanimous choice of the caucus for United States Senator. It was 9 o'clock when the result was announced, the nomination having been made in just an hour.

THE DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS.

A REMARKABLE PROTEST OFFERED AND TABLED—LIEUT.-GOV. DORSHEIMER TENDERED THE EMPTY HONOR OF A NOMINATION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 20.—The Democrats set an entirely new precedent by holding their Senatorial caucus in secret. It was well that they did so, for a sillier attempt to make asses of themselves has not been made in many years, even by that party. After they had securely locked the doors of the Senate Chamber, where they had congregated to the number of about 35, Senator Ecclesine opened the ball with one of his furious harangues about the villainy of the Republican Party in not passing an Apportionment bill to suit the Democrats, and wound up by presenting the following:

Protest made by the undersigned Senators and members of the Assembly of the State of New-York, at the joint convention of the two houses in the Capitol, on the — day of January, 1879, and entered on the journal of both houses:

The undersigned Senators and members of the Assembly of the State of New-York, assembled at the Capitol in the City of Albany, on the — day of January, 1879, in joint assembly, for the purpose of electing a Senator of the United States to represent the State of New-York in the Senate of the United States, do hereby protest against the granting of any certificates or the making of any declaration that Roscoe Conkling has been duly elected such Senator. The grounds of the protest are that by the Constitution of this State it is provided that (article 3, section 4,) an enumeration of the inhabitants of the State shall be taken under the direction of the Legislature in the year 1865, and at the end of every 10 years thereafter, and the said Senate districts shall be so altered by the Legislature at the first session after the return of every enumeration, that each Senate district shall contain as nearly as may be an equal number of inhabitants, &c.; and (section 5) that the Assembly shall consist of 128 members, elected for one year. The members of Assembly shall be apportioned among the several counties of the State by the Legislature, as nearly as may be, according to the number of their respective inhabitants, excluding aliens, and shall be chosen by single districts. The Assembly districts shall remain as at present organized until after the enumeration of the inhabitants of the State in the year 1875. The Legislature, at its first session after the return of every enumeration, shall apportion the members of the Assembly among the several counties of the State, &c.; and that an enumeration of the inhabitants of the State was duly taken in 1875 under the direction of the Legislature, but that no alteration of the Senate districts and no reapportionment of the members of the Assembly has been made by the Legislature since the said enumeration; that the effect of such neglect has been that large numbers of the people of this State have been, and now are, unrepresented in the Legislature; that the political complexion of the Legislature has been thereby changed from one party to another, from the party which the undersigned represent to the party represented by the members who voted for said Conkling, the legal result whereof is that the present Legislature is a Legislature de facto, and not de jure; wherefore, the undersigned ask that this, their protest, be certified by the President of this Joint Assembly, and laid before the Senate of the United States.

The protest fell like a wet blanket upon the caucus, and it soon became apparent that a majority were not prepared for such a revolutionary proceeding as that, much as they might deplore the election of a Republican to the United States Senate. Senator Raines was the first to raise his voice against this silly proposition of Ecclesine, and he was followed by Senator St. John, Assemblyman Brooks, and one or two others. The line of their argument is understood to have been that such action as Ecclesine proposed would place the Democratic Party and the Democratic State Government in a very awkward and inconsistent position, and, what was still worse, would bring upon the party the charges that they were revolutionists and disturbers of the public peace, and thereby lose them the confidence of the people. Assemblyman Flynn, of Brooklyn, was the only person who favored the Ecclesine programme, and he did it in a half-hearted sort of a way. Finally, a substitute for the protest was offered, providing for the appointment of a committee to draft an address upon the subject of apportionment and its connection with the Senatorial election, and present it to an adjourned Democratic caucus to be held to-morrow night. This, after some discussion, was adopted by a vote of 23 to 11. This did not indicate accurately who were for or against the protest, and some of the 11 voted against the substitute because they were opposed to any action of the caucus exept the nomination of a candidate for United States Senator. As soon as the substitute was adopted Ecclesine took his hat and marched out of the room in high dudgeon, much to the joy of those who remained. The caucus then proceeded to nominate a candidate for Senator. Among the names presented were Lieut.-Gov. Dorsheimer, who was named by Senator Jacobs; De Witt C. West, Elijah Ward, and ex-Senator G. F. Starbuck. The first ballot resulted in 11 for Dorsheimer, 8 for Starbuck, 8 for West, and 2 for Ward. On the second ballot Dorsheimer got 18, West and Starbuck 8; and, on motion of Erastus Brooks, Mr. Dorsheimer's nomination was made unanimous. The committee appointed to prepare the address for to-morrow evening's caucus consists of Senator Jacobs, Chairman; Senators St. John, Raines, and Hughes, and Assemblymen Brooks, Grady, and Penfield. The Chairman, together with several other members of the committee, are utterly opposed to presenting any address at all, or doing anything else, except to nominate a candidate for Regent, which they forgot to do in the excitement arising out of Ecclesine's folly. It is doubtful whether any address will be presented, and if there should be, it will probably bring on another row. The more sensible Democrats are thankful that they have escaped the fatal mistake of Ecclesine's protest, and are opposed to any further action in connection with it.

NOMINATION OF A REGENT.

ALBANY, Jan. 20.—At the Republican caucus last night, on motion of Mr. Husted, the caucus went into an election for candidate for Regent of the University, in place of the late Robert G. Rankin. Senator Harris, in a warm speech of commendation, presented the name of Charles E. Smith, of Albany, whom he considered as eminently fitted for the position. Speaker Alvord seconded the nomination, promising that Mr. Smith would vitalize the mummies of the board if elected, and he was followed by Messrs. Husted and Sheard, both of whom added hearty encomiums to the words of their predecessors. The election of Mr. Smith was made by acclamation.

KILLED BY A RUNAWAY HORSE.

POTTSTOWN, Penn., Jan. 20.—Mrs. Pennypacker was thrown from a sleigh at Trappe, Penn., yesterday, kicked in the temple by the runaway horse, and instantly killed.

THE FRENCH CRISIS OVER.

A COMPROMISE AND A VOTE OF CONFIDENCE.

THE MINISTRY MAKE CONCESSIONS TO THE LEFT AND RECEIVE THE SUPPORT OF THAT SECTION—DETAILS OF THE DEBATE IN THE CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES—A MODIFIED RESOLUTION OF CONFIDENCE ADOPTED.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 20.—M. Senard, a veteran Republican, opened the debate in the Chamber of Deputies to-day, having been assigned to that duty by the Left. The galleries were densely crowded. M. Senard said they would only have had thanks and congratulations to address to the Ministry if its programme had given more satisfaction in regard to the administrative functionaries whom the Government found in public service when it acceded to power. In dealing with staff officers, a distinction should be drawn between those performing effectual work and those simply serving as intermediaries between the Government and the country. The first of these two classes ought to be maintained unless they manifested open hostility to the Government; but the second could not remain in office, because it was necessary for the Government to have men united and marching with the Government, a fact which the Government appeared not to have understood. It was imperative to expect from public servants a formal adhesion to the Republic. Rights acquired and services rendered must be recognized; but it behooved the Government to consider to whom those services had been rendered. Among the services were possibly violent persecutions of Republicans. Amnesty might be granted these men: but, before all, devotion to the present institutions was indispensable. The Government had acted properly toward the Prefects. It must do likewise toward other officers.

M. Dufaure, President of the Ministry, in reply, said the Government considered the vote of Jan. 5 a consolidation, not a modification, of the Constitution. A Republican majority in the Senate gives the Government greater power. The Government would insist upon a truly Republican spirit from its functionaries. It had already acted on this idea. Five Procurators-General had been dismissed and two transferred to other posts; 168 Justices of the Peace had been transferred and 177 removed. The vote of the 5th of January required still further severity from the Government, but the Ministers would take account of services rendered, and not treat magistrates of long standing like new-comers. M. Dufaure adopted the views expressed by Deputy Senard, and in a peroration which was much applauded, pointed out the trying period of 1880 [the end of MacMahon's Presidency] would pass as happily as the recent electoral event.

M. Madier de Montjau, extreme Radical, made an uncompromising attack on the Government. He declared that its natural term of office was now ended, and its programme was vague and insufficient. He demanded that the Ministers make place for successors willing to carry out the will of the Chamber and of the country.

M. Floquet, the orator of the Republican Union, made a mild and insignificant speech, maintaining that the union of the groups of the Left was capable of forming a Cabinet representing a majority of the Chamber.

Here followed the suspension of the sitting, during which a compromise between the Government and the Left was adopted and resulted in the wording of M. Ferry's motion as follows: "That the Chamber, trusting that the Ministry will not fail to give satisfaction, notably in regard to the administrative and judicial staff, passes to the order of the day." The Ministry accepted the motion, and it was adopted by a vote of 223 to 121.

PARIS, Jan. 20.—M. Gambetta was present in the Chamber of Deputies during the debate to-day, but remained silent.

Minister Dufaure's assurances, particularly with regard to the functionaries, were ample. He said: "Nobody can henceforth pretend that he has a right to continue in the public service and retain an opinion different from our own. Holders of public office must devote themselves to the promotion of our institutions."

LONDON, Jan. 21.—The Paris correspondent of the Times says it is unknown how M. Gambetta voted, but it was noticed that he applauded passages in M. Floquet's speech attacking the Cabinet.

The Telegraph's Paris correspondent states that the settlement of the crisis is due to moderating efforts privately made by M. Gambetta. The Right abstained from voting.

THE EASTERN PROBLEMS.

BRITISH OFFICERS ATTACKED IN THE STREETS OF KANDAHAR—THE THRONE OF BULGARIA—GREECE INSISTING ON THE BERLIN TREATY STIPULATIONS—THE TURKISH INDEMNITY.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—A dispatch to the Times dated at Kandahar, on the 10th of January, says: "Major St. John, of the British Army, has been fired upon in the streets of this town by a fanatical native, but was not wounded. The man was arrested. A Lieutenant of the Royal Artillery was severely, and two other persons belonging to the British force in Kandahar slightly wounded by a religious zealot, who will be hanged tomorrow."

TERNOVA, Jan. 20.—The Assembly of Bulgarian Notables, which was to have met in this place on the 18th inst. to elect a Prince, has been postponed to the 25th or 27th. The Deputies now here think that Prince Alexander of Battenburg will be elected as the ruler of Bulgaria.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 20.—It is semi-officially stated that the exchanges of views relative to the joint occupation of Eastern Roumelia has been without result. It does not at present appear likely that such a scheme will be carried out.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 20.—The construction of barracks for 150,000 men on the Constantinople lines of defense has been ordered.

ATHENS, Jan. 20.—The Greek Frontier Commissioners have been instructed to declare that any other basis of negotiation, except the territorial limit proposed by the Berlin Congress, is inadmissible.

LONDON, Jan. 21.—The Times' Vienna dispatch says the principal difference in regard to the Turko-Russian convention is that Prince Lobanoff does not appear to recognize that the claims of Turkey's European creditors rank before Russia's claim for war indemnity. No serious difficulty, however, is anticipated.

GERMAN REFORM MEASURES.

BISMARCK ASKING SUPPORT FOR HIS FISCAL SCHEMES—THE ENFORCEMENT OF THE ANTI-SOCIALIST LAW.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—The Berlin correspondent of the Manchester Guardian says: "Prince Bismarck has written, and caused to be published, a letter appealing to the agricultural community of Germany to afford him their united and vigorous support in his work of fiscal reform. He refers to the new duties to be levied upon imported corn and cattle, and expresses the opinion that such taxation has become an unavoidable necessity.

BERLIN, Jan. 20.—The Socialist organ, the Freiheit, published in London by Johann Most, has been finally and absolutely forbidden admission in Germany.

The Berlin Post says that Prince Bismarck is preparing to submit to the Federal Council a law for the regulation of railway tariffs.

BRESLAU, Jan. 20.—The Police have prohibited the collection of contributions of money solicited by Socialist leaders, and have arrested a man for soliciting in violation of the prohibition.

LONDON, Jan. 21.—A dispatch to the Times from Berlin says Herr Benningsen, President of the Landtag, lately protested his inability to protect outsiders from the rhetorical assaults of members. He thereby undoubtedly played, designedly or undesignedly, into the hands of the Government in regard to the Parliamentary Discipline bill. The North German Gazette exultingly declares Herr Benningsen's protest to be a declaration of the bankruptcy of the disciplinary power.

CURRENT EVENTS ABROAD.

ANGELL, THE DEFAULTER, ON THE WAY TO THE UNITED STATES—THE PLAGUE IN ASTRAKHAN—BEGINNING OF THE TRIAL OF THE GLASGOW BANK DIRECTORS—A SENSATIONAL REPORT OF A RUPTURE BETWEEN THE POPE AND THE JESUITS.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—Advices from Lisbon of Jan. 12 state that the American bark Shooting Star, Capt. Sholl, has sailed from that port for Philadelphia with Angell, the defaulting Secretary of the Pullman Palace Car Company, on board.

Six cotton mills at Preston, running 183,144 spindles, have given notice of a reduction of wages ranging from 5 to 10 per cent.

The divergence between the official and private intelligence respecting the extent of the plague in Astrakhan continues, the former asserting that the epidemic is diminishing, and the latter that it is increasing. One hundred and twenty thousand pounds of fish and large quantities of other provisions have been burned at the Town of Tsaritzin, on the River Volga, to prevent the spread of the contagion.

The lock-out of engineers has become general at Huddersfield.

The master ship-builders at Hartlepool, Stockton, and Middlesboro have offered to insist only on half the reduction originally agreed upon. The workmen will decide to-morrow whether they will accept the terms.

Divers to-day examined the hull of the United States frigate Constitution, and found that her false keel alone was damaged. The ship will be docked on Tuesday and the keel replaced.

The Oxford University boat crew have declined to row with the Harvard crew, because of the lateness of the date named.

Right Hon. Mr. Forster, speaking at a soirée of the Bradford Chamber of Commerce, said he did not deny that the strength of protection in the United States was particularly disheartening; but he thought a mere threat of imposing counter duties would have any effect. The United States would only thereby be provoked to make issue to see which side was the stronger. Besides, such a policy would be impracticable, because to bring serious pressure on the United States it would be necessary to tax such vital necessities as wheat and cotton.

GENEVA, Jan. 20.—Owing to the severity of the weather, the forests of the Bernese Jura are infested with droves of wild boars, which are sometimes so numerous as to defy attack. The farms are frequently attacked by wolves, and hundreds of chamois have descended into the valleys in search of food.

EDINBURGH, Jan. 20.—The trial of the Directors of the City of Glasgow Bank was begun to-day in the High Court of Justiciary before the Lord Justice Clerk, (Lord Moncrieff,) assisted by Lords Commissioners Muir and Craighill. The prisoners are charged with fraud, theft, and embezzlement. The courtroom was densely crowded.

LONDON, Jan. 21.—The Standard's correspondent at Rome says that the Jesuits have sent the Pope a sort of ultimatum pointing out the evils resulting from their exclusion from the government of the Church. The Pope continues firm, and many of his friends fear the consequences. An unfounded report that the Pope had been poisoned, which originated in Paris, has awakened painful apprehensions.

A HOLIDAY IN HARRISBURG.

PREPARING FOR THE INAUGURATION OF GOVERNOR-ELECT HOYT — THE CITY CROWDED WITH VISITORS.

HARRISBURG, Jan. 20.—If the number of strangers at present in this city may be taken as an indication, the inauguration to-morrow will certainly surpass in point of attendance, brilliancy, and enthusiasm any similar demonstration ever held in this State. Political clubs and military organizations have been coming in on every train since noon, and others will arrive at all hours during the night, so that by dawn to-morrow there will probably be more strangers in the city than were ever here before at one time. Chief among the clubs which have arrived are the Union Republican Club, of Philadelphia, led by Grafulla's Seventh Regiment Band, of New-York; the Cameron Veteran, Old Reliable, Feronia, Keystone, and Hoyt Clubs, of Philadelphia; the Keystone Club and Washington Light Infantry, of Washington, accompanied by the Marine Band. Besides these, there are organizations, civic and military, from all parts of the State. The hotels and boarding-houses are filled to overflowing, and hundreds of persons are the guests of friends resident here. The procession to-morrow will consist of five grand divisions, led by the National Guard, under command of Gens. Howard J. Reeder, Joshua H. Siegfried, James A. Beaver, Frank Reeder, and George R. Snowden. The Union Club, with Grafulla's Band, this evening serenaded Governor-elect Hoyt and Gen. Cameron. Both gentleman appeared and responded briefly. As Gen. Cameron bade farewell to the club, and turned to go up the walk which leads to his residence, the band struck up "Auld Lang Syne."

The inauguration ball, given by the Young Republican Club of this city in the Opera-house, is now in progress. Gov. Hartranft and Gen. Hoyt are present, with a large number of prominent citizens of the State. The Governor-elect held a reception for half an hour before the opening of the ball, when a large number of those present embraced the opportunity to be presented to the new Governor of the Commonwealth.

ONE OF JAY GOULD'S SCHEMES.

TEMPORARY INJUNCTION AGAINST A SETTLEMENT OF THE UNION PACIFIC AND CREDIT MOBILIER SUIT.

BOSTON, Jan. 20.—A suit at law and one in equity are now pending before the courts of this State, growing out of the transactions between the Credit Mobilier and the Union Pacific, and to-day a question was raised before Judge Soule, in the equity session of the Supreme Court, and decision thereon obtained. In July, 1875, the Credit Mobilier brought a suit in this court against the Union Pacific and recovered upon a promissory note $2,000,000, given by the latter Aug. 4, 1869. The Union Pacific then brought its bill in equity to restrain the collection of the note. This bill was set down for final hearing to-day, but Jay Gould, now President of the Credit Mobilier, and certain Directors constituting the Executive Committee of that company, recently ordered a discontinuance of the action on the note.

The largest part of the stock in the Credit Mobilier is held by the Union Pacific, and certain stockholders of the Credit Mobilier, including the Executors of the estate of Oakes Ames, and a savings bank in Connecticut, petitioned for leave to come in and be made parties to the writ in equity, and asked that they might prosecute the suit at law and that the two corporations might be enjoined from settling the controversy. These stockholders state that they represent between 5,000 and 6,000 shares, and claim that Jay Gould and others are endeavoring to defraud them of their rights. They also pray that the judgment against the Union Pacific on the note for $2,000,000 be enforced. After a brief hearing on this point of enjoining the companies from settling, Judge Soule issued an order of notice, returnable on the first Monday in March, and a temporary injunction against the settlement of the suits. Thornton J. Lothrop appeared for the petitioners. A similar injunction has been obtained from the courts of Pennsylvania.

DEALING WITH PENNSYLVANIA CRIMINALS.

HARRISBURG, Jan. 20.—Gov. Hartranft to-day signed the pardon of Henry F. Lynch, of Pittsburg, who was convicted, during 1878, and sentenced to the Penitentiary for forgery. Lynch is well connected, and his friends made desperate efforts to save him from the disgrace of imprisonment. Lynch's health is utterly broken down, and he is said to be little better than an imbecile, the result of injuries received in a runaway accident since his trial. The death sentence of Blasius Pistorius, formerly a Prussian priest, convicted at Norristown of the murder of a neighbor named Jacquette, during a quarrel, was commuted to imprisonment for life. Warrants were issued for the execution, on March 18 next, of Alexander B. Sayre, of Philadelphia, and Hezekiah Shafer, of Franklin County. Both were convicted of wife-murder. Sayre, having followed his wife into church, shot her to death during the service.

ESCAPING CONVICTS SECURED.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 20.—During an attempt at jail delivery at Helena, Ark., on Saturday night, led by a negro named Moore, the jailer shot Moore fatally and secured the other prisoners.

THE NATION'S LEGISLATURE.

DEMOCRATIC SENATORS IN CAUCUS.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THOSE OF MR. EDMUNDS—A DEMAND FOR THE REPEAL OF THE LAWS PRESCRIBING TEST OATHS FOR JURORS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—The Democratic members of the Senate were called to meet in caucus this morning to consider the report of the committee appointed at a previous meeting for the purpose of determining what action should be taken by the Democratic Senators in regard to the resolution of Senator Edmunds reaffirming the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the national Constitution. The discussion resulted in the adoption of the resolutions published in the report of the Congressional proceedings on another page. These resolutions were subsequently presented to the Senate, and will come up for consideration together with those submitted by Senator Edmunds.

After taking the action described, the caucus devoted a great deal of attention to a consideration of those sections of the Revised Statutes which provide a test oath for United States jurors. Section 820 of the statutes practically prohibits those who took part in the rebellion from serving on grand or petty juries. This section, however, as is alleged, was repealed some time ago, and it is now claimed that when the statutes were compiled it was inserted by mistake. The next section, 821, which prescribes the iron-clad oath for United States jurors, it is claimed, was also repealed, but that, by the same mistake, it is still upon the statute-books. The effect of the two statutes is, that while a man who was in the Confederate Army may come to Congress and enact laws for the nation, he cannot go to his home and serve on the juries which take part in the execution of those laws. These points were advanced in the caucus to-day, and it was determined that the House Democrats should be consulted with, and a positive and unqualified demand made for the immediate repeal of both the sections named. Before the holiday recess the Senate passed a bill repealing Section 820, and it is now pending in the House.

A RAILROAD JOB IN CONGRESS.

A BILL WHICH MR. MULLER INTRODUCED TO BENEFIT JAY GOULD AND OTHER PACIFIC RAILROAD MAGNATES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—Messrs. Gould and Huntington, representing the Union and Central Pacific Railroads, have brought forward a scheme to repeal the Sinking Fund act passed last Winter, under which the Pacific railroad companies are required to pay into the Treasury 25 per cent. of their net earnings, after deducting the amount paid on account of interest on their first mortgage bonds. This is the act perfected by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, which was passed after a determined struggle, and which was known as "the Thurman bill." The bill of Messrs. Gould and Huntington is innocently entitled, "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to accept indemnity for certain claims growing out of advances made by the United States," and was introduced last week by Mr. Muller, of New-York. Following is the text of the bill:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to negotiate with the railroad companies designated in the act approved May 7, 1878, for the semi-annual payment to the United States by said companies, or either of them, in coin or its equivalent, of a sum which shall not be less than 4 per cent. per annum upon the whole amount of bonds issued in aid of the construction of said roads, and the money loaned by the United States and unpaid, for payment of interest thereon; provided that nothing herein shall be construed to release said companies from their obligation and liability to the United States for the payment of the principal sum when due, of the bonds issued in aid of their construction and equipment, and any balance of interest unpaid at that time, in accordance with the act approved July 1, 1862, and the act approved July 2, 1864.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be required in the execution of this act, and all laws or parts of laws in conflict or inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads. It cannot possibly pass under the circumstances, when its true character is made known.

RULES FOR FOREIGN STEAM-SHIPS.

AN IMPORTANT BILL MAKING FOREIGN STEAMSHIPS AMENABLE TO UNITED STATES LAWS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—Mr. Cox, of New-York, to-day introduced in the House an important bill in reference to foreign steam-ships carrying passengers. The bill makes such steam-ships amenable to the same laws that apply to river steam-boats in regard to being supplied with apparatus for extinguishing fires, saving life, &c. It provides that all foreign private steam-vessels carrying passengers from any port in the United States to any other place or country, shall be subject to the provisions of sections 4,470, 4,471, 4,472, 4,473, 4,479, 4,480, 4,482, 4,486, 4,488, and 4,489 of the Revised Statutes, and shall be liable to visitation and inspection by the proper officers in any of the ports of the United States respecting any of the provisions of the sections named. Section 4,472 prohibits steamers carrying passengers from taking as freight camphene, nitroglycerine, naphtha, benzine, coal-oil, crude or refined petroleum, or other explosive burning-fluids or dangerous articles. Section 4,482 requires every steamer to be supplied with a good life-preserver for every cabin passenger for which she shall have accommodation, and also a good life-preserver or float for each deck or other passenger; and section 4,488 requires every steamer to be supplied with such number of life-boats, rafts, life-preservers, and drags as will best secure the safety of all persons on board in case of disaster. The Board of Supervising Inspectors is authorized to fix and determine the kind of life-boats, life-preservers, &c., which shall be used.

GEN. BUTLER'S OBJECTIONS TO THE INVESTIGATION OF THE CIPHER DISPATCHES—A BILL FOR USING BEDLOE'S ISLAND FOR HOSPITAL PURPOSES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—No opportunity was presented in the House to-day to suspend the rules, the time between noon and 2 o'clock—when the District of Columbia Committee was entitled to the floor—being occupied with the call of States for the introduction of bills. No attempt, even, was made to get a vote on Demagogue Wright's bill to lend settlers on the public land $500 each, which is pending as the unfinished business of Monday. Mr. Potter was permitted to offer his resolution to appropriate $10,000 to investigate the cipher dispatches, but as Gen. Butler desires to discuss the resolution it was laid over until to-morrow. Gen. Butler intends to make a speech denying the right of the House to inquire into these dispatches, which he regards as private correspondence.

A bill was introduced in the House to-day by Representative Cox, of New-York, to set apart a portion of Bedloe's Island, in New-York Harbor, for the use of the Marine Hospital. It provides that all that portion of the island which is outside of and in the rear of old Fort Wood, together with the buildings thereon, shall be set apart for the use of the Marine Hospital for the Port of New-York, and makes an appropriation for the construction of a floating ward, the construction of a steam ambulance, and for such additional hospital wards as may be necessary.

VOORHEES RENOMINATED.

THE DEMOCRATS OF INDIANA SELECT FOR BOTH THE LONG AND SHORT TERMS.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan. 20.—The Democratic caucus met at 7:30 in the hall of the House of Representatives, Speaker Cauthorne presiding. There were 72 members present—21 Senators and 51 Representatives. Senators Reeve, Saringhausen, and Winterbotham, and Representatives Saint (of Henry County,) and Hosmer. The caucus decided to vote at 2:30 to-morrow.

Senator Hendricks came in late, and at the conclusion of the proceedings made a brief speech congratulating the caucus on its work. He said that any other result would have been a grievous disappointment to the great bulk of the Democracy, and as the choice of the caucus would be the choice of the Legislature, he could say that Indiana would be very "respectably represented" in the Senate Chamber of the nation. Reeve "ate his leek" with the gusto of Pistol, and moved to make Voorhees' short term unanimous, whereas Gen. Voorhees sent word that he would be here on March 6, and meet the Legislature just before its adjournment.

At the national caucus to-night there were eight persons present. Six of these, headed by Senator Majors, withdrew, and it is understood they will vote for Voorhees. The others, Poindexter and Noah Major, Representative, will votes for James A. Buchanan. He expects four votes to-morrow.

The Republicans have nominated Gen. Benjamin Harrison for the long term, and Hon. Godlove S. Orth for the short term.

INVESTIGATING RENO'S CONDUCT.

TWO MORE WITNESSES FOR THE DEFENSE TO BE SUMMONED—CONCLUSION OF THE SCOUT'S TESTIMONY.

CHICAGO, Jan. 20.—In the Reno inquiry today, Major Reno and his counsel asked leave to subpœna two more witnesses, making 26 in all, namely, J. Scott Payne and Sergt. Delaney, of Company I, Seventh Cavalry. The latter was present on the battle-field under Reno at the time of the massacre. The court granted the request.

During the reading of Saturday's testimony, Girard, the scout, made an important correction, saying that from letters now in his possession, which he did not have last Saturday, he had ascertained that it was 10 minutes after 2 o'clock instead of 10 minutes after 1 o'clock when Reno's command left the timber on its retreat across the river. The significance of the change is that it relieves Major Reno of explaining an hour's delay in going to Custer's relief. The examination of the witness was thus continued: Reno's position was about four miles from the point where Custer was found; Custer in order to Reno when the two separated was, "Major Reno, you will advance and try and overtake the Indians, and when you do so, charge them;" Reno turned away, and after he had gone about 10 feet Custer said, "And take the scouts with you." This order was given, Girard said, direct from Custer to Reno. It will be remembered that Lieut. Wallace testified that the order was brought to Reno by the regimental Quartermaster, Lieut. Cook. The witness said it was not an act of cowardice for Reno's troops to have moved out of the timber when they did. His judgment was, however, that for safety's sake, they ought to have remained in the timber.

CONTESTING THE CONTROL OF A COMPANY.

LISBON, N. H., Jan. 20.—Associate Justice Lewis W. Cook, of Manchester, has granted an injunction in favor of Isaac L. Homans, of New-York; Asa Smith, of Hartford, Conn.; John Pearce, Thomas Sherwin and others, of Boston, stockholders in the Upper Connecticut River and Lake Improvement Company, restricting Benjamin H. Corning, Alexander Beattie, Mr. Lancaster and others from doing any act as officers of said company or mutilating the company books. The plaintiffs complain that the defendants unlawfully issued false certificates of stock to themselves, thereby controlling the election of officers at the annual meeting of the corporation Jan. 7; also that they unlawfully refused to let plaintiffs vote, and that they elected themselves officers, and seized and mutilated the corporation books. The plaintiffs pray for the appointment of a Receiver or the restoration of the books and surrender of the false certificates and other relief. The hearing is to be held at Colebrook, at the February term of the court. The plaintiffs are interested in the Hartford (Conn.) Lumber Company, and in large tracts of lumber land in Northern New-Hampshire.

MR. COCKRELL'S FINANCIAL BILL.

THE RETIREMENT OF NATIONAL BANK NOTES PROPOSED — NO MORE BANKS TO BE CHARTERED—THREE PER CENT. BONDS TO BE ISSUED IN PLACE OF THOSE BEARING A HIGHER RATE OF INTEREST.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—The financial bill introduced in the Senate to-day by Mr. Cockrell, of Missouri, provides for an issue of Treasury notes equal in amount to the outstanding circulation of United States legal-tender notes and national bank notes, the notes to be "redeemable in coin at the pleasure of the United States, and receivable in payment of all dues and demands of the United States, except such obligations as may be payable in coin by express provision of existing laws." The Assistant Treasurers are to pay out these notes for current expenditures or in exchange for legal-tender and national bank notes, and must turn into the Treasury all legal tenders and bank-notes received by them. The Secretary of the Treasury, upon accumulating $5,000, or a multiple of that amount, of the notes of any national bank, shall notify such bank to redeem them, within 60 days, with the Treasury notes above provided for, or with drafts issued by an Assistant Treasurer, or coin, or coin certificates, and in the event of failure to comply with such demand for redemption, shall be followed by a stoppage of interest upon a corresponding amount of the bonds deposited by the bank to secure the circulation. The bill provides that from and after its enactment no additional national banks shall be chartered, nor shall any further issue of national bank notes be authorized. It is further provided that as fast as the bank-notes are redeemed the Secretary of the Treasury shall expend an equal amount of the new Treasury notes in the purchase of silver bullion, at a price not exceeding $1 of their full value for each 412½ grains of standard silver, to be coined into standard dollars, and as rapidly as they are coined he shall sell and redeem with them the outstanding 6 per cent. 5-20 bonds, and subsequently the 10-40 bonds of 1864, and the loan of 1858. To insure rapid coinage, authority is given to the Secretary to increase the Mint facilities by the expenditure of any amount of money that may be necessary.

The bill next requires certificates to be issued by the Treasurer or any Assistant Treasurer in return for deposits of gold bullion or standard silver dollars, in sums not less than $5, the certificates to be received at par, the same as United States Treasury notes, and whenever the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver is at par with the full value of the Treasury notes, the Secretary is required to receive deposits of silver bullion in the same way. The bill next provides that no discrimination shall be made against the silver dollar by any officer of the Government, but on the contrary they shall exercise the rightful option for the benefit of the people to redeem or pay in either gold or silver all bonds and other obligations which are payable by law in coin."

The Secretary is further authorized to issue $400,000,000 of new 3 per cent. bonds, in denominations of $50 and $100, to be sold at par for gold or silver dollars, with which to redeem outstanding bonds, and he is required to stop the sale of any bonds bearing a higher rate of interest than 3 per cent. The notice of stoppage of interest on called bonds is to be limited to 20 days. Upon the passage of the act it passes the Secretary to issue additional Treasury notes in exchange for any United States bonds the holder of which may desire such exchange, and provides that the additional notes thus issued may be re-exchanged at the Treasury for an equal amount of bonds whenever presented, the plan proposed being what is known as the "interconvertibility system."

THE POLYGAMY QUESTION.

A DELEGATION OF LADIES BEFORE THE SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE—A MODIFIED ANTI-POLYGAMY BILL INTRODUCED —GEORGE REYNOLDS' CONVICTION.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—Mrs. Spencer, of Washington; Mrs. Wells, wife of Daniel H. Wells, of Salt Lake City, and Selna Young Williams, daughter of the late Brigham Young, had an informal interview with members of the Senate Judiciary Committee this morning, in which they urged the repeal of the Anti-Poligamy law of 1862. During the afternoon, Senator Christiancy reported as a substitute for a pending bill a new measure amending the Revised Statutes so as to provide that every person who has a husband or wife living] who, in a Territory or other place over which the United States has exclusive jurisdiction, marries another, whether married or single, and any man who hereafter simultaneously or on the same day marries more than one woman, in a Territory or other place over which the United States has exclusive jurisdiction, shall be deemed guilty of bigamy and be punished by a fine of not more than $500 and by imprisonment for a term of not more than five years; but this section shall not extend to any person by reason of any former marriage, whose husband or wife by such marriage is absent for five successive years, and is not known to such person to be living, nor to any person by reason of any former marriage which has been dissolved by a decree of a competent court, nor to any person by reason of any former marriage which has been pronounced void by a decree of a competent court on the grounds of the nullity of the marriage contract. The foregoing provisions are not to affect the prosecution or punishment of any offense already committed against the provisions of law. The President is authorized to grant amnesty to such classes of offenders against the Anti-Polygamy law, and on such conditions and under such limitations as he shall think proper, but no such amnesty shall have effect unless the conditions thereof shall have been complied with. The issue of plural marriages, known as Mormon marriages, in cases in which such marriages have been solemnized according to the rites of the Mormon sect in any Territory of the United States, and if such issue shall have been born before the first day of November, 1879, are legitimatized and shall be entitled to all the rights of heirs and next of kin of their parents. Polygamists are disqualified from performing jury duty.

George Reynolds, the Utah polygamist, whose case was recently decided in the United States Supreme Court, filed to-day, through his counsel, Biddle & Sheeks, a petition for a rehearing, upon the ground that his sentence in the lower court to two years' imprisonment at hard labor was illegal, and contrary to the provisions of section 5,352 of the Revised Statutes. It is true that the statute says nothing about hard labor, but that point was not raised, and is improbable that the petitioner's plea for a rehearing will be granted.

SALT LAKE CITY, Jan. 20.—At a meeting of the Anti-Polygamy Society to-day the following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That we have appealed to our country-women to join us in urging Congress to pass laws to enable the courts to arrest simply for further polygamy. It was not the Gentiles, but the Utah Legislature, composed almost entirely of polygamists, which took the right of dower from the Utah wives of Gentiles, a Mormon robbery but shabbily compensated for by the granting of the electoral franchise. The anti-polygamists of Utah being in the minority, would be unable, if they desired, to afflict the Mormons or rob them. The Gentiles have paid for or created what they own in Utah. In mining they have $20,000,000 invested and are as much interested as the Mormons in maintaining personal rights. Since the announcement of the decision of the Supreme Court in the Reynolds case, there are no signs in Utah of a change of sentiment in regard to polygamy. The Congress that passed the act of 1862, that sustained the law are denounced by all Mormon editors and preachers, and there is a determination to adhere to polygamy almost universally expressed. If, under existing circumstances, Congress should grant amnesty to polygamists or adjourn without action, it would be regarded by the Mormons as a triumph of God and His saints over their enemies. Instead of granting amnesty for the past on mere promised obedience in the future, we ask Congress to enforce the existing prohibition of polygamy in the future. The difficulty of enforcing the law arises from the impossibility of securing legal evidence of plural marriages, and from the fact that jurors, grand and petit, are largely polygamous. Let Congress provide that these shall be excluded from the jury lists, and that polygamous marriages may be proved by the same evidences as is received in civil actions, and the courts could at once place polygamy in a process of ultimate extinction, which is all we ask. Such a law could not be abused. It would be entirely within the control of the Government. Thus can Congress force the abandonment of polygamy, and have not even the appearance of harsh treatment of the Mormons. These polygamous delegates charge that dram-drinking, dram-selling, prostitution, and kindred vices were unknown in Utah previous to the advent of the Gentiles, when it is a matter of public notoriety that Brigham Young owned a large distillery which supplied Utah saints and many outsiders with whisky; that Zion's Institution deals largely in intoxicating drinks; that it is a well-known fact that at the meetings of the Mormon priesthood, presided over by Brigham Young, every man confessed himself guilty of adultery outside of his polygamous relations, and that Mormon preachers publicly lament the great number of illegitimate births on purely Mormon settlements.

SOUTH CAROLINA TITLES TO PROPERTY.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—A decision was rendered by the United States Supreme Court to-day in the case of J. De Treville, plaintiff in error, against Robert Smalls. This was a suit to recover possession of a certain tract of land in the Town of Beaufort, S. C., sold for taxes during the late war by the United States District Commissioners, under the act of Congress for the collection of taxes in insurrectionary districts, passed March 13, 1863. The case was brought here upon a writ of error to test the validity of the so-called tax sale titles, by virtue of which more than half the land in Beaufort County, S. C., is now held. It is maintained by the former owners of the lands in controversy that the act of Congress levying the tax and imposing a penalty of 50 per cent. upon delinquents, is in violation of the second section of the first article of the Constitution; that the proceedings of the Commissioners prior to the sale were irregular; and that the certificates given by them to purchasers are invalid as conveyances of title. This court, however, sustains the judgment of the lower tribunal, by holding that the act of Congress in question is not unconstitutional; that the tax sale certificates are themselves presumptive evidence of all antecedent facts essential to their validity, and that they can be overthrown only by showing that the property which they conveyed was not subject to tax, that the taxes upon it had been paid previous to the sale, or that it had been redeemed. In the present case no evidence is offered sufficient to rebut the presumptive regularity and validity of the tax sale certificates, and the judgment of the Circuit Court is, therefore, affirmed. Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion, Mr. Justice Field dissenting. This decision, it is stated, will quiet title to more than 2,000 pieces of property in South Carolina.

THE LATE CALEB CUSHING.

CITIZENS OF MASSACHUSETTS IN WASHINGTON HONORING THE MEMORY OF THE DEAD STATESMAN.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—A number of citizens of Massachusetts, with ladies and friends, attended the public meeting at Masonic Temple to-night to manifest their respect for the late Caleb Cushing. Among those present were the Massachusett's Congressional delegation and Attorney-General Devens, who presided over the meeting. Major Ben Perley Poore submitted resolutions suited to the occasion and delivered a brief address on the character of the deceased. Representatives Loring and Banks, Senator Dawes, Richard S. Spofford, and Mr. Faunce, (the last-named President of the Massachusetts State Association, also addressed the meeting, the members of Congress alluding particularly to the remarkable traits in Mr. Cushing's character, his great learning, and varied public services, which, they said, placed him not only among the most prominent public men of Massachusetts, but among the great men of the United States. The resolutions having been adopted, Gen. Butler said that the character of Mr. Cushing was worthy of a more general recognition and more than a passing tribute, and therefore he moved the appointment of a committee, with a view to proceedings in the Hall of the House of Representatives similar to those recently held there in memory of the late Prof. Joseph Henry. The resolution was adopted, and the Chairman appointed as the committee Representatives Loring, Butler, Banks, and Robinson.

NOTES FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20, 1879.

The subscriptions to the 4 per cent. loan to-day amounted to $6,956,350.

The receipts from internal revenue to-day were $480,940 63, and from Customs $290,354 40.

There is no perceptible change in the condition of Associate Justice Hunt, who is still dangerously ill.

The Senate and House Committees on the Census held a joint meeting to-day, at which all the main features of the bill introduced by Representative Cox, of New-York, were agreed to, excepting his provision in regard to the manner of appointing the census Supervisors. This feature was laid over for consideration at the next meeting.

Hon. Beverly Tucker, who is now in this city, is receiving the surprised congratulations of his old friends upon his reappearance in the flesh. Through some error, telegraphic or otherwise, when Beverly Douglas, of Virginia, died recently, Mr. Tucker was announced in provincial journals as the deceased. Several newspapers published obituaries of Mr. Tucker, who is finding it a somewhat wearisome business to account for his presence Here after he has been killed by telegraph and accorded decent burial by the press.

Mr. Maish, of Pennsylvania, introduced in the House to-day 40 separate bills of the following tenor: "Be it enacted, &c., that there be paid to ——— of ——— County, Penn., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of ——— dollars in full compensation for the use and occupation of his dwelling and store during the late war, and for property belonging to him taken and used by the said troops." The aggregate amount of the bills is $67,131. They were all referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The Commissioner of Pensions has issued a series of rules in regard to the claims for arrears under the bill lately passed by Congress. They are as follows: First, that as soon as practicable after the Arrears bill lately passed by Congress shall have been approved by the President he will issue and publish instructions for the guidance of all persons who are entitled to arrears under its provisions; second, no claim for arrears under the provisions of the bill due to a pensioner already upon the rolls will be adjusted until Congress shall have appropriated the money for the payment of such claims; third, in the meantime inquiries made by interested persons in individual cases will be filed, but no answer made until they are taken up for adjustment.

The bill of Mr. Willis, of New-York, in relation to the Washington monument proposes that hereafter the work on the monument shall be treated as Government work, carried out by officers of the Government, and paid for by appropriations of the people's money, made year by year, till the work is completed. It also provides a Board of Managers, to consist of the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, and the Chairmen of the Senate and House Committees on Public Buildings. The Chief Engineer is made custodian of the funds, and is to disburse the same on vouchers certified by the engineer in charge of the work. The board is required to make a report annually to Congress of the progress of the work and the expenditure of the money.

In the executive session of the Senate this afternoon Mr. Edmunds delivered an elaborate speech in advocacy of a resolution, submitted by him, which provides for terminating so much of the treaty of Washington as relates to the fisheries by giving the notice required by its provisions. Mr. Edmunds' speech set forth in detail the statistical arguments, with which the public are familiar, showing that the interests of the United States, in view of the operations of the treaty after either of the Halifax Commission, would be promoted by the abrogation of the fishery clauses at as early a date as possible. By the terms of the treaty of Washington, which was ratified in June, 1871, the fisheries provisions are to continue in force for the period of 10 years from the date at which the laws were passed to put them into operation, and, further, until the expiration of a year after either of the high contracting parties shall have given notice to the other of its wish to terminate them. Senator Edmunds' resolution was, on his motion, referred to the Foreign Relations Committee. Contrary to present appearances, it will be adopted by the Senate without opposition, and President Hayes will promptly thereafter give the required notice to the Government of Great Britain.

ROBBED WHILE TRAVELING.

A LARGE AMOUNT OF DIAMONDS AND MONEY STOLEN FROM A NEW-YORK DIAMOND DEALER.

LOUISVILLE, Jan. 20.—The following information was given to the Police to-day. Detectives do not believe the story, and, it is said, they think the money was lost in New-Orleans. The Police memorandum reads: "Mr. A. Seligman, of New-York, diamond dealer at No. 423 Broadway, started last Saturday evening from New-Orleans to this city, by way of Montgomery, and this morning, when he arose from sleep, he discovered that a package containing diamonds valued at $3,600, together with $900 in money, was missing. The package was in an inside vest pocket. The vest, with other articles of clothing, was folded and placed under a pillow. His pistol and watch were both left untouched. The package contained nine $100 bills marked with the letter "S" in the right lower corner of each bill. The package contained seven pairs of solitaire diamond ear-rings, weighing from two to seven and a half carats each, three cluster rings, one of nine and two of seven stones; two sets of studs, one of two carats, and the other one and three-quarter carats, and 24 loose brilliants, weighing altogether eight carats."

AFFAIRS IN CUBA.

HAVANA, Jan. 20.—According to the laws creating the new municipalities, Mayors will exercise the functions of censorship over publications. Captain-General Campos, in a circular explaining the duties of censorship, says the public journals may discuss decorously all acts of the Administration, and discussion of the slavery question will be allowed so long as it does not go to the extent of exciting the negroes or fall into vain declamation against an evil everybody deplores.

Three hundred and eighty-two immigrants arrived to-day from the Canary Islands.

The pleasure-yacht Resolute, of New-York, has arrived from St. Thomas. All on board are well. She will probably remain here 10 days.

DETERMINED TO BEAT MME. ANDERSON.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—Miss May Marshall, of Chicago, began here to-night a walk of 2,700 quarter miles in 2,700 quarter hours. Before starting she made a speech in which she said that O'Leary, a Chicago man, had beaten England's best walkers, and that it was her purpose to show that a Chicago woman could beat Mme. Anderson, or any other English woman. She will conclude the feat, if successful, on the evening of Feb. 17. Six sworn time-keepers will keep her time.

THAWING OUT DYNAMITE CARTRIDGES.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 20.—Another explosion of dynamite occurred to-day at the Gunpowder Water works, a few miles from the city and near Shaft No. 13. It is said that nine cartridges, 1¼ inches in diameter and 9 or 10 inches in length, were place in the boiler-house, near the boiler attached to the shaft, for the purpose of being "thawed out." Soon after the cartridges exploded tearing the boiler-shed into fragments, knocking the boiler a distance of 50 feet, and fatally injuring John Holson, the engineer, and Michael Burke, a blacksmith.

STATE LAWS AND PROBLEMS

EXCISE LICENSES BY AUCTION.

THE SWEDISH PLAN TO BE EMBODIED IN A BILL TO BE INTRODUCED IN THE ASSEMBLY.

ALBANY, Jan. 18.—Mr. Jonathan Ogden, of Kings, will probably introduce a bill before long embodying a new idea of the Excise question. While the idea is new to this country, it is old in Sweden, where the plan of regulating the liquor business has been for some time materially that to be submitted to the attention of the Legislature. The bill will be the result of suggestions made by Mr. Alfred E. White, the owner of some improved tenements in the Sixth Ward of Brooklyn. He has seen the importance of making efforts to stop the granting of more licenses than are absolutely necessary, and he wishes to secure a law that can be enforced. Substantially his plan is as follows: The number of licenses to be issued for Brooklyn or any other city shall be fixed by the Board of Aldermen; in towns it may be fixed by the Supervisors. In Brooklyn each year they shall determine that one license only shall be granted for each 500 or 1,000 of the population. The number of licenses having been fixed, they shall be sold at auction to the highest bidder. The purchaser of a license shall give bonds, and be a proper person to receive a license, and the price for any license shall not be lower than the price now demanded. A bill embodying this plan was, it seems, passed in the Massachusetts Legislature and vetoed by Gov. Talbot, who does not look favorably upon license. It is claimed for the plan that it would do away with the possibility of political favoritism in the issue of licenses; that it would increase the revenue to the city in which it was adopted, and insure decent saloons and respect for the law. The tendency of the business would be into more responsible hands. It is known that Mr. White that the liquor-dealers make twice as much money as any other retailers, and that they pay much higher rents for stores than any other class of occupants.

INTERESTING TO DENTISTS.

A BILL REQUIRING A REGISTRY OF PRACTITIONERS TO BE KEPT.

ALBANY, Jan. 18.—Mr. Trowbridge, of Kings, a day or two ago introduced a Dentists bill, which escaped notice at first. It provides that all persons practicing dentistry, including dental students, shall, on or before May 1, 1879, register their names as dentists, or dental students, in the County Clerk's office of their respective counties, together with their term of pupilage, years of dental practice, and year of graduation from any dental college, with the date of license from the State Dental Society. No person shall practice the art of dentistry in any of its branches, operative or mechanical, after May 1, 1879, who has not attended two full courses of lectures in a dental or medical college. Nothing in the act is to apply to persons who have been actually continuously in the practice of dentistry since Jan. 1, 1876, and the penalty for violation of the act is to be a misdemeanor, punishable by $50 to $300 fine and six months' imprisonment. The bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee, which will, no doubt, hear from the old school of dentists before long. There are several professional dentists' cases in it, and one or two dentists here say that it does not appear to have come from dentists at all.

THE MANHATTAN SAVINGS INSTITUTION.

ALBANY, Jan. 20.—Mr. Flynn, of Kings, will to-morrow introduce a resolution calling upon the Bank Superintendent to report to the Assembly, at his earliest convenience, what is the exact condition of the Manhattan Institution for Savings in the City of New-York, and what is the relation of pending legal proceedings to the solvency, and whether, under the laws of this State, the senior proprietorship of the United States Treasury, in its assets of reissued registered bonds, is compatible with the continued existence of said savings bank? And whether further, and if so, what legislation is necessary to aid either said bank or its depositors?

NEW-JERSEY'S LAW-MAKERS.

FRESH LEGISLATION FOR JERSEY CITY—BILLS INTRODUCED—NOMINATIONS BY THE GOVERNOR.

TRENTON, Jan. 20.—Much interest has been manifested in various sections of the State as to the manner in which the Republicans of Hudson County would utilize the splendid victory achieved by them at the recent election. The particularly big plum to be plucked by the party, in a local aspect, is the control of the local Government of Jersey City. Two years ago the Democrats recaptured their own stronghold, and since then have given the people a Government as disgraceful as it has been partisan. It was the popular revolt against the rule of the rabble that made the Republican triumph a possible thing. The Republican members of the Assembly from Jersey City held a caucus in Taylor's Hotel yesterday morning to consider what reforms are needed, and what legislation should be offered. They concluded to wipe out the present extravagant system of government with its five or six executive boards of five or six members each, and to remand the powers exercised by the several local boards to the Board of Aldermen and the Mayor. The Police, Fire, and Works Commissioners are to be abolished, and the executive labors are to be supervised by committees of the Board of Aldermen. The Mayor is to nominate the heads of the departments, such as the Chief of Police; the Aldermen are to confirm or reject, and they are to receive their commissions directly from the Aldermen. That the scheme is not a partisan one is evident from the fact that Jersey City is a Democratic city, and the Board of Aldermen and Mayor are to be elected by the people. The Republicans offer their compensation in the cutting off of $200,000 needless expenditures, by simplifying the government, and in the fact that under the new system the city will have a class of officials who will not obtain those that now control them. A bill embodying the new system of government was to have been presented by Mr. Dusenberry this evening, but it was deferred till to-morrow.

The Senate had been in session for less than an hour this evening when the Governor sent in a batch of nominations for their action. In executive session W. H. Lloyd was confirmed Judge of the Warren County. That county has risen into notoriety as the home of the little Tweed Ring, most of whom stand in a fair way of going to State Prison. Mr. Morrow was counsel for some of the indicted officials, but though he is not known to have taken any active part in the crusade against the local thieves, his nomination is pronounced by those who have taken part in it to be a very acceptable one. His appointment to fill a vacancy, and he will at once take his seat on the bench. Among the names which were referred were those of Judge Lilly, of the Court of Errors, and of R. S. Jenkins, who, as the Prosecutor of Camden County, so vigorously prosecuted Hunter, both of which are renominations. Senator Sewall introduced a bill this evening which was probably suggested by the disgraceful exhibition of which each execution in the State of late years has been the occasion. It cuts off the attendance at hangings of the crowds of morbid curiosity-seekers who usually gather at them, and provides that none shall attend save 12 Grand Jurors, to be named by the court; 12 reputable Deputies, to be named by the Sheriff; the Sheriff's officers, and the family of the doomed man. A violation of the act is to be regarded as a contempt of court.

About 35 bills were introduced into the House. Among them are one from Mr. Dewitt providing for the overwhelming of the County Commissioners, instead of the Freeholders; one by Mr. Crane, reducing the salaries of the Essex County Judges and Prosecutor; one by Mr. Conkling, reducing the salary of the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court to $3,500, and the Associates to $3,000, and one by Mr. Duryea, exempting parsonages from taxation.

CONTINUING THE PHILADELPHIA EXHIBITION.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 20.—The annual meeting and election of Directors of the Permanent Exhibition was held to-day. The report shows that the receipts last year were $42,246 and the expenses $45,872. The liabilities of the concern are $380,807, and the assets are set down at about, $430,000.

STILL BALLOTING IN WISCONSIN.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Jan. 20.—The Republican caucus at Madison reassembled this evening and commenced balloting at once. Up to midnight 25 ballots were taken with varying results. The prospects are good for an all night sitting. The twenty-fifth ballot stood: Keyes, 20; Carpenter, 33; Howe, 20; Washburn, 5; McFelridge, 1.

SUPREME COURT, GENERAL TERM.

UTICA, N. Y., Jan. 20.—The following is the Supreme Court, General Term, calendar for Tuesday, Jan. 21. Nos. 33, 64, 72, 76, 90, 92, 310, 18, 35, 101, 102, 103, 3, 16, 25.

FROZEN WHILE GOING TO CHURCH.

CORNWALL, Ontario, Jan. 20.—John G. Ferguson, a farmer, was frozen to death in a cutter while on his way to church, at Williamstown, yesterday.

COURT OF APPEALS.

ALBANY, Jan. 20.—In the Court of Appeals to-day, the proceedings were as follows: No. 53—Isaac G. Gale, respondent, vs. The New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, appellant; argued by Mathew Hale for appellant, E. Countryman for respondent. No. 54—Wesley C. Miller, appellant, vs. The Mayor, &c., of New-York, respondent; argued by Elliot Sanford for appellant, D. J. Dean for respondent. No. 60—Thomas Clark, Sr., respondent, vs. The Central Park Railroad Company, appellant; argued by Henry Bookstaver for appellant, William Allan for respondent.

The following is the day calendar for to-morrow: Nos. 62, 64, 65, 67, 68, 70, 71, 75. Motion calendar—Nos. 339, 342, 347, 352, 354, 355.

DESTRUCTION OF A WOOLEN MILL.

LOSS OF $200,000 IN PHILADELPHIA—FULL LIST OF THE INSURANCES.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Jan. 20.—A fire occurred this morning at the woolen mill of John Brown & Sons, at Eighth and Tasker-streets. The entire contents were destroyed, the bare walls of the building alone remaining. The losses on the building and machinery are about $200,000. The origin of the flames, which were first discovered on the third floor, is unknown. Several smaller fires have occurred at the same place within the past few years.

The insurance is about $250,000. On the storehouse or sheds, at Eighth and Mountain streets, there is an insurance of $16,000, divided as follows: On the building, $3,000 in the Commonwealth of Boston; on the machinery, $3,000 in the Citizen's of Pittsburg, and on stock, $2,500 in the Continental of New-York, $2,500 in the Guardian of London, $2,500 in the Columbia of New-York, and $2,500 in the German-America of New-York. The insurance on the main building is divided among the following companies: German-American, Hanover, and Queen, $7,500 each; Continental, Firemen's Fund of California; Orient, of Hartford; National, of Hartford; Republic, Liverpool and London and Globe, French, Commercial Union, Scottish Commercial; Ætna, of Harsford; Delaware and Mutual, of New-Orleans, $5,000 each, and $2,500 each in the following: Phœnix, of Brooklyn; Home, of Newark; New-York City, Newark; Teutonia, National, Allegheny, Fairfield, Revere, Hamburg-Bremen, Alliance, of Boston; Firemen's Mutual, Manufacturers and Mechanics, of Newark; Rochester, New-York, Transatlantic, City of Richmond, of Virginia; American Central, Faneuil Hall, of Boston; Royal Canadian, Western, Millville, N. J.; Phœnix, of Hartford; Insurance Company of the State of Pennsylvania, Columbia, St. Paul, North-western National, People's, of New-Jersey; Virginia State; Farmers' of York, Penn.; Merchants' of New-York; Connecticut, Atlantic, of New-York; New-York Central, Roger Williams, Capitol City, People's, of Pitsburg; Citizens' of Pittsburg; Lycoming, of Pennsylvania; Springfield, Union, of Philadelphia; Tentonia, of Philadelphia; Citizens', of Missouri; United Firemen's, of Philadelphia; Lancaster, of Pennsylvania; Meriden, of Connecticut; Security, of Connecticut; Gloucester, of Massachusetts; Standard, of New-Jersey; Howard, of New-York; German, of Baltimore, New-York, and Boston; Mobile Underwriters, Kenton, of Kentucky; Trade, of New-Jersey; Rochester German, Merchants' and Mechanics', Newark City; Home, of California; Sun, of Philadelphia; Equitable, of Tennessee, and Ætna, of New-York, $3,750 each; Lancashire, $5,000.

OTHER LOSSES BY FIRE.

About 4:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon a fire was discovered in the basement of Tiffany's three-story brick building No. 9 Tiffany-place, Brooklyn, occupied by Waters Brothers as a carpet-lining factory. The fire was occasioned by a spark struck from a nail which came in contact with the machinery, igniting a heap of cotton waste. Fortunately, but four or five persons were working in the building at the time. The flames spread so rapidly that the whole lower floor was in a blaze before the arrival of the firemen. Two sisters, Mary C. Rosenbrock and Sarah Rosenbrock, who were at work on the second floor, became so terrified that they jumped from a window into the street. Both escaped with slight contused wounds. The firemen, working energetically, soon extinguished the fire. The loss on stock and machinery, which is fully covered by insurance, amounts to $5,000.

Fire was discovered in the lecture-room of the Sunday school building attached to the Second Presbyterian Church, Newark, at 2 o'clock yesterday morning. An alarm was given, and the Fire Department got to work promptly, but they were unable to save the building, as by daylight there was nothing left but the walls. The church itself was on fire at one time, but the flames were extinguished before any material damage was done. The loss is about $8,000, and is fully covered by insurance. The State Bank adjoining, is damaged about $2,500. The fire is supposed to have originated from the furnace. A slight fire occurred from the overheating of the furnace about a week ago, at which time the building was thoroughly overhauled, and the inspector pronounced it safe. William Axtell, a member of No. 1 Truck, was severely injured about the head by a falling beam.

Emmanuel congregational Church, at Moreland and Copeland streets, Boston Highlands, was burned this forenoon. The loss is $50,000, and the insurance about $35,000, in the following offices: Firemen's Insurance Company and the Shoe and Leather, each $7,000; Commonwealth, $7,000; New-York and Boston, $2,500; Mechanics' Mutual, of Boston, $7,000; Lorillard, of New-York, $4,000. The church was dedicated two years ago by the old Vine-Street Society.

A fire on the second floor of the three-story frame building in the rear of No. 1,909 First-avenue, owned by Thomas McNamara, who occupies the upper floor, caused a loss yesterday on the building and furniture of $1,000; insured in the Gebhard for $2,000.

The mills of W. L. Kidder, in Geneseo, Ill., which originally cost $37,000, together with $4,000 worth of stock, were destroyed by fire last evening. The stock is fully insured. The buildings are insured for $13,000.

The Occidental Hotel, A. Schultz's cigar factory, and other frame buildings, in Omaha, were burned early yesterday morning. Total loss, $20,000; insurance, $1,500.

A fire in Tallahassee, Fla., has destroyed the Episcopal Church rectory and school-house. The loss is $8,000.

THE EYE AND EAR INFIRMARY.

At the annual meeting of the Board of Directors of the New-York Eye and Ear Infirmary, the following gentlemen were elected officers for the ensuing year: Royal Phelps, President; Benjamin H. Field and Abram DuBois, M. D., Vice-Presidents; John L. Riker, Treasurer; Charles M. Allin, M. D., Secretary. The report of the Directors acknowledged the receipt of a legacy from the estate of Mary W. Danser of $5,000; a donation of $500 from Mrs. A. T. Stewart, to be applied to the payment of current expenses; a gift of $4,000 from Miss Julia Rhinelander, to endow a free bed in perpetuity, in memory of her beloved father, and to be named for him the "William C. Rhinelander Free Bed;" a donation of $150 from Mrs. Le Grand Lockwood, and the same amount from Mr. Thomas Holland, each to constitute the donor a "Life Governor;" a gift of $25 from Mr. James Stokes, and one of the same amount from Mr. James McGee for the purchase of spectacles; and an appropriation of $1,000 by the Board of Apportionment from the Excise fund. The report of the surgeons showed that during the year 1878, 11,781 new patients had been admitted for treatment in the three departments of the eye, ear, and throat, and a total number, since the foundation of the infirmary, of 227,432. The Treasurer's report exhibited a very economical administration of the funds committed to his charge, the year closing without incurring any debt. A cordial invitation was extended by the Directors to the public for a personal and thorough inspection of every department of the infirmary, in the confidence that it will be seen that an immense amount of practical benevolence is there accomplished, and that its claims upon the generosity of the citizens of New-York are fully equal to those of any other charity in the City.

A SUIT BY GEN. HANCOCK.

A suit in which the plaintiffs are Major-Gen. Winfield S. Hancock, his wife, and daughter, and the defendants George W. Rand and others, proprietors of the St. Cloud Hotel, was before Judges Davis, Brady and Ingalls, in the General Term of the Supreme Court, yesterday, on an appeal by the plaintiffs. In November, 1873, Gen. Hancock and family went to live at the St. Cloud Hotel, agreeing to pay $385 per month for board and apartments. At the end of the month Gen. Hancock made a contract with the defendant for board and lodging for himself, wife, and daughter at the rate of $265 per month. This contract was continued until June, 1874. In the meantime the General's apartments in the hotel were entered three times by thieves, and robbed of property, amounting in the aggregate, $3,100, for the recovery of which sum plaintiff is now suing. The suit was referred to Horatio F. Averill, who made a report against Gen. Hancock on the ground that when he made a contract with the defendants there relations to him were changed, and they put off that responsibility which a hotel-keeper has toward a temporary visitor at his house. In other words, in the eye of the law, they became mere keepers of a boarding-house, so far as Gen. Hancock was concerned, and were relieved of the responsibility previously held toward him. It was from the judgment founded upon this report of the Referee that the appeal argued yesterday was made. Decision was reserved.

SUDDEN DEATH OF A PHRENOLOGIST.

Robert Dilks, aged 60, an Englishman, died suddenly, while reading a newspaper yesterday at his residence, No. 66 West Fourth-street. Mr. Dilks was a phrenologist, and was well known among the brokers, bankers, and merchants in and about Wall-street. For the past 20 years he almost daily canvassed that part of the City, and made money by "feeling" the heads of his patrons. Many of the business men down town have the "characters" still in their possession which "Dr." Dilks furnished them.

FAILURE OF A HARDWARE FIRM.

A schedule of the assets and liabilities of Messrs. George Guental & Son—the firm consisting of George and Louis Guental—hardware dealers, who made an assignment to Thomas Alexander, Jr., was filed in the Court of Common Pleas yesterday. Their liabilities are $115,137 07; nominal assets, $119,693 41, and real assets, $41,012 95. The Assignee filed a bond for $55,000. The principal creditors are: George Law, $31,000; estate of George Barclay, $19,000 and George Ponsort, of France, $19,500.

THE PACIFIC RAILROADS.

THEIR PLACE IN POLITICS.

ACTIVITY OF THE RAILROAD LOBBY—GOVERNMENTAL SUPERVISION OVER THE PACIFIC ROADS—EXISTING ACTS AGAINST DISCRIMINATION—CONTINUED VIOLATION OF LAW BY THE UNION AND CENTRAL PACIFIC COMPANIES.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Jan. 19, 1879.

While one branch of the railroad lobby is working every available lever to raise the Texas Pacific scheme in Congressional favor, and another branch, headed by Huntington, of the Central Pacific, is doing all it can to oppose the Texas Pacific measure by diverting attention to the Southern Pacific Road, (which is being built without any subsidy,) with the ulterior view of maintaining the Central Pacific monopoly, officers of the Government and members of Congress have been examining into the manner in which the companies managing the present completed Pacific roads are performing their obligations to the Government and the public. It must be said that the information hitherto obtained shows a state of affairs which is very unsatisfactory. Although most of the railroad companies from which reports are required under the act of last year creating the Bureau of Railroad Accounts have cheerfully rendered such reports, the fact that the Union Pacific refused at first and complied, at last, reluctantly and under protest, and that the Central Pacific has disregarded the law completely, so that suits have had to be brought in the name of the Government to recover the fines imposed, show that these two great corporations, which together form a consolidated monopoly, are steadily hostile to any and every law asserting Governmental authority over them, and to every attempt of the Government to exercise its right of supervision over the manner in which they transact the commercial transportation business of the country. Whenever the Government, or some other railroad company, or a citizen of the United States whose rights under the Pacific Railroad acts have been disregarded by the members of this monopoly, move in the matter of redress, Gould and Huntington step forward with their army of lawyers, and protracted and never-ending litigation is the consequence. The Thurman Funding act, which became a law last Summer, provided not only for final payment of the Union and Central Pacific Companies' bonded indebtedness to the Government, but also for the enforcement of the rights of the United States in other respects under previous acts of Congress. The question of the ultimate liquidation of the maturing liabilities of those companies to the Government, which was the leading object of the Funding act, having been thus disposed of by it—although a suit involving its constitutionality is pending in the Supreme Court of the United States—attention is now directed to the fact that the Union Pacific Company especially still continues to disregard its obligations to the Kansas Pacific and other branches of the Pacific Railroad system, the Government of the United States, and the people at large with respect to the operation of its road in connection with the branch lines as one continuous line, without discrimination of any kind. The result is that not only are the interests of the companies named seriously affected, but the business interests of the public are greatly injured, and the rights, as well as the security of the United States in all the branch roads, are materially endangered. The law prohibiting this subject are explicit. First, section 12 of the act approved July 1, 1862—the original Pacific Railroad act—provides that—

"The track upon the entire line of railroad and branches shall be of uniform width, to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, so that, when completed, cars can be run from the Missouri River to the Pacific coast; the grades and curves shall not exceed the maximum established for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad; the whole line of said railroad and branches and telegraph shall be operated and used for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and Government are concerned, as one continuous line, and shall afford equal facilities in all respects to each equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation, without any discrimination of any kind on account of the ownership of any or either of said companies, or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others."

The roads having been completed, and the Union Pacific Company having from the first refused to comply with this organic act, in 1874 Congress passed a penal act providing that there should be added to the above-named section of the act of 1864 the following words:

"And any officer or agents of the companies authorized to construct the aforesaid roads, or of any company engaged in operating either of said roads, who shall refuse to operate and use the road and telegraph under his control, and which he is engaged in operating, for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and the Government are concerned, as one continuous line, or shall refuse in such operation and use, to afford and secure to each of said roads equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, or transportation, with the discrimination of any kind in favor of, or adverse to, the road or business of any or either of said companies, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000, and may be imprisoned not less than six months. In case of failure or refusal of the

FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

THIRD SESSION—Jan. 20.

SUMMARY.

In the Senate, among other bills introduced, was one to retire the national bank circulation and to provide for an elastic currency. Mr. Morgan reported a series of resolutions, which had been agreed upon by the Democrats in caucus, as a substitute for Mr. Edmunds' resolutions, reciting in effect that the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments are as binding as any other part of the Constitution, and declaring that the punishment of violators of election rights rests with the State Governments, and not with the United States. The consideration of the Patent bill was then resumed in Committee of the Whole, and, after various amendments had been acted upon, the bill was reported to the Senate. Without taking final action the Senate went into executive session, and soon after adjourned.

In the House of Representatives, under the regular call of the States, a large number of bills were introduced, among them being one to prevent the adulteration of food and drink; one to repeal all laws regarding the appointment and pay of Election Supervisors; and one by Mr. Springer, of Illinois, equalizing the representation of the various States in Congress. Mr. Potter asked leave to offer a resolution for the investigation of the cipher dispatches, but Mr. Butler objected. The bill for the settlement of outstanding claims against the District of Columbia was then considered in Committee of the Whole and passed.

SENATE.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War inclosing letters from Gens. Sherman, Sheridan, and Terry recommending an appropriation of $125,000 for the erection of military head-quarters at Fort Snelling, Minn. The Secretary concurs in the recommendation. Referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a communication from the Secretary of War inclosing a letter of Major Ludlow, of the Engineer Corps, in regard to estimates for the protection from overflow of fortification sites on the Delaware River, and a letter from the Chief of Engineers submitting estimates for the cost of certain repairs at Sandy Hook, N. J. Referred to the Committee on Commerce at the request of Mr. Conkling, of New-York, to be considered in connection with the River and Harbor Appropriation bill.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS.

The following bills were introduced and referred:

By Mr. DORSEY, of Arkansas—Making an appropriation for the support of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880. Referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia for revision.

By Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee—To empower the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to revise, correct, or annul special assessments, upon the written application of any person whose real property in said District has been assessed, and providing for an appeal to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia from the action of the Commissioners in respect to such application by any person feeling aggrieved thereby. Referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. COCKRELL, of Missouri—To provide a uniform national currency; to retire the notes of the national banks, and to prohibit their incorporation and their issue of notes; to utilize silver and silver coin, and provide for the issue of silver and gold certificates; to provide for the redemption or payment of the bonds of the United States and the issue of bonds bearing a lower rate of interest, and to provide for the circulation of the proceeds of such currency to meet the business interests and wants of the people. Laid on the table, to be called up hereafter by Mr. Cockrell for the purpose of submitting remarks in favor of its passage.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

Messrs. CONKLING and KERNAN, of New-York, presented a preamble and resolution of the New-York Legislature opposing the passage of the bill to reorganize the Army, or at least that portion of it relating to the Ordnance Department. United States Senator and ordnance officer. Laid on the table, the bill having been reported to the Senate.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. BRUCE, of Mississippi, from the Committee on Pensions, reported favorably on the bill to increase the pension of Dr. Mary E. Walker. Placed on the calendar. [It increased her pension to $20 per month].

Mr. WITHERS, of Virginia, from the same committee, reported favorably on the House bill granting a pension to Eliza B. Anderson, widow of Gen. Robert Anderson. Placed on the calendar.

STATE RIGHT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. MORGAN, of Alabama, submitted the following resolutions, intended to be substitutes for the resolutions of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Edmunds]:

First—As the judgment of the Senate that the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the United States are as valid and binding as any other part of the Constitution; that the people of the United States have conferred no power in the enforcement of the whole Constitution in every State and in the Territories of the United States; and that it is alike the right and duty of the United States to maintain all the powers delegated to them, to inforce said amendments, and to protect every citizen in the exercise of all the rights thereby secured.

Second—That the Government of the United States and the Governments of the several States are distinct, and each has citizens of its own, who owe it allegiance and are entitled to, within its jurisdiction it exercises, exact that the Government of the United States is one of delegated powers alone: its authority is defined and limited by the Constitution of the powers not granted by that instrument nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States respectively or to the people; and that no right can be asserted under the Constitution, or secured though the laws of the United States, except such as the Government of the United States has the authority to grant or secure.

Third—That the Constitution of the United States has not conferred the right of suffrage upon any one, and the United States has no citizens of their own creation in the States; but the Fifteenth Amendment of the Constitution has invested the citizens of the United States with a new security for a right, which is not to be denied or abridged by the United States or any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and it is within the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States, which Congress may exert by appropriate legislation, to prevent a denial or abridgement by a State of the right of a citizen to vote, when such denial or abridgement is on account of race or color or previous condition of servitude of the voter.

Fourth—That when such right to vote is denied or abridged by the conduct of a person who is not so acting by the authority and in obedience to the laws of a State, the jurisdiction to punish such conduct is in the State Government, and is not in the Government of the United States.

Laid on the table for the present. [The above resolutions were agreed upon by the Democrats in caucus, and Mr. Morgan was authorized to present them to the Senate.]

A NEW ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ANTHONY, of Rhode Island, submitted a resolution that at the conclusion of the morning business each day, after this day, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the calendar, and continue such consideration until 5:30 o'clock; that bills not objected to shall be considered, each Senator being entitled to speak five minutes. Agreed to.

THE PATENT BILL.

The morning hour having expired, the Senate resumed consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill to amend the Patent laws, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, "That it shall not be lawful to grant any reissue of any patent for any invention except the invention which was embraced in the original patent." After a brief discussion it was agreed to—yeas 39, nays none.

The bill having been considered in Committee of the Whole, was reported to the Senate, the question being on concurring in the amendments made in committee.

Mr. WINDOM, of Minnesota, moved to lay aside the bill temporarily and take up the Naval Appropriation bill. In explanation of his motion, he said his object was to give time to prepare an amendment which would make the bill more acceptable to his constituents.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

Pending discussion, the Senate, on motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, at 2:30 P. M., went into executive session, and, when the doors were reopened, adjourned until to-morrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

NEW BILLS INTRODUCED.

Under the call of States the following bills were introduced and referred:

By Mr. HENDEE, of Vermont—For the payment of interest on the funded debt of the District of Columbia, and for refunding the said debt.

By Mr. BANKS, of Massachusetts—To regulate the rank of the staff of the Marine Corps.

By Mr. COX, of New-York—For the permanent accommodation of the Library of Congress.

Also, amending the laws in relation to steam vessels.

Also, setting apart a portion of Bedloe's Island in New-York Harbor for the use of the Marine Hospital service.

By Mr. EICKHOFF, of New-York—Amending the Navigation laws.

By Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania—To prevent adulteration in articles of food and drink.

By Mr. TUCKER, of Virginia, (by request)—Regulating the compensation of railroads for carrying the mails.

By Mr. MONEY, of Mississippi—To pay certain mail contractors of the Southern States for carrying mails prior to the war.

By Mr. KLOTZ, of Louisiana—Granting right of way and making a grant of land to the New-Orleans, Texas and Colorado Railroad.

By Mr. DURHAM, of Kentucky—To repeal all laws in regard to the appointment and pay of Supervisors of Election and their aids.

By Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky—To regulate charges on Pullman palace and other sleeping-cars patented by the United States.

By Mr. WHITTHORNE, of Tennessee—Amending the rules of the House so that every Tuesday shall be set apart for the consideration of business on the public calendar.

By Mr. BENNETT, of Tennessee—Making the trade and Mexican dollars a legal tender.

By Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois, to authorize the issue of coin certificates in lieu of gold and silver certificates for deposit in the Treasury.

By Mr. LATHROP, of Illinois, for Pullee regulations in the various Indian reservations.

By Mr. DUNNELL, of Minnesota, repealing all acts relative to the pre-emption of public lands.

Also for the survey of and sale of public lands.

By Mr. LOVING, of Massachusetts, amending the laws in regard to violations of the elective franchise.

THE CIPHER DISPATCHES.

The business of the District of Columbia having come up under the rule at 2 o'clock, Mr. POTTER, of New-York, asked Mr. Blackburn, of Kentucky, Chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, to yield to him as that he might offer a resolution connected with the investigation of electoral frauds.

Mr. BLACKBURN asked whether the resolution would lead to discussion.

Mr. POTTER replied that his purpose was to move to suspend the rules.

Mr. BLACKBURN said that with that understanding he would yield the floor.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, said that he proposed to object to the offering of the resolution unless there could be some debate upon it.

Mr. POTTER said that he understood that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Butler] would not occupy much time, and he also understood that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Reed] desired to discuss the resolution. He therefore suggested that it be allowed to report the resolution to-morrow after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Pennsylvania, called for the reading of the resolution.

The resolution was read. It recites that certain alleged telegrams in cipher have been published indicating that attempts were made after the Presidential election of 1876 to influence, by money or other fraudulent methods, the vote of Florida or the action of canvassing officers in the States of Florida, South Carolina, and Oregon. It, therefore, directs the committee on the investigation of election frauds to inquire into, and into any other matter connected with such election which in its judgment may be proper, with power to send for persons and papers, and to report at any time. Also appropriating $10,000 for the purpose of defraying expenses.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, said he hoped there would be no objection to the resolution.

The SPEAKER said that objection had been made, and the question was that there was already a motion to suspend the rules pending since last Monday.

Mr. CONGER, of Michigan, remarked (satirically) that he disliked very much the delay of a single day.

Mr. POTTER reported that the gentleman should try and have his own side of the House withdraw its objection.

The matter then went over, with the understanding that the resolution is to be reported to-morrow.

THE DAVENPORT AND BLODGETT INVESTIGATION.

Mr. KNOTT, of Kentucky, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, reported a resolution to defray the expenses of the Davenport and Blodgett investigations ordered to be made by that committee. Adopted.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The House, then, at 2:50, went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Hartzell, of Illinois, in the chair, on the bill to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction thereof on the Court of Claims.

Mr. EDEN, of Illinois, opposed the bill as conferring unlimited jurisdiction and opening the door to all sorts of claims for damages in connection with changes of grade, &c. He offered an amendment limiting the jurisdiction to cases of contract arising since 1871. Agreed to.

After several amendments had been offered and rejected, the committee rose and the bill was reported to the House and passed.

On motion of Mr. BLACKBURN, Thursday, Jan. 30, was set aside for the consideration of bills reported from the District Committee.

EQUAL REPRESENTATION.

Mr. SPRINGER, of Illinois, introduced a bill to secure to the people of every State equal and just representation. Referred. It provides that after the next census the Legislature of each State shall apportion the State under the census, and, moreover, that when more than two members are elected, the State shall be divided into districts of three members each as far as possible, and when there are two and Representatives, that is, over three or six or nine, &c., there shall be one district, consisting of five members. In districts consisting of three members every elector shall vote for only two members of Congress, and in districts entitled to five members every elector shall vote for three members. Mr. SPRINGER presented, in connection with the bill, a statement showing that under it there would have been elected at the last November election from the Southern States 34 Republicans instead of six, (or a Republican gain of 28,) while the Democrats would have realized a like gain in the North; that the general result would be the same, in short, that Republican minorities at the South and Democratic minorities at the North would have been equally represented in Congress, and that the 4,000,000 of colored people would control the election of 22 members in the following States: Alabama, 3; Arkansas, 1; Georgia, 3; Louisiana, 2; Mississippi, 2; North Carolina, 2; South Carolina, 2; Tennessee, 2; Texas, 2; Virginia, 2.

The House, at 5 o'clock, adjourned.

NOMINATIONS BY THE PRESIDENT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—The President sent the following nominations to the Senate to-day:

William G. Thompson, of Iowa, to be Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of Idaho Territory; William K. Burchinell to be Receiver of Public Moneys at Fair Play, Col.; Eli Van Volkenburg, Hillsdale, Mich.; William E. Stewart, South Haven, Mich.; C.V.R. Pond, Quincy, Mich.; Robert Root, Portland, Mich.; John F. Ford, Cheboygan, Mich.; Lewis C. Mead, Ovid, Mich.; David Hebert, Holly, Mich.; John Phipps, East Plainville, Mich.; Charles W. Woods, Burlington, Wis.; George Richardson, Fort Howard, Wis.; William H. Waterbury, Augusta, Wis.; Samuel M. Clark, Keokuk, Iowa; Augustus H. Hamilton, Ottumwa, Iowa; James F. Vaughan, Lawrenceburg, Ind.; John Walker, Aurora, Ind.; Philip E. Ezekial, Beaufort, S. C.; Charles M. Thompson, Opelousas, La.; Alonzo E. Haynes, Eureka, Cal.; Louis A. FOUND GUILTY OF FORGERY.

The case of John Jones, alias Isaac Hoffman, a resident of New-Jersey, charged with uttering a forged check for $150, drawn on the Chatham National Bank, on C. Godfrey Gunther's Sons, in payment for a seal-skin sacque, was submitted to the jury by Judge Gildersleeve, in General Sessions, yesterday. A verdict of guilty was rendered, and, at the prisoner's request, sentence was postponed until Monday next.

SUIT FOR BREACH OF PROMISE.

Suit for breach of promise of marriage has been brought in the City Court of Brooklyn by Sarah Anne Garbett against Lawson Creighton, of No. 7 High-street. Miss Garbett claims $20,000, and Creighton, who was arrested on a warrant issued by Judge McCue, has given $3,000 bail to appear and defend the suit. The complaint alleges that a year ago the defendant, who is a tea merchant, doing business in this City, promised to marry her. The marriage was fixed for August last, but in that month Creighton asked to have the ceremony deferred until the 25th of December following. In the meantime Miss Garbett, relying on the defendant's promise to marry her, spent $2,500 on a wedding trousseau, and, moreover, suffered Creighton to lead her from the paths of virtue. The case will be tried at an early day.

The Signal Service Bureau report indicates for to-day, in this region, partly cloudy weather, with low but slowly-rising temperature, north-west winds shifting to westerly and southerly, slight rise, followed by falling, barometer, and light snow.

The Republican joint Legislative caucus met last night to take preliminary steps toward returning, for a third term, Roscoe Conkling to the Senate of the United States. The preliminary steps consisted chiefly of laudatory speeches, among which the "spread-eagle" oration of Mr. Husted was so preposterously fulsome as to make its subject as well as its author ridiculous. The harmony of the occasion was not disturbed by the slightest reference to any sins of omission or of commission with which Mr. Conkling might be justly charged, and there was absolute unanimity in designating him as the choice of the caucus. While the joint caucus unquestionably fulfilled the behest of the majority of New-York Republicans in their nomination for Senator, they as obviously failed to represent party feeling in allowing Mr. Conkling's election to pass without a word of warning or of protest. Yesterday's proceedings were altogether too like a Romish canonization ceremony with the Devil's Advocate omitted. Some one might at least have had the manliness to remind New-York's "favorite son" that he must make up his mind to be rather less of a time-server than he has been of late years, if he hopes to retain either the respect or the confidence of intelligent Republicans in this or any other State.

The Democratic caucus was chiefly remarkable for the silly attempt of Mr. Ecclesine to induce his associates to declare that they were members of a Legislature de facto and not de jure, and in that capacity to file a protest to be submitted to the United States Senate against the validity of the election of Mr. Conkling. The basis of his motion was the alleged failure of the Republican majority to comply with the requirements of the Constitution as to the reapportionment of the State. There was enough good sense among the thirty-five Democrats who participated in the caucus to vote down this proposal, and to substitute for it a resolution appointing a committee to draft an address to the people of the State on the great apportionment grievance. Mr. Dorsheimer received the empty honor of the Democratic caucus nomination for United States Senator.

The flurry in French political affairs has subsided as rapidly as it rose. There is a certain Gallic suddenness in the adjustment of "the crisis" which borders on the grotesque. The Left desired that the Cabinet should be reorganized to conform to the changed aspect of politics, and it was particularly desired that Republicans of fixed views should be in control of the Army. This was resisted by the MacMahon Cabinet, and it was thought that a division in the Assembly would sustain a vote of want of confidence in the Ministry. After several days of agitation, during which party feeling ran high, the Left accepted a compromise, yesterday, and the Assembly voted to pass the order of the day, "trusting that the Ministry will not fail to give satisfaction, notably in regard to the administrative and judicial staff." This is at once a compromise and a postponement. The Cabinet is not to be reconstructed now, but, unless gradual changes are made in the interest of the party in a majority in France, the crisis is sure to come again.

A subscriber in Cincinnati directs attention to a petty swindle on the Government which appears to be practiced in New-York newspaper offices. In acknowledging receipt of a specimen copy of The Weekly Times, sent to him at his own request, and duly stamped at the casual newspaper rate, our correspondent adds:

"It may not be uninteresting to you to learn that out of three of your City papers sent me, in response to similar requests, yours alone had the postage prepaid, the others, taking advantage of the law, came free as if to a regular subscriber. In the proper estimate of a paper assuming to be a guide in public politics and morals, such a circumstance is not without its influence. It was felt by me, for what confidence could one have in the sincerity of a paper whose practices were at such variance with its precepts?"

We need hardly commend these remarks to our contemporaries as an illustration of the truth that "honesty is the best policy," since they would doubtless reply that they save a good deal more by the species of dishonesty referred to than they would gain by a conscientious observance of the law. If honesty is to be practiced merely because it pays, there must be a little more vigilance on the part of the Post Office Department in checking this "sample newspaper" swindle, and possibly some change in the law looking to the infliction of exemplary penalties for disregarding it.

The Glasgow Bank Directors were placed on trial yesterday, on an indictment containing seventeen charges, the chief of which is said to be "for falsehood, fraud, and willful imposition, fabrication and falsification of balance sheets, with intent to defraud the members of the bank and the public." Some of the Directors are further charged with overdrawing their accounts without giving adequate security, and with embezzling the amounts overdrawn by them. There are also charges of theft or embozzlement of bills amounting to over $23,000, which were received by the bank for collection, but which the Directors caused to be sent to London to be discounted. In its progress and its results, the trial will probably furnish some instructive reminders to courts on this side of the Atlantic which have recently shown a disposition to give delinquent managers of financial corporations the benefit of every technicality known to legal practice or judicial precedent.

THE APPROACHING POLITICAL DEBATE.

It may have been the intention of Mr. Edmunds to occupy the time of the Senate—leisure or otherwise—with a debate on general politics, but whether that was his purpose or not, it is evident that a debate of considerable extent is likely to result from his resolution recently offered touching the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments, and the duty of Congress to protect the right of suffrage in elections for Representatives. The Democratic Senators have held two caucuses with reference to the position which they should take regarding the resolution, and at the second, yesterday, they agreed upon a substitute which they have proposed and will sustain. It is obvious that if Mr. Edmunds' resolution shall pass the Senate, as there is no reason why it should not, that will be the end of the matter for this session. No legislation could be got through even the Senate in the time which remains before the 4th of March, and none which the Senate would agree on can be got through the present House, or, for that matter, the next one. Whatever may be the validity or authority of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments, or of the provisions of the Constitution regulating Congressional elections, they have been evaded and defied so successfully at the South that the Democrats are fully able to prevent any additional legislation or any appropriation necessary to carry them into effect. Debate, and nothing else, will be all that will come of Mr. Edmunds' move.

The Democratic Senators do not dispute the validity of the amendments at the present time. In this they show their accustomed shrewdness. They would only excite suspicion and animosity by any such dispute, and if, while they admit the validity of the new provisions, they can explain away all their force, they will gain credit for magnanimously surrendering technical grounds of opposition not without strength, while deriving all the advantages of a successful contest on the question of validity itself. Moreover, the obligations of consistency sit very lightly on Democratic consciences, and the fact that they have conceded the validity of the amendments in 1879 will not trouble men like Mr. Thurman or Mr. Kernan, if they should find it desirable to deny such validity a year or two later.

In the meantime the Democrats content themselves with reciting a number of abstract propositions in constitutional law in regard to the relations of the States and the United States, but they are silent in regard to another quite distinct and important portion of Mr. Edmunds' resolution, which asserts the rights and duties of Congress with reference to elections of members of the House of Representatives. No one, we presume, will be prepared or inclined to deny that the "Government of the United States and the Governments of the several States are distinct, and each has citizens of its own who owe it allegiance, and whose rights, within its jurisdiction, it must protect," or "that the Government of the United States is one of delegated powers alone," or that "its authority is defined and limited by the Constitution," or any other of the half dozen truisms with which the second resolution of the Democratic caucus is filled. There may be differences of opinion in regard to the application of these propositions, and the lines of action which may be defended by them. This is evident from the fact that these same declarations were relied on by the rebel leaders to sustain their attempt to break the Union and set up a separate and independent Confederacy, while they were not disputed by Mr. Lincoln and the leaders of the Unionists, who, nevertheless, found themselves forced to suppress the rebellion with arms, and to utterly annihilate the Confederacy which it sought to establish. The result of that dispute goes far to clear away misunderstandings as to the interpretation of propositions to which in the abstract all give adhesion. When, therefore, the Democrats of the Senate parade these propositions, the country will ask how they mean to apply them, and the application will be judged by the light of the events of 1861 to 1865. More iteration will no longer answer.

As to the amendments proper, the Democratic caucus declares:

"That the Constitution of the United States has not conferred the right of suffrage upon any one, and the United States have no voters of their own creation in the States; but the fifteenth amendment of the Constitution has invested the citizens of the United States with a new constituent right, which is exemption from discrimination in the exercise of the elective franchise on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

But it adds:

"That when such right to vote is denied or abridged by the conduct of a person who is not so acting by the authority and in obedience to the laws of a State, the jurisdiction to punish such conduct is in the State Government, and is not in the Government of the United States."

In other words the Constitution exempts citizens of the United States from discrimination, but leaves it wholly to the States to enforce the exemption as against individuals. This is not new doctrine. It was long ago agreed to by the Democratic authorities as the most convenient mode of evading the amendments. It ought not to be very difficult to explain either its motive or its operation.

But it will be seen that the caucus has nothing to say regarding the portion of Mr. Edmunds' resolution which asserts the duty of Congress to protect legally qualified voters in the exercise of the right of suffrage in elections of Representatives. It is not likely, however, that they will be allowed to hide their views, whatever they may be, on this point. It is one of real consequence. It is clearly defined by the Constitution. It has been made the basis of legislation, and that legislation is not enforced. If it were, the present and the succeeding House would not be Democratic. If no other advantage accrues to the country from the debate now impending, it will be some satisfaction to know what the Democratic leaders have to offer in regard to this latest and most disgraceful example of nullification.

RETALIATION AND RECIPROCITY.

Some of the Canadian newspapers see in Sir E. Thornton's visit to Ottawa more than an act of courtesy to the Governor-General. By these the occurrence is connected with a proposal on the part of the Washington authorities to reopen reciprocity negotiations, as a means of averting the hostile tariff changes to which the new Government of the Dominion is pledged. A more probable explanation would be, that the sensible gentleman who represents Great Britain at Washington perceives the folly of the tariff policy vaguely expounded by Sir John A. Macdonald and his colleagues, and is anxious to avert the irritation and mischief that must follow a literal fulfillment of their promises.

Whatever be the facts with regard to Sir E. Thornton, there seems no reason to doubt that the Protectionists, to whom the MacDonald Government is indebted for its existence, are pushing their demands with great persistency. With the politicians the question was one of mere convenience. It furnished the leverage whereby they lifted themselves into office; and having served its purpose, they would gladly let the question drop. The Dominion manufacturers, however, look at it from a different point of view. Rightly or wrongly, they insist that high protective duties are essential to their prosperity. A gathering in their interest has been held at Ottawa, and the result of its deliberations, as presented in the Toronto Globe, shows how they propose to utilize the influence they have acquired. The schedule adopted as the basis of Parliamentary action doubles the general tariff. The rate now is 17½ per cent.; if the protectionists carry their point it will be 35 per cent. The particular changes are all in the same direction, though not in the same degree, and are mainly directed against natural and manufactured products of the United States. Indeed, if the Globe is correctly informed, the intention is as far as possible to discriminate against imports from this country as compared with duties on articles imported from England. Of course, avowed discrimination will not be attempted. But the intention is to tax most heavily American goods, raw or manufactured, while taxing lightly English goods. By this device it is expected that imperial opposition will be overcome, and the Canadian Tories saved from the dilemma in which they would be involved by an unqualified fulfillment of protectionist threats.

With the effect of this policy upon the Canadians, other than manufacturers, we have little to do. If our own experience is of any value, it is certain that any probable gain in the form of an abnormal manufacturing development will be trifling in comparison with the loss inflicted upon the greater portion of the community. This would be the case were Canada situated more favorably than it is. But keeping in mind the relative strength and resources of Canada and the United States, it is clear that in its desire to foster special interests at the expense of this country, Canada will inflict substantial damage upon itself. Its farmers will suffer that its manufacturing interest may grow rich. They will be obliged to pay more for what they buy, while getting less for what they sell. The direct effect upon this country will be confined to the States conterminous with the Provinces. The Toronto journal appears to apprehend that we shall retaliate by discriminating against Canadian trade. This is hardly probable. Tariff reform slumbers at Washington, but the disposition to make bad worse, even for the sake of "getting even" with spiteful neighbors, is not likely to be strong enough to influence Congress. Naturally, there will be less trade with Canada than now. One-sided trade cannot last long, and if we are shut out of the Dominion by a Chinese tariff, we shall soon cease to be customers. A local feeling of alienation will spring up. Commercial intercourse will be reduced to a minimum. But the positive injury to the United States will be so circumscribed, and relatively so small, that it will not perceptibly retard our progress.

Upon one point the Dominion Government may be undeceived. By the adoption of a tariff policy avowedly unfriendly to this country it will not help the cause of reciprocity. The Ottawa reports to which allusion has been made proceed on the supposition that the talk of retaliation in that latitude has frightened the great people at Washington and made them petitioners for favor. It is a mistake. The trouble with reference to reciprocity always has been that Canadian subjects are regarded with indifference by the great body of Americans. They underestimate the importance of reciprocity, and look coldly upon efforts to promote it. Let it be understood, however, that Canada is engaged in an attempt to damage this country,—to inflict injury upon it in retaliation for a refusal to comply with Canadian demands,—and the indifference will give way to more decided feelings. No plea for reciprocity will then be listened to. The resentment excited may not assume the shape of a measure designed to punish adverse discrimination, but it will assuredly preclude the making or receiving of overtures in the direction of freer commercial intercourse. Canada ought not to require further evidence as to the tendency of a retaliatory policy to react upon its authors. The experiment made years ago only served to increase the force of the movement which ended in the abrogation of the old treaty. A second experiment will but render more remote the chance of obtaining a new one.

It should not be necessary to remind the Ottawa authorities that the fishery business has not left a favorable impression. There is a soreness produced by sharp practice, and until this disappears the Canadian negotiators will travel southward in vain. On former occasions they have laid stress upon the fisheries as part of the consideration offered in return for access to American markets; but the fisheries are not now available for this purpose, and, if they were, with our present knowledge they would not be rated at more than a tithe of the valuation obtained at Halifax. As an item in the account made up in behalf of reciprocity, they will hereafter be of minor importance.

SENTIMENT IN CONGRESS.

If indications in Congress are to be taken into serious account, the tendency of the time is sentimental rather than practical. What is known as "the sympathy dodge" is industriously used. The men who are importuning Congress for the admission of Dakota as a State, for example, ask for nothing but sympathy. Two or three thinly-populated Territories have already been admitted on considerations of sympathy and sentiment. It is plaintively and eloquently urged that the people of this remote region, wherever it may be, yield to none in their attachment to the Union, that they are deprived of the protection of a Government to which they are passionately devoted, and they merely ask that the broad shield of State sovereignty be extended over a population which has patiently waited these many years for permission to enroll themselves as active supporters of the National Government. This piteous appeal is heard. The tender hearts of Congressmen melt within them, and the Territory becomes a State. The citizens of the new State, heretofore supposed to be pining for an opportunity to show how much they love the Union, and how much they need self-government, set up a corrupt political machine, buy and sell offices, and disgrace the American name with legislative scandals. Congressional sentimentalists have given them their opportunities.

The passage of the Pension Arrearages bill would have been impossible if the sentimental game had not been skillfullly played. "What! refuse to vote to the brave defenders of the Union the pitiful little sums due them!" exclaim the advocates of this measure. How can anybody stand up in Congress and oppose any measure for which the flag, the battle-field, and the gory ranks of death can be skillfully exhibited by any pleader who knows where to feel for that single string which has been touched so often? It is useless to urge that the arrearages are in many cases purely constructive, that they are in the hands of agents and attorneys, and that to pay them will take fifteen or twenty millions from the depleted National Treasury. What are such considerations as these when the battle-stained flag, the great uprising, and the imperiled safety of the Republic can be paraded on the other side? Never mind if it be true that the multitudes of widows and orphans, so tearfully alluded to by the friends of the bill, are lay-figures put forward by sharp claim-agents and lobbyists. The sentimental dodge always succeeds, and a Government which higgles over the payment of its just debts to foreign countries prodigally votes away millions under the false pretense of doing justice to the defenders of the Republic.

The proposition to pension the survivors of the Mexican and the Indian wars is another sentimental scheme to get money out of the Treasury. A bill now in the House provides for placing on the pension rolls the surviving officers and enlisted men who served 60 days in the war of 1846 and 1847 with Mexico, or in the Creek war of 1835 and 1836, or in the Florida war from 1835 to 1842, or in the Black Hawk war of 1832, for 30 days. No matter how rich or prosperous may be any of the men who have fought in these numerous "wars," they are to be put on the rolls and pensions doled out to them. And if there are widows of men who have been engaged in these conflicts, they are to receive pensions. Nobody has dared to estimate how much money such a sweeping measure would take out of the Treasury. It is enough that Congressmen can plead that those who fought the Mexicans in 1846, or the Creeks in 1836, or the Seminoles in 1835, "risked their lives in maintaining our flag," as was said in the House the other day. There is no withstanding that; and when an honest amendment is proposed to the bill, some indignant patriot will declare, as was declared, that the proposer is trying to stab at men who fought the battles of the Republic, inspired by the loftiest patriotism. There are few men in Congress who dare to withstand this twaddle.

Timber-thieves, unrepentant rebels, and vagabond Indians have received a great deal of misplaced sympathy in Congress. When it was proposed to stop the wholesale destruction of timber on Government lands in Louisiana and Mississippi, there was a howl of woe from the North-west. If the Government attempted to prevent rich men from making any more money by stealing lumber from the public domain, the settlers of Montana would freeze to death for want of fuel. An attempt to enforce the laws of the United States would take his firewood from "the man who carried the flag forward to the savage frontier of the North-west," as Mr. Blaine eloquently remarked. There were Congressmen who believed this rubbish and voted to hinder the Government in collecting its just dues. Malignant rebels, who hated the sight of the officers of their own Government, complained that they were governed by alien agents, men who were not in sympathy with the South. They could not obey the laws because the officers of the law were objectionable persons. This grievance was presented again and again in Congress by men who tearfully called attention to the wrongs of their long-suffering constituents. People wept over the picture, and when the sentimentalists had their way, the "sufferers" trampled on the laws with renewed satisfaction.

We shall never hear the last of the Indian's title to this broad land. If the Indian should take a fancy to occupy the Central Park as a hunting-ground, there is no good reason why he should not have it. His title to it is just as valid as it is to millions of acres reserved for his use whenever he has a notion to hunt therein. Any attempt to restrict him to reasonable limits is denounced as a scheme to starve him to death. No white citizen of the United States was ever so generously treated as the Government has treated the Indians. And there has gradually grown up in Congress a feeling that nothing is too good for the Indian. Though he is a savage and prefers war to peace, his violent breaking away from the bonds of civilization is invariably charged to his ill-treatment. Owning the soil, though he did, he has yet a royal inheritance left him, controlling millions of acres where his "white oppressor" must be content with a quarter-section. Just now, Congress is sentimentally dabbling with pension bills, the Indian question, and various other matters of remote importance and of doubtful character. A little hard common sense is needed in the legislation of the country.

OUR ART EXHIBITIONS.

One of the results, or more properly perhaps, one of the symptoms of the cold neglect from which our native artists have been suffering for the last few years has appeared in a discouraging lack of interest in the regular exhibitions of their works. A pernicious fashion of decrying whatever is American and glorifying certain foreign schools of art has been operating as a blight upon the young but naturally vigorous growth of home production. Not only has the money which our people have had to spend for the gratification of taste or vanity in collecting pictures been lavished chiefly upon inferior or indifferent works of famous Europeans, or the copies and imitations with which they have permitted their names to be associated, but when our artists have come forward with such works as they have been able to produce in the face of every discouragement, they have not awakened the interest or attracted the attention they deserved, because the public mind has been so preoccupied with the utterly false notion that they could offer nothing to be compared with what is brought over from the old world. The fact is, our artists are capable of putting on exhibition works which will compare favorably with those collected on similar occasions in European cities, to say nothing of the leavings that are sent over here to find a market. At all events, these exhibitions, if properly encouraged, would bring to view the best specimens of the work of native artists, and show to buyers and the public generally what they are doing. If they do not now show the best they are capable of, it is because they have lacked inducement to put forth their best exertions and to compete for the favor and approval which they have reason to fear will be withheld, without regard to merit or common justice. They are unwilling to subject their work to the predestined disparagement of critics from whom they are accustomed to receive nothing but slurs, or the indifference of a public whose mind has been poisoned with prejudice, and so find that whatever pains they have taken are thrown away.

The object of an exhibition is primarily to bring the works of artists to the attention of the public for its appreciation, and its practical value to them is to be found in resulting sales. It is their means of reaching a market. If they do not find it, they are disappointed and discouraged, and their zeal for making exhibitions begins to flag. But let a generous or even a fairly appreciative interest be shown in what they are doing, and let buyers turn their attention to securing for themselves the best products of native talent, so that artists shall derive their legitimate advantage from exhibiting their pictures, and they will speedily exert themselves to offer the best that they can do, as the surest way to reputation and profit. Then will the exhibitions show a steady improvement in character and attractiveness. The dealers who are making fortunes by bringing from Europe what is practically unsalable there and crying it up, to the detriment of American art production, are animated by a self-interest that is altogether natural. They buy cheap and sell dear. Their exhibitions are continuous and they are active in fostering the notions upon which their enormous profits depend. They display a zeal and earnestness that are actuated by the strongest of human motives, a desire for gain. They will neglect the work of native artists as long as the public will submit to their pretenses and their exactions, for American pictures are accessible to purchasers in the studios and galleries here, and cannot be sold by dealers at inordinate advances upon their cost. The artists have no active and interested agents to work up sales for them, and depend upon spontaneous recognition and the opportunities presented in their exhibitions for reaching purchasers. One result of the discouragement from which they suffer is that they cannot afford to undertake important works, involving much time, labor, and expense, on the precarious chance of finding a market at prices that can be regarded as remunerative. In European cities artists have the assurance that the first choice of the principal buyers of pictures is for native productions. Their collections are made up chiefly of the works of their own countrymen, and have a national character in which they take a pride. The exhibitions are looked to as presenting for their selection whatever there is of value fresh from the studios. Invitations to private views are regarded as favors, admitting the recipients to a chance of picking the best for their own galleries, and it is rare that meritorious works are left to be taken way as unsalable after the general public has had a full opportunity for examining them. Exhibitions here ought to serve the same purpose of placing the works of our own artists fairly in the market, and bringing together the supply and the demand. If the demand holds off, it is not because we have no artists of first-rate merit. We have as good landscape painters as can be found anywhere; our delineators of animal life are among the best in the world, and some of our figure-painters have no reason to fear comparison with the best of the European schools. So far as they have an American individuality, associated with artistic excellence, it is to their credit, and should enhance and not depreciate the value of their work.

The season of exhibitions in this City is about to open. To-day that of the Artists' Fund Association begins at the Leavitt Gallery. The membership includes some of our very best artists, and as the proceeds of sales above the amount necessary to cover their annual dues is returned to them, they are interested in showing the best works that they may have on hand, and an opportunity will be afforded for a fair examination of their work. This exhibition will be soon followed by that of the Water-Color Society, and in this department we can show as fine specimens of work as are to be seen anywhere. Later on will come the Academy exhibition, and that ought to bring out the resources of the artists to the fullest extent. It is to be hoped that this season will be an exception to those of the last two or three years, and that lovers of art will begin to realize that possibly some good things can come out of American studios. Local pride and national self-respect should get the better of this perverse and shallow preference for whatever is foreign, and the exhibitions should result in encouragement and profit for our native artists, which shall inspire them with new courage and stimulate them to higher efforts.

Somebody is always discovering unwholesome or poisonous properties or ingredients in what we eat and drink. One of the latest discoveries is that the quality of lager-beer is preserved by large admixture of salicylous acid, obtained by the action of bichromate of potash, sulphuric acid, water, and salicine, got in fine scales, of a silky lustre, from the bark of certain kinds of willow. This acid, which would seem harmless enough but for its rather formidable name, is reputed to be a febrifuge. It is also said to be a cure for gout, and lager-beer is asserted to be provocative of the disease, so that one ought to annul the other. But the averment is that it destroys the lining of the stomach; thins and disintegrates the blood; tends to produce paralysis; and demoralizes physical man in general and particular. From all accounts, lager-beer, presuming that the acid be put in it, ought to wreck anybody who drinks it, even within moderation, for a single year. Considering how many pernicious adulterations there are, doubtless, in our daily food and drink, it is amazing that any of us live to maturity, much less to middle age. Perhaps, like Mithridates, we have taken so much poison that we are proof against it. Indeed, we must be, else we should be swept by thousands from the planet; a dreadful mortality would be continuous. Happily, what we hear and read of food-adulterations does not influence us. If it did, we should perish from fear of eating anything.

A number of women who are wives by many removes of Mormons, have been in Washington lately trying to bring influence to bear against the expected enforcement of the Anti-polygamy laws in Utah. They have literally besieged Mrs. Hayes on the subject, and have had no small effect on her and on others by representing that the general unmarrying which would follow the adoption of the measure would make outcasts of 50,000 to 60,000 women, and leave an army of children nameless and unprovided for. While there can be no question of the evil of polygamy, some persons think it would be better, for the reason already mentioned, to prevent it in the future than to attempt to undo what has been done. Mrs. Hayes is reported to have a severer experience than her husband in political management, because many people who would not go to him go to her, believing that if they can secure her favor, his may be at least hoped for. The ladies of the Executive Mansion, albeit forming no part of the Government, are generally approached as if they were its head, and always have been. When men cannot be moved at the national capital, women are invariably sought; for it has long since been discovered that women can accomplish what the other sex cannot. From the lobby up it has been so since the foundation of the Republic; so that, although women enjoy no political rights here, this may still be ranked to a certain extent as a gynocracy.

It is generally thought, and with good reason, that American children are the worst-behaved and, consequently, the most disagreeable to everybody, except their parents, of any children of the globe. Their ill-behavior is usually ascribed to their spoiling by excessive indulgence, to their incessant coddling; but Japanese children, who are said to be also treated with extraordinary deference and made a vast deal of, are reputed to be of the quietest and pleasantest. Travelers in Japan say that nothing is denied there to a child; his or her question receives a ready answer from the most silent, and his request is granted by the most churlish. All persons in every grade of life show little folks uniform courtesy and gentleness; and why these do not take advantage of this over-regard and tenderness, as they do in the United States, is beyond explanation, unless we admit that there is a marked difference in race. It seems, however, that in that country the mother is so wholly subordinated to the child as to be injured and degraded. The father often beats her because the child has fallen down or met with any accident. She has only two functions in his eyes—to bear children and enslave herself for them after their birth. The effect of such superabundant care and devotion is bad, too, upon the child, who grows up without self-understanding or self-reliance. Certainly, this is not true of our offspring, and it is curious to observe what a remarkable difference is developed in the East and West by well-nigh the same treatment.

We are so accustomed to the daily weather reports now that many of us have forgotten that a few years ago we had nothing of the kind. For some ten years prior to 1852 much activity had been shown in making observations with the barometer, thermometer, and rain-gauge, but, unfortunately, these were seldom made either with perfect instruments or on a uniform plan, and, about 1852 it came to be perceived that systematic co-operation of a kind best attained by Government measures was necessary to the progress of the science of meteorology. Lieut. Maury, acting under sanction of the United States, had been for some time collecting meteorological observations made at sea, and in 1852, Sir John Burgoyne, Inspector-General of Fortifications, contemplated the establishment of a certain number of meteorological observations on land, to be managed by the Royal Engineers, and a suggestion was at his instance made to the United States Government that the observations so carried on, and any observations made under the direction of that Government, should be conducted on a uniform plan. To this a counter-proposition was made by our Government to the effect that any uniform system should include observations at sea, and that the different maritime nations of the world should be invited to make such observations on one uniform plan. This was submitted to the Royal Society, and it was determined to postpone for the present the attempt to reduce to a uniform system the various meteorological observations by land which various nations were making, but to invite a conference on these points of representatives of maritime nations. This met at Brussels in 1853, and reported that it would be impracticable to obtain one great desideratum—uniformity of scales and instruments—but they expressed a strong opinion that steps should be taken to secure the accuracy of the instruments used. Soon afterward the English Board of Trade constituted a meteorological department, and the science has since made rapid advance the world over.

Now that one of the Popes—and one of the most infamous—Alexander VI.—has been introduced upon the stage in Rome, contrary to the expressed authority of the Holy Apostolic Church, it is altogether probable that the innovation will be welcomed by Italian playwrights generally. They cannot fail to find in the 250 or 260 Popes whom the Church claims to have had since Peter, abundant material for comedy as well as tragedy, and they will be pleased as a rule to employ the Pontiffs as characters in the theatres of the Eternal City on account of the novelty and the interdiction which it involves. We fear, however, that dramatic presentation of the Popes will not be favorable to the solemn, even supernatural influence which the Papal See always seeks to exercise upon the laity. Any ecclesiastic who is declared and held to be personally infallible must suffer somewhat in public, if not in private, estimation by the interpretation of ordinary actors. The Pope is, according to the Church, the vicegerent of Christ on earth, and under this assumption the Church may be right in forbidding his introduction upon the stage, knowing that it must detract from the awful, superstitious dignity and importance of his office. There have been, too, so many weak and depraved Popes in the list that these will naturally be seized on for dramatic treatment, and thus the Church be scandalized. The innovation will unquestionably be good for the theatres; but it will work ill for the Vatican, by tending to break down the barrier it has always endeavored to keep up between itself and the external world.

The English tourist sailing from Gibraltar to Cadiz begins, so soon as he is out of the Bay of Algeciras, to keep a sharp look out to starboard. Not for the world would he miss the sight of the long, low, sandy hills of the "Promontorium Tunonis" of antiquity—the ever-to-be-remembered Trafalgar. Henry Morrisey the only veteran on this side of the Atlantic who fought with Nelson on that memorable occasion, and who saw that hero fall died at his home in Halifax only a few days since. His death leaves only seven Trafalgar veterans living. The victory achieved on the 21st of October, 1805, was a triumph unparalleled in the annals of naval warfare. Following as it did so soon after the destruction of the French fleet at Aboukir, it not only hurled confusion on the foes of England, but showed all those manly qualities which have ever characterized British seamen. The combined French and Spanish fleets were under command of Admiral Villeneuve, who sailed from Cadiz with the determination of giving battle to the English fleet. This measure was contrary both to the views and instructions of Bonaparte; but the Admiral was impelled by motives of personal resentment and wounded honor to act in opposition to the wishes of his master. Besides, he knew that an officer was on his way from Paris to supersede him in the command, and, under such circumstances, he probably felt that even a defeat could add but little to his disgrace; while, on the contrary, a victory over the first naval hero of the age would wipe off every stain on his conduct, and cover him with immortal glory. The particulars of this grand conflict need not be reported. It was while Nelson was fighting the Santissima Trinidada, (then the largest ship in the world, carrying 136 guns,) with his own flag-ship, the Victory, that he received his mortal wound. Early in the morning, his Lordship put on all the stars of his different orders—the badges of honor he had gained in many a hard-fought battle—and thus dressed, he was unduly exposed to the fire of the enemy's sharp-shooters. The hero of many naval engagements was struck down by a gun-shot from the maintop of the Redoubtable, and in another hour he sank to rest in the midst of a victory which crowned the last achievement of his life with a glory that even eclipsed the lustre of all his former exploits. Nineteen sail of the line were the prize of this dear-bought conquest. Among the prisoners was Villeneuve himself, who at first was almost frantic with grief and despair. He could hardly be persuaded that his fine fleet had, in the short space of four hours, been consigned to total destruction.

GENERAL NOTES.

A Jewess in Portsmouth, Ohio, has renounced her religion and married a Christian.

Western Massachusetts made 150,000 barrels of cider the past season, and temperance people are aghast.

The Cincinnati authorities have decreed that bakers must stamp the weight upon every loaf of bread they offer for sale.

Two little Detroit boys built a snow house last week. It caved in upon them, and one of them was dead before he could be dug out.

There are three Republican candidates in the First District of Virginia for the vacant seat in the present Congress—Messrs. W. W. Douglas, T. S. Curlett, and George C. Round.

The Albany Journal says that the Penn Yan Mystery has gone to that mysterious bourne from which no newspaper returns. From which we infer that the full postage was paid.

The Massachusetts Republican State Committee has organized, with Eben F. Stone, a Newburyport lawyer and Chairman of the State House Committee on Finance, as President.

A young woman, who never was in love and never was married, is lecturing in Iowa upon "Love and Marriage." The snow-blockade may be a blessing in disguise after all. She might come East.

The Hotel Men's Mutual Benefit Association was organized in Chicago last Friday by the election of officers from all the large cities of the North. It has about 500 members, and will apply for a charter.

According to the Washington Republic Gen. Grant has lately written to a friend in that city: "I see they are hammering away at the Army again. There is no peace for the Army except in time of war."

The Milwaukee (Wis.) Sentinel calls Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, the brainiest man in the United States and the ablest statesman in the Republican Party, and says that he ought to be the Republican candidate for the Presidency in 1880.

The Prohibitionists of Ohio are endeavoring to secure the passage of an amendment to the Constitution of the State prohibiting the manufacture or importation of alcoholic liquors in the State except for use as a medicine. They want to get 200,000 signatures to a petition in its favor before the 20th of February.

The New-Haven Palladium says that the British steamer Norman Monarch, which will sail for Constantinople about March 1, received on Saturday 10 car-loads of cartridges, part of her cargo of arms and ammunition for the Turks. The guns which were taken out of the wrecked steamer Bramhall will be another part.

We read in a Montreal paper that on Monday, Jan. 13, her Royal Highness the Princess Louise accorded an audience at Rideau Hall, Ottawa, to Mr. Alfred Deseve, the young violinist of Montreal, and that after executing several selections of music he received her Royal Highness' applause, and permission to assume the title of "Violinist to her Royal Highness Princess Louise."

An Ottawa telegram printed in the Canadian papers says: "The counsel fees in connection with the Halifax Fishery Commission left unpaid, will, it is understood, receive the attention of the Minister of Justice. The niggardly manner in which the late Government dealt with the matter demands a more reasonable consideration in view of the successful result of the award."

A man in Amherst, Mass., is finding life hard. He put a string of sausages into his pocket when he thought the store-keeper wasn't looking. But the store-keeper was looking, and told of the theft, and when the woman whom he [the man who is finding life hard] was expecting to marry heard that he had stolen a string of sausages, she gave him what the local paper calls the "grand bounce."

The town officials in Everett, Mass., say they never heard of "Madge Rivers," and that they do not believe she could have lived there 15 years without their knowing her. Furthermore, they do not know any such man as David Worthly. Madge Rivers is the name given by the girl who was arrested in this City in male attire last week. The Everett people think she belongs in Boston.

THE COUNTERFEITING GANG

ANOTHER IMPORTANT ARREST.

THE LAST MEMBER OF THE FRATERNITY IN CUSTODY—JACOB OTT, A LITHOGRAPH PRINTER, ARRESTED—THE ANTECEDENTS OF OTT, ULRICH, AND COLE.

Late last evening Detective D. H. Gilkinson, of the Secret Service Office in this City, arrested Jacob Ott, a lithograph printer, and this, with the arrests of Charles Ulrich and Henry C. Cole, made in New-Jersey Friday evening last, includes the entire gang of counterfeiters that during the last two years put in circulation nearly $500,000 of counterfeit money. Jacob Ott was formerly employed as a lithograph printer in Cincinnati, Ohio, and was looked upon as one of the best of his craft. After Ulrich left the Columbus Penitentiary, and engaged in legitimate business in Columbus with the ex-Deputy Warden of his late prison, he offered employment to Ott, and the latter worked for him for six or seven months. Everything went well with them until Cole came upon the scene, and, offering to supply the necessary money, induced Ulrich to give up an honest intention to reform and return to his old business of counterfeiting. Not knowing anything about the business of lithographing, Ulrich's partner, the ex-penitentiary warden, was left in the lurch, and in a short time was obliged to close up the place. Thus Ott was again thrown out of employment. Ulrich and Cole came to Philadelphia, and soon after they had made all their arrangements for active business, Ott again appeared with them and became their printer. He staid with them in Philadelphia until last March, printing all the $50 and $5 counterfeits which have been traced to this firm. When Cole and Ulrich closed up their business there, selling all their presses and other material, Ott came to this City. With the money he had accumulated he opened a saloon, but it was an unsuccessful venture. He was finally sold out, and then returned to his trade of lithograph printing. As an excellent workman he had no difficulty in obtaining employment. The Secret Service detectives lost track of him after leaving Philadelphia, and it was only through Ulrich's visits to this City that his whereabouts were again ascertained. He has been quietly "shadowed" since that time merely for the purpose of keeping him in view, for in this City nothing was done by him to bring further suspicion upon him. He was arrested without any trouble last evening by Detective Gilkinson, and brought to the Secret Service Office in the Post Office building. United States Commissioner Deuel was then sent for, and the accused was committed without bail for examination to-day. It is understood that application will be made for a writ of removal to Philadelphia for trial.

With this arrest, the gang to whom are traced the counterfeit $50 bills on the Central, Broadway, and Tradesmen's National Banks of New-York and Third National of Buffalo, also the $5 bills on the National Banks of Tamaqua and Hanover, Penn., are all in custody, and it is understood that the plates upon which the bills were printed will be returned before the accused are brought to trial. The Secret Service officers have been fortunate, too, in arresting many of the heaviest dealers in this manufacture of counterfeit money. Burckhardt, Peckham, and Connors, now serving respectively, ten, seven, and five years in the Albany Penitentiary, upon sentences passed last week in the United States Circuit Court, were known as among the heaviest of the "cony" men, and they were dealers only in the counterfeits of this firm. It is well understood that of the $50 bills there were $100,000 made upon each of the banks named. Of this amount $200,000 was sent Germany. Of the $5 bills $40,000 was made on each of the banks of Tamaqua and Hanover, Penn. The entire amount, $480,000, is said by the Secret Service officers to have been sold without any difficulty; in fact the demand was greater than the means of supply.

Ulrich, who was first arrested for this business, is by birth a Prussian. He is of fine presence, and of much intelligence. He is about 43 years of age, and has been in the United States about 22 years. During this time he has served two terms of imprisonment, both for counterfeiting, one at Sing Sing, and the other in Columbus, Ohio. In the latter place he was sentenced for five years, and in June 1868, but was pardoned about eight years afterward. Previous to this he had executed finely-engraved counterfeits of the $100 denomination upon the First National Bank of Boston, the Central of New-York, and the Ohio National of Cincinnati, Ohio. When arrested in Cincinnati, in 1867, he was engaged upon the back plate of a $500 Treasury note, and unfinished plates for a $5 note were found in his possession. After his release from Columbus Penitentiary his counterfeit $50 bills on the National Broadway and Tradesmen's Banks, of New-York, found their way to Hamburg and other European ports, and were brought in considerable amounts by emigrants to the United States.

Henry C. Cole, however, was the guiding spirit, under whose direction all the mischief wrought by Ulrich was accomplished. He is almost 65 years old, an old counterfeiter and ex-convict. He has a large family, has lived in good style in Philadelphia, drives fast horses, and has a valuable farm a few miles from that city. He served one term in Clinton (N. Y.) Penitentiary, and was pardoned by Gov. Hoffman in 1871. In October of the same year he was again arrested in this City, having a few moments previously sold $5,000 counterfeit $10 and $20 bank-notes. He was admitted to bail in $10,000, and subsequently giving information in relation to the operations of an alleged counterfeiter named Miner, a nolle pros. was entered in his case. The relations between Cole and Ulrich in their last partnership were that of employer and employe, and the former speaks of the reading of counterfeit money to Europe as one of the most successful of his ventures.

Ott, the last person arrested, claims that when he went to Philadelphia he had no knowledge of the business he was to engage in. Ulrich and Cole will be brought up for examination before United States Commissioner Keasby, at Newark, N. J., on Thursday next, and the charges against them will be brought before the United States Grand Jury assembling at Trenton later in the week.

PIONEER GOLD-DIGGERS.

ANNUAL DINNER OF THE FORTY-NINERS OF CALIFORNIA—AN ACTOR'S REMINISCENCES.

The fourth annual banquet of the Associated Pioneers of the Territorial Days of California was given last night at the Sturtevant House, and drew together a genial assemblage of about 150 persons, members of the society and their invited guests. The occasion of this annual meeting is the commemoration of the anniversary of the discovery of gold at Sutter's saw-mill, in 1848. The members of the association wore the badge of the society on the left breast. The walls of the dining-room were covered with inscriptions calling to mind associations of the early days and places which make the anniversary so entertaining to the old "forty-niners," or "Argonauts," as these pioneers sometimes call themselves. In the absence of the septuagenarian President, Gen. John A. Sutter, the chair was occupied by Gen. H. A. Gibson, United States Army, senior Vice-President. Among the most notable members present were ex-Mayor Vance, Gen. John P. Irrie, James S. Wethered, Hon. Jeremiah Sherwood, James J. McCloskey, Gen. Thomas D. Johns, Gen. Thomas W. Sweeny, United States Army. An orchestra and the Tremaine Glee Club furnished the musical portion of the entertainment, and addresses suitable to the occasion were delivered by Gen. Gibson, J. J. McCloskey, the actor; Gen. Johns, James S. Roberts, and other gentlemen. Letters of regret at being unable to attend were read from Gen. Sherman, Gov. Fremont, Gen. Sutter, Gen. Joseph W. Revere, Silas Casey, ex-Secretary Bristow, Admiral Bristow, and other gentlemen more or less identified with the history of California. In some "reminiscences of '49" Mr. McCloskey told of a company of miners on the way to Stockton, about 150 in number, all of whom were known by nicknames, he being known as "Red Yorker," an allusion to the color of his hair. Among them was a tall strap of a youngster about 25 years old, astride of a mule, who was known as "the paper man." He was a good, kind sort of fellow, and often dismounted to let a tired man ride his mule. When they reached Stockton, they heard him introduced to Judge Dent as Bayard Taylor, a newspaper correspondent. There was at that time there a young retired Army Captain, named Grant, and the Captain and the newspaper man shared the same couch. One of them afterward made some reputation as a military commander and became President of the United States, while the other became the Minister of the United States to the German Empire.

A CHARGE AGAINST A POLICEMAN.

A German named Albert Nolte, of Canal and Eldridge-streets, entered the Police Central Office last night in a very excited state, and said that as he was passing through Houston-street, and when a short distance west of Broadway, he felt confused as to his whereabouts, and asked the policeman on post there the nearest way home. The officer, he says, instead of answering his question, struck him a blow on the face and knocked him down, and while he was prostrate stole his watch and chain. Nolte admitted that he was under the influence of liquor at the time, and probably used impolite language to the policeman. The Inspector told him to call again, and that in the meantime the alleged conduct of the officer would be investigated.

BALTIMORE'S FINANCIAL CONDITION.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 20.—The annual Message of Mayor Latrobe was sent to the City Council today. The financial condition of the city is reported as follows: The total funded and guaranteed debt on Dec. 31 amounted to $33,968,298 60, and the productive and interest bearing assets to $22,959,098 11. The net floating debt of the city at the same date was $622,649 18. Of the funded and guaranteed debt, interest on $16,122,566 23 is provided for by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, the city passenger railway companies, the Water Board, and Western Maryland and Union Railroad Companies. The productive investments of the city consist of railroad and turnpike stocks, city markets, docks, wharves, sinking funds invested, and real estate. The estimated expenses of the city, including the floating debt for the year 1879, are $5,581,066 15, and the estimated taxes in arrears to be collected during the year 1879, and other sources of revenue, are $2,621,433, leaving the net amount to be raised by taxation $2,959,632 15—less, by the sum of $1,519,052 90, than the estimates of last year.

AMUSEMENTS.

"AIDA" AT BOOTH'S THEATRE.

The last week of Mr. Strakosch's operatic season was begun in the most brilliant manner last evening with a performance of "Aida." The house was full in every part; the audience were bent on enjoyment, and were only too ready to applaud at every opportunity afforded them, and the spectacular portions of the opera were so well given that musical defects were necessarily overlooked. It is understood that Miss Kellogg claims Aida for one of her great parts, but the best friends of the lady would do well to point out her error of judgment in this matter. The part is not suited to her vocal or dramatic capabilities, and she is in both respects unfortunate in her attempt to portray the character. Miss Kellogg is a careful and conscientious singer, but her forte is not in the range of such parts as Aida, and it is not in any spirit of depreciation of her acknowledged capabilities that her rendering of Verdi's most exacting soprano rôle should not be recorded as an artistic success. She did not sing as well as at her first appearance this season in the part, but received the warmest applause of the audience. Miss Cary, in her well-known rôle of Amneris was thoroughly satisfactory, both in her singing and acting. It is not too much to say that there is no finer performance on the operatic stage than Miss Cary's Amneris. It was recognized as such last evening, and this exceptional artist was rewarded with well-deserved applause whenever she appeared. Mr. Graff was the Radames, but a somewhat ineffective representative of the character, though he sang occasionally with spirit. In the concerted music he was conspicuous by his absence of voice, and hardly seemed at home in the part. Signor Pantaleoni, who made such an impression on his first appearance in the character of Amonasro, was not wanting in vigor of action last evening, but scarcely did himself justice as a singer. The performance was, notwithstanding some musical defects, picturesque and enjoyable, and from first to last commanded the attention and enthusiasm of the house.

PARK THEATRE.

The revival of Mr. Boucicault's dramatization of "The Cricket on the Hearth," and the reappearance of Mr. John E. Owens were the two attractions offered last evening at this theatre. Of all the stories which that literary magician, Charles Dickens, has left to us, no one combines more delightfully the best varieties of humor and the most natural pathos than the favorite "Cricket;" this little sketch of domestic life, intermingled with those genuine touches of poetry which are apparent in all that Dickens has written—even if the great novelist was a mediocre verse-writer—is as perfect in its way as "David Copperfield." Its personages are human and distinct, and do not border upon caricature, as do most of the author's best-known types. It is a pity that these familiar personages are not oftener seen upon the stage, for in Mr. Boucicault's skillful dramatization they are wonderfully interesting, and, with the exception of Tackleton, deeply sympathetic. There are few dramas which present better contrasts than those offered by John Peerybingle and Mr. Tackleton, Dot and Bertha. The husband of Dot is one of those great-hearted men whom we all love to see and know, and his sufferings, when he first suspects that Dot cares nothing for him, touch the finest chords of our pity. There is nothing theatrical about John, yet his life and emotions are not lacking in the dramatic element. He is too simple to be a poseur, and yet, despite this simplicity, there are many sides to the man. Compared with him, what a wretched specimen of nature's handiwork is Tackleton, who, however, is a very ingenious fellow, but not ingenious enough, let us add, to understand a nature like Peerybingle's. And there is Dot, the representative of all sweet and faithful wives, whose little vanities are only of the imagination, not of the heart. In contrast to her, yet not unlike her, is Bertha, the blind girl, who lives in a world painted to her fancy by a father who loves her so well that he cannot bear to sell her gentle spirit with the shadows of painful reality. There is something intensely pathetic in the unexpressed adoration which Bertha feels for the somewhat demoniac Tackleton, who becomes to her beatific vision a kind of saintly Romeo. Caleb Plummer himself is perhaps the most marked individuality, from the dramatist's point of view, in this tender and fascinating story, the interest of which is always strong and progressive, and, what is more important, humanizing. The representation last evening was, in general, a pleasurable one, though weak in some points. The appearance of Mr. Owens was an unusually welcome event; but it is to be feared that his long absence from our stage has separated him somewhat from the people who were formerly his most ardent admirers. We gladly advise every one to see Mr. Owens, not only because he is an interesting actor playing in a popular piece, but more especially because he is the representative of a past generation, and in every sense a worthy one. His method is as delightful as his personality, and each is of a high order. His identity is absolutely lost in his part, and at no moment does he forget that for the time being he is not Mr. Owens, but simply Caleb Plummer. Our new schools have given us new artists whom we have learned to love and respect; but we frequently miss in their work that completeness of illusion which is so characteristic of the elder comedian. Mr. Owens' Caleb Plummer is a performance which rewards the most careful study; and, if it seems at times to be slightly lacking in spontaneity, in the fullness of emotional expression which is now looked for on the stage, it is otherwise natural, touching, and perfectly conceived. The simple-minded old man, whose life has been a mistake from the beginning, yet whose trials are less oppressive through his gentle patience and resignation, lives in Mr. Owens' embodiment—lives and demands our truest sympathy. In movement, in voice, in all that goes to make a character whole, this Caleb Plummer is an absolute reality. The delicacy, the suggestions of humor, and the tender pathos, of this performance, are parts of a remarkably even and clear ideal. Mr. Owens was fortunate in having the assistance of Mr. Couldock, who, in roles demanding rough and homely pathos, is surpassed by few. His John Peerybingle, although wanting in a certain youthful quality which belongs to it, was a more than intelligent impersonation. On the other hand, Mr. Padgett gave a grossly exaggerated picture of Tackleton, one certainly not in accord with the ending of the play. Miss Minnie Palmer as Dot marred all her work by certain affectations which seemed to denote insincerity; this was to be especially regretted, for Miss Palmer has a kind of intelligence which, if put under good training, would produce excellent results. A word of commendation is due to Miss Ada Gilman, whose Tilly Slowboy was worthy of the original. In conclusion, it may be suggested that the "fairy business" adds nothing to the interest of the play, especially when it is badly done, as was the case last night.

GENERAL MENTION.

The Carri Brothers have their second soirée musicale this evening, at Steinway Hall. They have an attractive programme.

A concert of considerable musical interest takes place this evening, at Chickering Hall. Mr. Carl Lanzer is the promoter, and the services of Miss Fannie Goodwin and Mr. M. Arbuckle have been secured. A competent orchestral force will also take part in the entertainment.

At the matinée of the English Glee Club at Chickering Hall, to-morrow, it is announced that Miss Ida W. Hubbell will take the place of Miss Henrietta Beebe, who is absent from the City on professional engagements in New-England. The programme is one of promise, and though Miss Beebe's absence is to be regretted, Miss Hubbell will doubtless be an acceptable substitute.

ENCOURAGING HEBREW IMMIGRATION.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 20.—The Executive Board of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations convened here yesterday. Fifteen congregations joined the union within the last six months. It was resolved that the Board of Delegates on Civil and Religious Rights be instructed to take into consideration the feasibility of active co-operation with sister societies in Europe for the purpose of encouraging agriculture among Hebrews and the settlement in this country of such as are willing to devote themselves to that pursuit on lands in the West and South. The report of the Secretary of the Board of Governors was read.

THE CUE BATTLE BEGUN.

OPENING OF THE BILLIARD TOURNAMENT.

ALBERT GARNIER AND JACOB SCHAEFER CROSS CUES—A GAME THAT WAS AT TIMES BRILLIANT, AT OTHERS POOR—SEXTON DEBARRED FROM CHALLENGING FOR THE CHAMPIONSHIP CUP.

The Brunswick and Balke championship tournament opened last evening at Cooper Institute, under the most favorable auspices, the hall being crowded with ladies and gentlemen. The game of the evening was between Jacob Schaefer and Albert Garnier, and, after a somewhat peculiar struggle that was at times brilliant, and watched with interest, resulted in a victory for Schaefer. The championship emblem, a very beautiful piece of artistic workmanship, from Tiffany's, stood upon a table at the right of the referee. It is a handsome cup of silver, over a foot in height, resting upon a high ebony base. Upon the base is a silver plate bearing an engraving of a billiard-table, while upon a groove of the cup, amid a cluster of laurels, rests a golden billiard-ball encircled with a silver ribbon. The cup itself is surmounted by the figure of a billiard-player, standing with cue in hand, evidently awaiting his turn to play. Altogether, it is a trophy that Sexton might have been proud to compete for.

The game of the evening, which was a French carom, 600 points up, was called at 8:30 o'clock, with Mr. Newburger acting as umpire for Garnier, and Mr. Pulsifer for Schaefer, Mr. Michael Geary presiding in the referee's cushioned chair. The table used was one taken from stock, and was brilliantly lighted by a chandelier with double gas-jets to each of its four branches. Mr. Geary made a few remarks relative to Sexton's "unmanly" course in retiring from the tournament, and then introduced the players. Garnier won the lead and made a counting stroke from the string. He retired after scoring 10 fine open-table shots. Schaefer then counted 7, and Garnier missed. He was left a splendid set-up by a "miss" of Schaefer, but lost it by a failure to count on his seventh shot, which left a "set-up" for his adversary. Schaefer quickly took advantage of the slip, and, gathering the ivories on the rail, began some of his famous rapid "nursing," turning the upper rail skillfully, and sending the balls on a journey along the left side rail, playing with rare delicacy and judgment, while his friend Garnier watched him with quiet interest. The click, click, click of the ivories went on until 100 and over were rolled up, when loud applause from the spectators arose. The player was now using either hand with equal ease, and when the balls "broke" on his one hundred and twenty-fifth shot, he played a "nurse" that brought them quickly together, but they broke again, however, and he failed to count on his one hundred and forty-fifth shot, a "draw" that left Garnier an easy carom but bad position, and Garnier retired on a difficult "cushion" shot. Two shots by Schaefer rolled the ivories together against the middle of the right side rail, and he began another display of delicate "nursing." He had gathered 40, when the balls "broke," and he brought back his long to gain the rail once more, the spectators evincing great interest in his difficult task. He had made 100 shots, many of them very fine "draws" and "masses," and still the balls obstinately refused to gather for the player. Unheedful of the applause which the feat evoked, he struggled on, making shot after shot on the open table, but without gaining the end for which he was striving, and he retired, finally, on a very difficult massé, having scored 157.

Indifferent play and misses followed on both sides until the eighth inning, when Garnier began some of his graceful manipulation of the cue, playing some brilliant shots with his usual skill and accuracy. "Follows," masses," "cushion," "draw," and "round-the-table caroms," followed each other in quick succession, and it was not until he had made 82 points that Sexton being favored on the open table—that he retired. He obtained another inning directly afterward, in which he soon gathered the ivories on the rail and began to roll up very pretty caroms, carrying the balls across to the right side rail, which they glided on, meeting with a constant clock-like "tick." He was "kissed" out on his fifty-fifth shot, which was from the string, and again retired, the score standing: Schaefer 292, Garnier 157. Schaefer then began a long and an other desperate and unsuccessful struggle for position on the play, the player retiring after having scored 45. A period of unlucky play on each side followed for a few innings, the balls not making many fine shots, but failing to gain position. In his twenty-second inning Garnier managed to gain position, and counted 45, failing on a single cushion shot. The next was a play that was characterized the preceding innings now became absolutely poor on the part of both contestants, and continued in an amateur style until the twenty-seventh inning, when Schaefer made a beautiful run of 78 points, which was followed with an admirably-played run of 60, and in the next inning added to it a small but equally well-played run of 25. Four successive and amusing misses followed amid great laughter on the part of the spectators, and then Garnier again began some really brilliant play that netted him 56 points, but he unfortunately missed a delicate "bank" shot for position on the rail that, had he made it, he played for to his adversary, who quickly took advantage of it, and "nursed" a run of 87, which closed the game, leaving him 171 points ahead of Garnier. The game lasted about two hours. The score was as follows:

WHISKY—Quoted up to $1 11 bid, but quiet, on light offerings.

FREIGHTS—A somewhat livelier movement has been reported to-day in the chartering line, at, however, rather easier figures with the main inquiry from Grain and Petroleum interests. In the way of berth freights, a fair business has been noted by the regular steam lines, chiefly for Liverpool, at steadily advanced figures on a light offering of accommodation for early use; the liberal contracts for through freight (the bulk of which had been previously reported) covering most of the room by the vessels of the regular lines now here, and giving ship-owners, in this connection, the advantage. Of the through freight, an important proportion had been delayed while in transit to the seaboard, by the recent severe storms. FOR LIVERPOOL—The engagements reported since our last have been, by sail, 1,000 bbls. Flour at 2s. 3d.; bbl; 11,000 bushels Grain at 5½d. ₱ 60 lb.; and odd lots of Measurement Goods at 18s.@17s. 6d. ₱ ton; and, by steam, 2,250 bales Cotton on the basis of ¼d. ₱ lb., (nearly a lot through freight, and in good part by out-port lines; 2,500 bbls. THE COUNTY CLERK'S BOOKS.

THE MANDAMUS CASE AGAIN IN COURT.

AN EXPLANATION FROM MR. GUMBLETON—HIS PITIFUL TALE OF PERSECUTION—HOW HE IS PURSUED BY POLITICAL ENEMIES—JUDGE BARRETT RESERVES HIS DECISION.

The hearing in the matter of the order directing County Clerk Gumbleton to show cause why a mandamus should not be issued to compel him to exhibit certain books of his office to Mr. J. Adriance Bush, and permit him to examine them, took place yesterday before Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers. Mr. Artemas H. Holmes, counsel for Mr. Bush, read the petition upon which the order to show cause was granted, and briefly recited the facts in the cause. He claimed that the mandamus should be issued, because the facts showed clearly that the County Clerk had failed and refused to do what the law enjoins upon him. The extraneous circumstances which had impeded the action of the Bar Association's Committee on Official Extortions in their effort to obtain the County Clerk's books were absent from the present application, and hence, Mr. Holmes said, it was undoubtedly the right of his client to obtain the aid and relief sought through a writ of peremptory mandamus.

An affidavit of County Clerk Gumbleton, responding to the statements in the petition of Mr. Bush, was read by Mr. E. R. Meade. It detailed the proceedings of the Bar Association's committee, in and out of court, and claimed that as these proceedings have been stayed, pending an appeal made by Mr. Gumbleton to the General Term from the decision rendered against him by Judge Davis, the present action had been begun by Mr. Bush, a member of that committee, to the same end. Mr. Gumbleton insisted that the stay of proceedings operating against the Bar Association's committee was also a bar to like action by a member of that committee. He declared that he was informed, and believed, that the proceedings of the committee and of Mr. Bush were instituted with the purpose to obtain, if possible, evidence upon which to base an application to the Governor for the removal of the affiant from the position of County Clerk. It was Mr. Gumbleton's belief, expressed in the affidavit, that he was being pursued by "designing politicians," and he pointed out the way in which the members of the Bar Association had impaired his own efficiency as County Clerk by making protracted visits to his office, and would impair the efficiency of his subordinates. After reading his client's affidavit, Mr. Meade read one made by himself, averring that Mr. Gumbleton had acted as he had, with reference to the demands made upon him by the Bar Association's committee and by Mr. Bush, under the advice of his counsel.

In his reply, Mr. Holmes said that the affidavit of Mr. Gumbleton was very clear in its admission that he had denied to Mr. Bush the opportunity to see the books desired by him. Otherwise, the affidavit was evasive and not pertinent, and was in great part devoted to the publication of a political homily. Mr. Holmes claimed that the proceedings of Mr. Bush differed from those of the committee of which he is a member, and that the stay in the earlier action did not operate against that of the present. He urged that it was not a proper answer in the case for the County Clerk to request the relator to await the action of the Court of Appeals, or perhaps of the Supreme Court of the United States, upon the previous case.

Mr. William A. Beach made a long argument on behalf the County Clerk. He also associated the action of Mr. Bush and that of the Bar Association's committee, and referred to them as one set of proceedings. He said that the proceedings had been begun originally under resolutions adopted by the Bar Association imputing a criminal offense to Mr. Gumbleton. Then the committee was appointed to search for evidence to sustain the imputation. The court, he said, would not sustain an unjust, ungenerous, and accusatory purpose such as this. Speaking of Mr. Bush, Mr. Beach said: "The gentleman is the agent of a political cabal, of a chieftain whose commands are imperative and omnipotent." This petition for a writ of mandamus was, therefore, for an unworthy purpose, and the court, having discretionary power, should not issue a writ unless assured that it would serve the public. Then the court could not grant a mandamus for the performance of an impossibility. In the petition of the relator it was averred that there were no such books in existence as those for the production of which the mandamus was sought. Mr. Beach said that his side neither admitted nor denied that there were any such books. They placed themselves upon their strict legal rights, and were assured that the mandamus should not be granted, because it was one of the best settled legal facts that two actions cannot be maintained at once for a single purpose.

In his answer to Mr. Beach, Mr. Holmes claimed that it did not matter what his client's purpose was in seeking the mandamus. The only fact to be regarded was the one that Mr. Bush had a clear right to examine the books in the office of the County Clerk. Mr. Holmes then submitted to Judge Barrett an order he had prepared to be served upon Mr. Gumbleton, and asked him to sign it.

Judge Barrett said that the differences between the present and the former proceeding seemed to be that in the first there was a dispute as to whether there had been any refusal on the part of the County Clerk to exhibit his books, while in the present there was no conflict of fact on that subject, it being conceded that there was a demand and also a refusal to show the books. In the first application, Judge Davis, with the additional element of the dispute as to a demand and refusal, and with, necessarily, all the legal questions which were now raised as to the general right to a mandamus, granted the writ. Therefore, it seemed to him to follow that it was his duty, sitting as a special Judge, to follow Judge Davis' decision so far as to hold that the relator was entitled to the writ. The statute seemed, to him imperative, and the right to the writ undoubted when there was a demand and a refusal. It was always the proper practice for the court to follow the decision of a brother Judge until reversed, and he would hold that the relator was entitled to the writ, unless there was something in the alleged fact that he already had what he now sought, by the decision of Judge Davis. He thought, Judge Barrett said, that the object of the statute was to enable any citizen to go into the County Clerk's office and examine the books under reasonable circumstances, while not interfering with the business of the office. The question of motive had very little to do with it. The object of the statute was to keep public officers within the line of their duty and afford ample facility to any citizen to investigate, even with a view of hostile proceedings against the officer. He agreed entirely with the views of Judge Davis; but whether the relator here was really the same relator who applied before and had obtained the relief he sought he was not clear. There would be no difficulty if any person other than the members of the committee who had applied before were the relator in this proceeding. It would be no answer then that somebody else had applied before. This application seemed to him to be substantially the application of the committee, and that Mr. Bush was now acting for the committee. The question then rose whether the fact that the committee had obtained a mandamus a short time ago was a bar to this proceeding. That depended upon whether the right to a mandamus was like the right to recover in an action, or whether this was a running right. If a running right it seemed to him that the committee could apply again even if a mandamus had once been granted. If they desired to see what had transpired within two or three weeks it would be no answer that a mandamus had been granted a month ago. Of course, the writ was discretionary, and the court would not allow it to be abused, if the application were made to harass and annoy. The only question left was whether the former application was a bar to this, and he would reflect upon that point.

After having his attention recalled to the fact that Mr. Bush swore in his petition that he had heard and believed there were no such books in the County Clerk's office as those he sought to obtain by mandamus, Judge Barrett said he would reflect upon the matter, and reserved his decision.

WILLIAM ROBERTS' SUICIDE.

The man who committed suicide on Friday evening by throwing himself from the ferry-boat Westfield, while the boat was on her way to Staten Island, was William Roberts, a resident of this City. He was employed as book-keeper by William Vance, a sash-weight manufacturer of Jersey City, and the cause of the suicide is supposed to have been a deficiency in his accounts which he was unable to make good. The hat and account-book of the unfortunate man were identified on Sunday by his wife. Those who saw Roberts just before committing the act say that he was sitting on the after rail of the boat and smoking in an apparently unconcerned manner. When the boat was off Robbin's Reef Roberts took from his pocket his account-book, threw it with his hat upon the deck and then dropped over the rail into the water. He sank at once, and the body has not yet been recovered. Roberts was a hard-working, temperate man.

BURGLARS SENT TO STATE PRISON.

As Mrs. Rebecca Boylan, of No. 50 Spring-street, returned to her apartments on the evening of the 11th inst. she met two men on the stairs carrying bundles, but paid no attention to the circumstance. On reaching her rooms she discovered that the doors had been broken open during her absence, and the premises robbed of clothing, jewelry, and other property, valued in all at $300. Inquiry among the other inmates of the house elicited the fact that the burglars had not only stolen her property, but had actually had the audacity to sell some portions of it to her neighbors at a trifling cost. The Police were informed, and the detectives of the Fourteenth Precinct arrested James Murtha, of No. 103 East Houston-street, and Patrick Finnegan, of No. 171 Mulberry-street, both of whom were identified as the men who had been seen at No. 50 Spring-street, and had disposed of some of the stolen property. In the General Sessions Court, yesterday, Assistant District Attorney Rollins took the prisoners' plea of guilty, and said both were old offenders. Judge Cowing sentenced them to four years each in State Prison.

REDUCING POLICEMEN'S PAY.

THE BOARD OF POLICE TO COMPLY WITH THE PROVISIONS OF THE ACT OF 1866.

The matter of reducing the pay of the Police force 20 per cent., in accordance with the provisions of the act of 1866, was considered yesterday by the Police Commissioners, and although no action has yet been taken by the board relative thereto, there is no doubt that a deduction of 20 per cent. will be made on the department pay-rolls for the current month. The force is looking forward to the reduction with great dissatisfaction. This is particularly the case with the patrolmen and doormen, whose pay will, by the deduction, be reduced from $1,200 to $960, and from $900 to $720 per annum, respectively. It is believed by a great many who have studied the matter closely that the clause under which the reduction is to be made has been repealed by subsequent legislation, but a contrary opinion is held by eminent lawyers, who argue that the act is still in force. The provision is contained in section 1 of chapter 561 of the Laws of 1866, and after designating the salaries to be received by the members of the force goes on to say: "Provided that whenever the currency of the United States shall attain a parvalue in gold the foregoing salaries as fixed by this act shall be reduced 20 per cent., excepting that in no case shall the yearly pay of Captains be less than $1,800, and that of Sergeants be less than $1,400." The force have been in the receipt of the following salaries since the passage of this act: Inspectors, $3,500; Captains, $2,000; Sergeants, $1,600; patrolmen, $1,200, and doormen, $900; and the Police Surgeon, under the recent decision of the Court of Appeals, are entitled to $2,250 per annum, although for several years past they have received only $1,500. The salaries of the Superintendent, clerks, and other employes of the department are fixed by the board, and, it is held, are not affected by the provisions of the act of 1866. The pay-rolls of the force for the present month will be made out on the following basis: Inspectors at the rate of $2,800 per annum; Captains, $1,600; Sergeants, $1,400; patrolmen, $960; doormen, $720, and Police Surgeons, $1,800. The clerical force in Commissioner Wheeler's office has been busy for several days past in making preparations for the making up of the pay-rolls on the new basis, in anticipation of decisive action of the board at its regular meeting to-day.

Mr. S. C. Hawley, who has been the Chief Clerk of the department for nearly 20 years, and who is looked upon as an authority in Police law, said yesterday that in his opinion the provisions of the act of 1866, quoted above, were repealed by the Charter of 1873. He had so informed the Police Commissioners, but under the peculiar circumstances it was deemed advisable to refer the matter to the Corporation Counsel for his opinion. Mr. Whitney, in his opinion, (hitherto printed in the TIMES,) held that the act had been repealed, but as there was great diversity of opinion among eminent lawyers on this point, he advised that 20 per cent. of the salaries of those affected be withheld, and that a test case should be arranged so as to bring the matter before the courts for argument, and to obtain the decision of the Court of Appeals thereon. In that event the question could be definitely settled. The Commissioners, Mr. Hawley believed, would act in accordance with the suggestion of Mr. Whitney. They would be compelled to do so to protect themselves, and any policeman could bring suit for the recovery of the money withheld from him. The courts would doubtless give precedence to a suit of that nature, and every facility would be extended to the plaintiffs to have an early decision from the Court of Appeals.

CURLING AT CENTRAL PARK.

VARIOUS CONTESTS IN THE RINKS YESTERDAY—THE SCORES OF THE CONTESTING CLUBS.

Half of the curling lake, at Central Park, having been cleared of snow, a large number of curlers assembled yesterday upon its frozen surface, and engaged in three spirited contests. The roughness of the ice near the "Tees" marred the play somewhat, but in all other respects the contestants had no cause for fault-finding. The clubs represented were the Yonkers Curling Club, Jersey City Curling Club, St. Andrew's, Ivanhoe, Empire City, and Thistle. The Yonkers Club and the Jersey City played against each other in three rinks, for a medal, the score resulting as follows:

The St. Andrew's Club, of this City, contended for a medal with the Ivanhoe, of Paterson, N. J, in two rinks. From the start the "Saints," as their brother curlers dubbed them, had won an easy victory. The score stood as follows:

RINK NO. 1.

St. Andrew.	Ivanhoe.

THE VANDERBILT WILL CASE AGAIN.

A brief argument took place yesterday, before Surrogate Calvin, on the motion recently made by the contestants in the Vanderbilt will case to compel the Executors to file an inventory of the estate. Gen. Postley appeared for the motion, and Henry L. Clinton and Joseph H. Choate to oppose it. Cornelius J. Vanderbilt was present representing the contestants, but William H. Vanderbilt did not appear. Counsel for the proponents argued that in the present state of this contest the Executors are expressly prohibited by the statute from doing anything with respect to the estate beyond exercising proper care over it, collecting the income, and paying the debts. Also, that in respect to Mrs. La Bau's application for an advance of money to be paid to her out of the estate, that point had already been decided adversely to her by the Surrogate at a previous stage in the case, and that this motion must therefore be dismissed. Gen. Postley argued that the filing of an inventory would only be an act in the nature of the exercise of proper care over the property, and such action was not prohibited under the statute pending the contest of a will. The Surrogate reserved his decision. On Thursday next the motion will be argued on the contestants' petition to have the Executors removed.

Having got the case of Cornelius J. Vanderbilt against William H. Vanderbilt upon the day calendar of Part III. of the Supreme Court, Mr. Scott Lord appeared before Judge Landon, yesterday, and made an energetic appeal to have it advanced to trial before all other causes. The motion was denied.

THE FIRM OF BELDEN & CO.

The troubles of the partners in the lately-dissolved firm of William Belden & Co. again occupied the attention of Judge Joseph F. Daly, in the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday. Mr. Washington E. Conner appeared by counsel, and charged his fellow Receiver of the assets of the firm, Henry Belden, Jr., with failing to obey the order made by Judge Daly on Friday last, directing him to deposit all the books of the firm in his possession with Mr. Everett P. Wheeler, the Referee in the case. Judge Daly issued an order to Mr. Belden to show cause before him to-morrow morning.

TRYING TO SAVE HIS CLIENT.

A case involving the interpretation of the laws affecting homicide was argued yesterday in the General Term of the Supreme Court. It was in review of the case of John McMahon, plaintiff in error, who pleaded guilty a short time ago, in the Court of General Sessions, to a charge of cruelty to animals. He was sentenced to pay a fine of $200 and to stand committed to the custody of the Warden of the City Prison until he had paid the fine, or had completed a term of imprisonment not to exceed one day for each dollar of the fine. The appeal to the Supreme Court was upon the ground that the act for the punishment of those who inflict cruelty upon animals is too general, and conflicts with the laws defining the crime of homicide. Charles W. Brooks appeared for the appellant, and argued that the use of the words "any living animal," in the act referred to above, permitted too great latitude in interpretation, and that by interpreting it literally a person guilty of homicide might be punished only for misdemeanor. "Man, he said, is the highest form of animal. For one man then to act cruelly toward or to kill another would, under the act, be merely a misdemeanor and not punishable under the laws that have existed for years in respect to homicide." Mr. Brooks also argued that the act referring to punishment for cruelty to animals was enacted simply for the benefit of the New-York Society organized for that purpose. Under it the society is endowed with the money received at courts for fines imposed on convicted offenders. He considered that this fact rendered the act null because it violated the statute which forbids the payment of public moneys to any private corporation except by appropriation. Decision reserved.

THE IMMIGRATION COMMISSION.

ABSTRACT OF THE ANNUAL REPORT—LARGE INCREASE OF ARRIVALS—THE WORK OF THE YEAR.

The annual report of the Commissioners of Emigration will be presented to the Legislature today. The following is an abstract: The total number of passengers landed at the port of New-York from foreign countries during the year 1878 was 121,369, a large and unexpected increase, after a long period of diminished immigration. Of this number 75,347 were aliens, while 46,022 were citizens or persons who had before landed at some port of the United States. Comparison with the record of the previous year shows a gain for the past year in the number of aliens arriving at this port of 20,811. The number of passengers who came steerage or third class during 1878, and thus came under the immediate care of the board, was 83,801. The countries from which they severally came have already been noted in THE TIMES. Of the above number 30,586 reported their intended destination as the State of New-York, 7,855 as the Middle States, 33,653 as the Western and North-western States, 4,921 as the Eastern States, and 1,666 as the Southern States; 1,011 went to Canada, and 97 to South America. During the year 65,352 pieces of baggage were landed at Castle Garden. Through the Bureau of Information 29,748 immigrants have been placed in communication with their relatives and friends, without expense. There have been very few complaints of extortion on the part of emigrant boarding-house keepers, and every case has been promptly investigated and the delinquents promptly punished. During the year there were 3 deaths and 7 births, and 1,739 persons received treatment in the local hospital on Ward's Island. The official statistics of the Labor Bureau for the past year show a considerable increase in the number obtaining employment, the total being 10,568, of which 5,623 were males and 4,945 females. The females, as a general rule, were engaged as house servants, while of the males 794 secured mechanical and professional employment, and 4,829 were hired as farm hands and common laborers. During the year 5,623 meals were issued at Castle Garden, and $6,349 91 advanced to assist in paying the cost of transporting destitute immigrants to their relatives or to places where employment had been found for them. Friends or employers of the immigrants have refunded $4,704 60. Through this charitable arrangement 1,408 persons have been sent inland or to Europe during the year by the commission. During the past year it became necessary to expend a large sum of money for painting and general repairs of the buildings under the control of the commission on Ward's Island, as for several years past little could be done in this way, owing to the very limited amount of funds at the disposal of the board. On Dec. 31, 1877, there were 239 patients in the hospitals. During 1878, 1,847 were admitted, and 69 children were born alive in the hospitals. The total number under treatment during the year was 2,175, of whom 1,918 were discharged and 70 died, leaving on Dec. 31 last, 187 inmates. The cases under treatment in the surgical hospital numbered 1,052, of whom 899 were cured and discharged, and 5 died. There were at the beginning of the year 124 patients in the Asylum for the Insane, of whom 64 were males and 60 females. During the year 59 were admitted, making the whole number treated 183. Of these 16 were discharged as cured, 30 were improved, 38 were unimproved, and 8 died. The number remaining on Dec. 31, 1878, was 85.

On Jan. 1, 1878, the number of immigrants on Ward's Island was 677, 51 less than at the same date of the year previous. During 1878 2,910 were admitted, of whom 526 still remained on Dec. 31. The nationalities of those admitted were: Germany, 1,457; Ireland, 623; Italy, 235; England, 130; Russia, 10; Austria, 48; Switzerland, 93; France, 18; Scotland, 34; Poland, 15; Hungary, 29; Belgium, 3; Holland 10; Norway, 10; Canada, 10; China, 2; West Indies, 2; Sweden, 35, and 63 children born or admitted to the institution. A portion of the lands under water and fronting the state property on Ward's Island is offered for sale by the owners, and if these lands can be obtained for a reasonable sum, the Commissioners recommend that they be purchased for the State. Of the appropriation of $150,000 made by the Legislature to meet the expenditures of the board from May 1, 1878, to May 1, 1879, there has been expended for the eight months ending Dec. 31, $79,678; $70,830 59. The receipts during the year from various sources, including a balance on hand Jan. 1, 1878, of $377 63, aggregated $158,827 90, and the disbursements $157,666 71, leaving a balance of $1,161 19. The indebtedness of the board, which has been accumulating since the month of May, 1871, when the commutation fee was reduced from $2 50 to $1 50 per passenger, and the latter, in consequence of decreased immigration, proved entirely inadequate to meet the expenses of the commission, is as follows:

Due Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank, (bond and mortgage)	$200,000
Due Commissioners of landing depot	36,000
Due cities, towns, and counties of the State for the support of immigrants	105,008
Due emigrant fund account	13,258
Total	$354,266

Following are the estimates of the amounts needed next year:

Ward's Island institutions	$85,000
Castle Garden Landing Depot	40,000
Interest, insurance, &c.	25,000
Total	$150,000

An additional appropriation of $20,000 is asked for the preservation of the buildings on Ward's Island—some 40 in number—and for repairs to the dock and baggage-room at Castle Garden.

THE NINTH REGIMENT VETERANS.

The Veterans of the Ninth Regiment met at the armory of the active regiment last evening, Col. William Scott in the chair. Major John T. Pryer, Chairman of the Committee on the History of the Regiment, reported that unsuccessful efforts had been made to obtain, by correspondence, data for a historical record of the regiment from its formation to the present time, and that it would be necessary to send some one to Albany to examine the official records in the Adjutant-General's office. On motion of Lieut.-Col. Sanford, the Committee of two, consisting of Major Pryer and Lieut.-Col. Frazee, was appointed to go to Albany to-day for the information. The committee on the presentation of a badge to the company realizing the largest number of men during the year reported in favor of a neat gold medal depending from a bar upon which was the word "recruiting," while across the face of the medal was a representation of the regimental pin. Jerome Bernheimer, Maurice Bernheim, M. J. Beaumann, and Capt. Henry Miller were elected members of the association. Information having been received by the association that its representative badges were being worn by parties who were not members, Capt. Hussey, Col. Frazee, and Capt. McCauley were appointed a committee to ascertain if legal measures could not be taken to prevent outside parties from wearing their badges.

CITY RECORD COMMISSION.

The City Record Commission, consisting of Mayor Cooper, Commissioner Campbell, of the Department of Public Works, and Corporation Counsel Whitney, have had before them at several executive sessions a proposition to remove Mr. C. F. Wood from the position of Supervisor of the City Record. After discussing the matter, they decided to send a communication to Mr. Wood, stating that they were not satisfied at the manner in which he had performed his duties, and requesting him to make such explanations as he might deem necessary to the board at its next meeting. This course was adopted in order to comply with the provisions of the charter which requires that employes of the City Government, before their services are dispensed with, shall have an opportunity to show cause why they should not be removed. The Commissioners met again yesterday, and received a communication from Mr. Wood, stating that he had received their letter too late to have a reply prepared in time for their session. They then gave him until this afternoon to present his answer. Ex-Assemblyman Thomas Costigan, who rendered important services in the contest against Tammany last November, is mentioned as a candidate for the position.

M'KENNA'S SENTENCE POSTPONED.

Frank McKenna, convicted of manslaughter in the third degree, in having caused the death of a youth named William B. Wilise, whom he shot in a street row in Mulberry-street, was called up for sentence in the General Sessions Court yesterday. Counsel for the prisoner moved for a new trial and in arrest of judgment, on the ground of errors committed during the trial. Assistant District Attorney Rollins opposed the motion, and Judge Cowing reserved his decision until to-morrow. The court-room was crowded with the same gang of roughs who had attended as a body-guard during the trial.

THE NEW BOARD OF APPORTIONMENT.

The first meeting of the new Board of Estimate and Apportionment will be held in the City Hall on to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock. It consists of Mayor Cooper, Controller Kelly, Mr. John Wheeler, the President of the Tax Commission, and Mr. Jordan L. Mott, the President of the Board of Aldermen. The meeting has been called for the transaction of general business.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

Hereafter New-Orleans and Gulf cottons will be quoted together on the Cotton Exchange of this City.

An assignment for the benefit of creditors, from Raymond Schroeder to Frederick G. Anderson, was filed yesterday in the County Clerk's office.

The Guardian Fire Insurance Company state that they have no loss in any of the burned buildings in Worth-street. The water damage in the adjoining buildings does not amount to $600.

A few of the Aldermen expect that Mayor Cooper will send in two names for the vacant Police Commissioners to their board to-day for confirmation, but they are likely to be disappointed.

Two hundred and thirty-three immigrants have landed at Castle Garden since Saturday. The Celtic brought 52; the Algeria, 29; the Herder, 60; the Nevada, 20, and the Amerique, 72.

The wagons of the committee having charge of the collection of clothing and provisions for the poor of the City, were circulated yesterday in the upper districts. The collections were gratifying, and many parcels were delivered at the depot, No. 1,526 Broadway, by persons who were not ready when the wagons passed their houses.

A writ of habeas corpus was issued by Judge Barrett yesterday, on the application of Charles Strauss, counsel for Cecilia Bennett, directing her husband, David Bennett, to produce their son James, aged 12 years, before the court on Wednesday morning next. In her petition she alleges that she was abandoned by her husband on the 11th of December last, who took the boy with him and now refuses even to allow her to see him.

Messrs. Jayne and Matthews, United States Local Inspectors of Steam Vessels, took testimony yesterday in respect to the recent collision between the Harlem steam-boat Morrisania and a tug-boat, with a tow, off Astoria. The testimony of the pilot and other employes of the Morrisania was taken, all tending to show that the steamer gave the proper signals, and endeavored to avoid the tug. The testimony of the tug-boat employes will be taken today.

BROOKLYN.

Charles Spencer, aged 3 years, of No. 81 North Oxford-street, while playing with matches last evening, set fire to his clothing, and received burns from which he died in a few hours.

Ex-City Assessor James O. Ostrom died on Sunday evening at his late residence, No. 184 South Ninth-street, of heart disease. Mr. Ostrom, who was 61 years of age at the time of his death, was quite prominent in local politics some years ago.

Michael Reynolds was arrested in New-York yesterday morning on a warrant issued by Justice Elliot at the instance of William Wilson, of No. 284 Broadway, E. D. Wilson charges Reynolds with obtaining $150 worth of plumber's material from him by false pretenses.

The indictments found against Commissioners of City Works Flaherty and Bennett and Messrs. Milne and Daly, subordinates in the same department, were yesterday transferred from the Court of Oyer and Terminer to the City Court, where Judge Neilson will hear argument to-day as to the date to be decided on for the trial.

James A. Thrappe, a shoemaker; George A. Duffy, a carpenter, and Thomas Parker, a stableman, all residing at No. 465 Dean-street, fought about the key to a closet yesterday morning. Thrappe cut Parker in the arm with a knife, and Duffy struck Thrappe on the head with a bale-stick, inflicting a severe wound. All the men were arrested.

The salaries of the clerks in the Board of Health were reduced 10 per cent. some time ago, in order to keep the expenditures of the department within the appropriation. In order to provide a fund to meet any emergency that may arise, such as an unhealthy Summer, a still further reduction in the salary list will, it is said, be made next month.

At a meeting of the Board of Aldermen yesterday the Corporation Counsel was directed to commence suit against the sureties of ex-Tax Collector Isaac Badeau, whose default several years ago while in office has never been made good to the city. A resolution was passed after some debate, appropriating $250 to purchase badges for five of the newly-elected Aldermen.

A man who gave the name of William Thompson was caught last evening in the act of ransacking a bureau drawer in the house of James Elliott, No. 281 South Fifth-street. He fled from the house, escaping by the front door, but was captured, after a sharp chase, by Sergeant Brennan, of the Sixth Precinct. Thompson said he lived in New-York, but refused to give the number or street.

The second trial of the suit of W. P. Groom against Peter Cooper, to recover $50,000 for libel, was continued yesterday. The venerable philanthropist took the stand and repeated the evidence given by him on the first trial almost word for word. Mr. Cooper, despite the mild protests of the lawyers, related, as is his habit on all public occasions when opportunity offers, a large part of his personal history, the facts of which have no bearing whatever on the case being tried. Among other things Mr. Cooper said he would be 88 years of age on the 12th of next month, and that he had learned three trades—hatter, brewer, and carriage-maker—before he was 21 years of age. Mr. Cooper admitted writing the letter complained of by Groom and asserted that he believed its contents to be true.

Justice Gilbert yesterday granted a motion in the case of the People against the Mutual Gaslight Company to compel the respondents to show their stock-book and the minutes of their transactions to the relators. The latter claim that the defendants have violated their charter in not subscribing the amount of capital required by law within a specified time, but admit that they have no case unless they are permitted to hunt up evidence by examining the defendant's books. Attorney-General Schoonmaker is acting in the interest of the Ring men who control the greater part of the stock in the old gas companies. The old companies are paying the legal expenses necessary for the present suit for the purpose of preventing competition and consequent lower rates by a possibly successful new company.

LONG ISLAND.

Pat Rooney, the comic singer, owned a farm of 25 acres at Little Neck. It was sold under foreclosure yesterday for $5,000.

Yesterday afternoon Mrs. Joseph Craft, of Glen Cove, about 45 years old, while waiting in the Long Island Railroad Depot, at Hunter's Point, for the 3:30 train, fell from her seat to the floor, and was taken up dead. She had been shopping in New-York.

Rev. T. T. Kendrick was arraigned yesterday before Judge Betts, at Jamaica, on a charge of having obtained goods by false pretenses. Mr. Skidmore, the complainant, was in court with his counsel, ex-Judge Busteed, but Mr. Kendrick was without counsel, and the examination was adjourned until to-day.

A new life-saving station has recently been erected on the east end of Coney Island. The building is one of the handsomest and best-equipped of its kind on the Atlantic coast. It is 60 by 30 feet, two stories high, built in the Gothic style of architecture. The boat-room is on the first floor. In the centre of the room and ready for use stands the surf-boat on a large truck. The station is also supplied with a metallic surf-boat. There are three other boats belonging to the station, together with a life-car, mortar, life-lines, and three suits of Capt. Merriman's life-saving dresses, medicine-chest, surgical utensils, &c. The rear room is used as a kitchen and dining-room. On the top floor are apartments for the Captain, crew, and a spare room for visitors, and the lookout. The crew are all experienced surfmen, who receive $40 per month for their services.

NEW-JERSEY.

Rev. Mr. Haley, of the Roseville Presbyterian Church, has resigned his pastorate on account of ill health.

Mrs. John Hart, of Garden-street, Newark, quarreled with her sister yesterday, and took poison in consequence. The prompt use of antidotes saved her life.

Thirteen years ago John Measure robbed the little Post Office at Glory Hole, N. J., of a quantity of stamps and a small amount of money. On Saturday he returned, was recognized, arrested, and lodged in the County Jail at Freehold.

John Halliard was arrested yesterday on a third indictment charging him with conspiring to defraud the creditors of the Mechanics' and Laborers' Savings Bank, of Jersey City. Bail was fixed at $2,500, in default of which he was committed to jail. He has as yet been unable to find bail upon any of the indictments.

A. M. Danner started on Sunday at midnight, in the Paterson Wigwam, to walk 450 miles in six days. At 6 o'clock last night, having been on the track 18 hours, he had made 76 miles. By the terms of the agreement Danner is to sleep only three hours out of every 24, and is to walk until midnight of Saturday next.

The watch usually carried by William J. Cadmus was yesterday found at his residence, in Bayonne, and the fact that no money was found upon his person is accounted for by the fact that he had paid a bill during the day. It is now supposed that he left the track as Communipaw to visit his brother, Michael Simmons, who lives just beyond the point where Cadmus' body was found, and that in the darkness he accidentally walked off the bridge.

Chancellor Runyon yesterday granted an order restraining Meinhardt Hildebrandt, his wife, and a Mrs. Bowman from disposing of a house and lot worth $7,000, which he is alleged to have obtained from Frederick Roth by fraud. Mrs. Roth, who is an aged widow, gave Hildebrandt what she supposed was a power of attorney to enable him to transact some business for her. Subsequently she ascertained that the paper was in reality a deed of her property. Since the deed was signed Hildebrandt has collected and appropriated the rents and has also mortgaged the property to Mrs. Bowman. The case is set down for an early hearing.

A CARD FROM MR. EIDLITZ.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your reporter misunderstood many of the statements which I made to him in an interview published in to-day's TIMES—some of them so seriously that I trust you will allow me to correct the report. For example, I did not say, and could not have said, that iron shrinks when heated, nor that a fire obtaining headway in a floor of any of the great commercial buildings could not be checked by any possible means, nor that the tendency of buildings is not toward the use of water-shafts should not be built outside of a building, with windows to draw the fire away from the building, &c.

LEOPOLD EIDLITZ.

NEW-YORK, Monday, Jan. 20, 1879.

STABBING HIS FATHER.

Martin Coleman, of No. 9 Ferdon-street, Newark, N. J., is lying in a dangerous condition at his home from a wound inflicted by his son, a youth of 20. The affray occurred on Thursday last, when Mr. Coleman undertook to reprimand his son for not going to work. The son defied his father's authority, when his father struck him, and the young man drew a knife and stabbed his father in the arm, near the elbow. The cut itself was not dangerous, but the knife severed one of the main arteries, and, owing to the delay in obtaining a physician, Mr. Coleman lost a large amount of blood before the wound was dressed. Yesterday he was very low, and it was determined to arrest the son, but he had fled the city.

THE RECENT FRENCH CRISIS

HOW THE MINISTRY WON ITS VICTORY.

THE RESULT ATTRIBUTED TO GAMBETTA'S FORBEARANCE—MODIFICATIONS OF THE STAFF ANNOUNCED — THE RADICALS WORKING FOR COMPLETE AMNESTY FOR THE COMMUNISTS.

PARIS, Jan. 21.—Modifications of the staff in all branches of the Administration are announced. The Patrie asserts that President MacMahon has agreed to changes in the staffs of certain Army corps proposed by Gen. Gresley, the new Minister of War.

The Radical Deputies have prepared a resolution in favor of complete amnesty to the Communists. Sixty Deputies have already signed the resolution, and M. Louis Blanc will shortly give notice of it in the Assembly. Victor Hugo will submit the same resolution for the signatures of the Senators belonging to the Republican Union.

The Republique Française warns the Cabinet that a majority still exists which will keep a strict watch over the use it makes of the respite given it. The life or death of the Cabinet depends upon its prompt fulfillment of its promises.

M. Louis Jules Denormandie, a Life Senator, has been appointed Governor of the Bank of France.

LONDON, Jan. 21.—The Paris correspondent of the Times says: "The Government's victory is due, primarily, to a general movement of sound public opinion. The moderate journals of Paris and the provinces have vigorously declared in favor of the Cabinet. The Temps, Journal des Debats, Siecle, National, and other journals, ably defended the Ministry. The moderate Republicans were induced to seek a platform of conciliation with the Left Centre, who felt that the attack was directed against themselves and their policy, while the Cabinet, to avoid imperiling its friends, the Republic, and liberty, accepted the necessity of depriving its adversaries of the plea about changes of functionaries, which served as a pretext for other designs. Lastly, those of the Left who were resolved to overturn the Cabinet had neither the men nor a programme acceptable to the country."

The Standard's Paris correspondent says: "The vote is a serious blow to M. Gambetta's prestige. The victory of the Ministry is ascribed in Republican circles to the forbearance of M. Gambetta, and there can be no doubt that it is true to a great extent. If M. Gambetta had gone into the tribune and delivered, with all his fervid eloquence, an amplification of the c'est perdu article, which appeared in the République Française yesterday, and every word of which, his friends assure me, he dictated, no doubt the vote would have been very different. But as he has made a series of onslaughts on the Government, and as, no later than this morning, his friends predicted the downfall of the Ministry, he has unquestionably courted the defeat which has overtaken him. Had he been prepared to accept the Presidency of the Council, and undertaken the formation of a Cabinet, the Dufaure Ministry would not have obtained a vote of confidence as the result of the debate. But if he would not take office, there was no reason for unsetting M. Dufaure. His own sense told him as much, for this very day, while intimate friends of his were telling me that the fate of the Cabinet was sealed, and that another Cabinet, composed of politicians under his influence, would be gazetted within 24 hours, he was himself so conscious of his inevitable defeat, that he not only abstained from taking part in the debate, and conducting the attack against the Ministry which he himself had planned, but ostentatiously paraded himself in his barrister's robes at the Palace of Justice, where the statue of Berryer was unveiled, and only took his place in the Chamber of Deputies after the sitting commenced."

The Daily Telegraph's correspondent ascribes the compromise to M. Gambetta's personal efforts.

The correspondent of the Daily News, who has been supporting the attack on the Cabinet, makes no comment on the result.

The 5 per cent. rentes were quoted at 113 francs 75 centimes on the boulevards after the vote was made known.

LONDON, Jan. 22.—A Paris dispatch to the Times says: "Prior to the main division on Monday, Gambetta voted with the minority in favor of the order of the day, pure and simple. This order of the day was proposed by the Gambettists so as to overturn the Cabinet, without actually censuring it, and would thus have freed the Gambettists from the necessity of propounding a rival programme. The order was rejected by a vote of 200 against 155. In the main division Gambetta and 45 of his adherents of the Republican Union abstained from voting, not being willing to go the length of negativing the vote of confidence when there was no longer any alternative motion. Twenty Reactionaries voted with the Radicals in the main division. On this vote the pure Left turned the scale. Their bureaux only agreed, by a majority of 1, to vote confidence in the terms demanded by the Ministry. They were influenced by a rumor that the Reactionaries intended to vote with the Radicals.

The Standard's Paris correspondent telegraphs: "It is said that a plan for replacing the Dufaur Ministry by a Cabinet which would pave the way for the elevation of M. Gambetta to the Presidency in 1880 was formed immediately after his speech at Romans."

THE DISTURBED EAST.

REPORT THAT THE RUSSO-TURKISH TREATY WAS TO HAVE BEEN SIGNED YESTERDAY—AN ITALIAN COMMISSIONER MURDERED BY TURKS—THE SURRENDER OF PODGORITZA TO THE MONTENEGRINS.

LONDON, Jan. 21.—It is announced that the Turkish Frontier Commissioners started today for the rendezvous with their Greek colleagues.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 21.—The Agence Russe announces in a very positive form that, according to intelligence received by the Turkish Ambassador to Russia, the definitive treaty was to be signed at Constantinople to-day.

VIENNA, Jan. 21.—Advices from Belgrade are to the effect that Col. Gola, the Italian member of the Servian Boundary Commission, was robbed and murdered by Turkish brigands near Pievna.

ROME, Jan. 21.—In the Senate to-day Signor Depretis, in replying to an interpellation, declared that the Government's foreign policy sought to ameliorate the condition of Christians in Turkey, and to co-operate in the complete execution of the treaty of Berlin. He stated that the accusations of Russo-Philism and of a desire to acquire Albania, or fresh territory on the shore of the Mediterranean were unfounded, and asserted that the confidence of the powers in Italy was undiminished.

RAGUSA, Jan. 21.—Upon the arrival at Podgoritza of the Turkish Commissioners charged with the surrender of the town to the Montenegrins, all of the inhabitants immediately withdrew to their houses as a demonstration of disapproval.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

BISMARCK TO WITHDRAW HIS PARLIAMENTARY DISCIPLINE BILL—THE BUSINESS AND LABOR TROUBLES IN ENGLAND.

LONDON, Jan. 21.—A Berlin dispatch to the Pall Mall Gazette says it is stated that Prince Bismarck has decided to withdraw the Parliamentary Discipline bill, leaving the matter to the Reichstag.

The Daily Telegraph, in its financial article, says: "The liabilities of the Gothenburg Commercial Company are £200,000. The failure was the result of advances to Swedish lumber merchants and paper mills."

The ship-builders of Hartlepool, Stockton, and Middlesbrough have accepted the compromise offered by the masters, namely, half the reduction of wages originally proposed.

The master tanners of Bermondsey, a suburb of London, have given notice of a 5 per cent. reduction of the wages of their employes. The men declare that they will resist.

LONDON, Jan. 22.—Three hundred more weavers at Blackburn have struck against the reduction of their wages. The town is placarded with incitements to a general strike of the weavers.

A Berlin dispatch to the Post says the appointment of a joint European commission to take precautions against the plague is mooted. Germany and Austria have resolved to send physicians to watch the epidemic.

The Colonial Office communicates the following: "Capt. Patterson, with two Europeans and five natives, while returning from a mission to a native Prince, died from drinking from a poisonous spring near the Victoria Falls of the Zambesi River."

PENNSYLVANIA'S NEW GOVERNOR.

INAUGURATION CEREMONIES AT HARRISBURG —LARGE NUMBER OF SPECTATORS.

HARRISBURG, Penn., Jan. 21.—The inauguration to-day was a decided success. As was anticipated, it far surpassed, in point of attendance and magnificence, any similar occasion in the history of the State. There were not less than 10,000 persons in the line, half of whom were members of the National Guard, handsomely uniformed and equipped. There were at least 20,000 strangers in the city, including those who came to participate in the inauguration ceremonies. In fact the crowd was almost too large to be managed, and the difficulty of handling so large a body of men within a limited space became manifest when those having charge of the affair undertook to form their line for the march over the route. After the usual delay, the line was got in motion, and in due season the Governor and Governor-elect reached the Capitol, where the certificate of election was read by the Clerk of the Senate, after which the oath of office was administered by Judge Paxson, of the Supreme Bench, and the inaugural address was delivered, followed by a Governor's salute from some pieces of ordnance stationed south of the Capitol building.

A handsome display of fireworks was made this evening from a platform in front of the Capitol. Everything passed off in good order, the large crowds of strangers conducting themselves in a manner which reflects the highest credit upon the good sense and prudence of the people of the Commonwealth. The visiting organizations have already begun to depart, every out-going train bearing its share, and by to-morrow noon the city will have resumed its usual peace and quiet.

A rare incident in the history of this State occurred to-day. Owing to the inauguration being delayed until 1:20 P. M. the State was without a Governor for 1 hour and 20 minutes, Gov. Hartranft's term having expired at noon.

THE OSWEGO SAVINGS BANK.

OSWEGO, N. Y., Jan. 21.—A dispatch from Schenectady, this afternoon, says the argument on the motion for the appointment of a Receiver for the Oswego City Savings Bank was opened, before Judge Landon, by Attorney-General Schoonmaker to-day. The Attorney-General read the report of Bank Superintendent Lamb, and asked for the appointment of a Receiver, as the report clearly showed that the bank was in an unsound condition. Mr. Perry made an argument for the bank. He read several affidavits, showing that the bank was solvent and not in any way unsound. He showed that the mortgages held by the bank amounted to $192,432 22, and the interest to about $12,000, and this could be collected without any expense. The Attorney-General claimed that there was a deficiency of about $71,000, if not more, and that the bank was worse than insolvent. The Judge took the papers and will hold them to give an opportunity to make an arrangement satisfactory to the Banking Department. If this is accomplished, the injunction will be set aside.

ANXIOUS FOR THEIR INHERITANCE.

HARTFORD, Conn., Jan. 21.—Daniel Wadsworth, the founder of Wadsworth Atheneum, in this city, left at his death, 30 years ago, about $300,000, and in his will gave a fixed annuity to each of seven heirs, and provided that at the death of the last one the principal of the estate should be divided among his grand-nephews and grand-nieces. All the recipients of annuities, except one, Mrs. Dr. Leonard Bacon, of New-Haven, are now dead, and the heirs number 30 or more. The estate has rolled up to about $575,000, and is constantly increasing. All the heirs have united in a petition to the Legislature, asking that hereafter, until the time for distributing the estate, the Trustees shall be directed to divide the income every year among the heirs to whom it must eventually go. This is said to be especially the wish of Mrs. Bacon. Hon. H. B. Harrison represents the petitioners before the Legislature.

REDEEMING THE HOOSAC TUNNEL.

BOSTON, Jan. 21.—The Troy and Greenfield Railroad Company has filed a bill in equity in the Supreme Judicial Court for the redemption of the Hoosac Tunnel. The State took possession of the property in 1862, under a special act authorizing the surrender, the conditions of which were a reservation of the right of redemption until 10 years after completion of the tunnel, and a limitation of expenditures chargeable to the company at $2,000,000. It is claimed by the company that this act when accepted by the stockholders became a contract; that the sum to be paid was fixed and liquidated at $2,000,000 as a maximum; that at the time, the evidence before the Legislature went to prove that the tunnel was costing less than $2,000,000, and in fact the chief ground of opposition to the measure was based on the declaration that the tunnel was costing them less than the amount advanced by the State in aid of its construction.

A SCRANTON SAVINGS BANK CLOSING.

SCRANTON, Penn., Jan. 21.—The Scranton Trust Company and Savings Bank, at the annual meeting of stockholders, to-day, resolved to go into liquidation. The depositors and stockholders are fully secured, and will be paid at an early day. The affairs of the bank will be closed by its officers. This institution has been in existence for 10 years, and has ranked as one of the strongest in the State. This action is for prudential reasons and was entirely unexpected by the public, its business having been materially affected by the stringency of the times and the increased popularity of Government loans.

RECONSIDERING A STRIKE.

POTTSVILLE, Penn., Jan. 21.—The men at Beechwood Colliery, who struck last week on account of not receiving back pay, have asked permission of President Gowen to go to work again. The colliery was closed for the Winter immediately after the strike, but to-day Superintendent Whiting received orders from Mr. Gowen to start work again next Monday. He promises the men their November and December wages in two weeks, and steady work for the rest of the Winter.

CANADIAN TRADE DISCUSSION.

OTTAWA, Jan. 21.—The Dominion Board of Trade met to-day. A. Joseph, President, departed from the general custom and made no opening address. He considered that politics in a measure are introduced in these addresses, and it is the desire of the board to keep clear of this in their discussions. Capt. E. P. Dow, of Buffalo, and several other delegates from the United States National Board of Trade have arrived to attend the meeting.

A DISABLED LOCOMOTIVE.

NORWICH, Conn., Jan. 21.—As the 7:20 o'clock train from New-London reached Trading Cove this morning, the connecting-rod broke and made a hole in the fire-box. The engine was rendered completely useless. The train stopped on the very brink of the Cove. Engineer Leech and Fireman Flannagan were badly hurt, but not fatally. None of the cars were thrown from the track and none of the passengers were injured.

REDUCING ITS CAPITAL.

BOSTON, Jan. 21.—The stockholders of the National Bank of Commerce, in this city, have considered the question of reducing the capital stock from $2,000,000 to $1,500,000, on account of the shrinkage in the value of securities held by the bank. The vote will finally be decided on Jan. 28.

BEQUESTS TO RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

BOSTON, Jan. 21.—The late Alexander Dewitt, of Oxford, Mass., bequeathed $1,000 each, to the American Board of Foreign Missions, the Home Missionary Society, the American Bible Society, and the American Tract Society, of New-York.

COUNTERFEITERS AT WORK IN CANADA.

OTTAWA, Ontario, Jan. 21.—Large numbers of counterfeit $4 Dominion notes are in circulation. It is thought another gang of counterfeiters is at work in the city.

DEATH OF AN AMERICAN CONSUL.

GODERICH, Ontario, Jan. 21.—Prof. George J. Abbott, for some time American Consul, is dead.

UNITED STATES SENATORS.

PLATT ELECTED IN CONNECTICUT.

GEN. HAWLEY'S HONORABLE ACTION — A THREATENED BOLT AVOIDED—THE REPUBLICAN NOMINEE ELECTED IN EACH HOUSE.

HARTFORD, Conn., Jan. 21.—Very much to the surprise of Gen. Hawley's friends in Hartford, it became apparent this morning that, as the Republican members of the Legislature arrived from their homes, there was a strong feeling prevailing to ignore the caucus action in nominating Hon. O. H. Platt for Senator and cause a bolt in the open session of the House. At first it was believed that the matter had taken no organized shape and would really amount to nothing. But inquiry showed that the movement was a serious one, and that from 30 to 40 members of the House were concerned in it, and that the feeling was contagious. The talk was that the caucus was peculiarly run; that all discussion was stifled, and that on a fair and proper understanding different action would have been taken. Members who had voted for Henry B. Harrison and Gen. Hawley were active in making points against the caucus. Nothing particular was said against Mr. Platt, but members reported that their constituents were dissatisfied and wanted delay, even if it resulted in another caucus and a nomination over again of Mr. Platt.

Gen. Hawley himself did not hear of the movement until noon, when he went from his house to the Courant office and at once sent messengers for various leading members and several of his friends outside of the Legislature, and told them that under no circumstances would he accept of an election gained in the manner proposed. In order that his views might be thoroughly understood, he addressed a formal letter to his friend, Senator Spencer, of the Second District, with the understanding that it might be shown among those who were inclined to proceed hastily and without advice. He said in this letter that having gone into a caucus, men were honorably bound to abide by its result unless some dishonorable method had been employed to secure a nomination, or unless the candidate selected were unworthy. In this case objections of this sort would not hold. Mr. Platt was an honorable man, and a worthy one, and should have every Republican vote. The effect of the interview and of the letter was wholesome, and members who had been inclined to make trouble agreed, upon consideration, that every interest demanded a conformity to the views expressed by Gen. Hawley, whose course is in striking contrast with that of the men who organized a successful bolt against him in 1872, and defeated him as the Republican caucus nominee.

When the vote, viva voce, was taken in the two houses this afternoon every Republican present voted for Platt. In the Senate there were two absentees, and Platt had 13 votes and W. H. Barnum, in the House there were 139 for Platt, 94 for Barnum, and Mr. Falvey, Greenbacker, of Sprague, voted for Alexander Troup, editor of the New-Haven Union. The two houses will meet in joint convention at noon to-morrow and confirm this vote.

MERIDEN, Conn., Jan. 21.—The information of the election to the United States Senate of Hon. Orville H. Platt was received at Mr. Platt's home with manifestations of great satisfaction. The American flag was thrown to the breeze from the Republican office upon the receipt of the news, and upon this signal flags were at once displayed from the City Hall, all the manufacturing establishments, and a large number of private residences. Democrats and Republicans alike joining in the demonstration. A committee consisting of Mayor Lines and a large number of prominent citizens is arranging for a general reception in Mr. Platt's honor on Wednesday evening.

CONKLING WINS THE SENATORSHIP.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE STATE LEGISLATURE— TWO VOTES FOR PETER COOPER.

ALBANY, Jan. 21.—In accordance with the requirements of the statute, the Senate proceeded at noon to ballot for a United States Senator for six years from the 4th of March next. All the Senators were present, and Roscoe Conkling received 20 votes and Lieut.-Gov. Dorsheimer 12. Senator Goebel, whose precise political status has been in some doubt, owing to his refusal to participate in the caucuses of either party, voted for Mr. Conkling. Senator Ecclesine, who it was feared by some of his colleagues would revive the stupid "protest" that so demoralized the Democratic caucus last night, on whom was called, for the second time, Mr. Dorsheimer, without availing himself of the privilege of explaining his vote. After the vote was announced, the Lieutenant-Governor formally declared Roscoe Conkling to have been elected on the part of the Senate to the United States Senate for a term of six years from the 4th of March.

At 12 o'clock the formal choice of a candidate for United States Senator was made in the Assembly. The Republicans cast 95 votes for Roscoe Conkling, the Democrats 23 for William Dorsheimer, and Banfield and Williams, Greenbackers, cast their votes for Peter Cooper.

The two houses will meet in joint convention to-morrow to compare notes, when the formalities of the election will be completed, and Mr. Conkling will be entitled to his certificate for another Senatorial term.

SENATOR CAMERON RE-ELECTED.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE PENNSYLVANIA LEGISLATURE—A SHORT SPEECH BY THE SENATOR.

HARRISBURG, Jan. 21.—The Legislature assembled at 3 P. M. to-day to elect a United States Senator. J. D. Cameron was re-elected on the first ballot, by a majority of 21 over all competitors. In the Senate the vote was as follows: Cameron, 28; Clymer, 16; M. Russell Thayer, 1; Edward McPherson, 1; Galusha A. Grow, 1; Daniel Agnew, 2. In the House Cameron received 107 votes, including those of three Greenbackers; Clymer, 76; Agnew, 11; McPherson, 2. This gives Cameron 135 votes, all told, nine more than were necessary to elect. There were just five Republicans who refused to support the regularly and fairly made choice of the caucus. Their names are as follows: Senators Everhart, of Chester, who had Senatorial aspirations himself; Kauffman, of Lancaster, who seeks cheap notoriety, and Lee, of Venango, who imagines that the oil interests of the State have an enemy in Senator Cameron; in the House the recalcitrants were Wolf, of Union, who is of so little consequence that no one bothers himself to ascertain his reasons, if he has any, for his opposition to Cameron, and Mapes, of Venango, who is haunted by the same ghost which troubles the slumbers of Senator Lee. So pitiful has the opposition to Senator Cameron become that it does not even excite the contempt of that gentleman's friends, being utterly beneath notice.

The Legislature will meet in joint convention to-morrow, and formally ratify the separate proceedings of this afternoon.

After the election, a committee composed of Senators, members, and citizens called upon Senator Cameron, informed him of his election, and tendered their congratulations. The Senator thereupon departed from his usual custom and made a short speech, and, as if resolved, like another distinguished American noted for his reticence, to speak clearly and to the point when he did break the silence, the Senator made an exceptionally good speech, in which he returned thanks for the honor conferred, and reminded his hearers that there was an important battle ahead in 1880, and that to win that battle, in comparison to which the recent campaign in Pennsylvania was only a skirmish, they must stand shoulder to shoulder, each member of the grand party at all times prepared to yield a point for the securing of general strength and harmony.

THE FLORIDA SENATORSHIP.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Jan. 21.—At Tallahassee, to-day, the Legislature elected Wilkinson Call Senator, to succeed Senator Conover.

Wilkinson Call, Democrat, who was to-day elected United States Senator, was born in Virginia, but came to Florida early in life. His mother was opposed to taking the State out of the Union. Young Call was in the Confederate service in this State. He was one of the early and steadfast Whigs who supported the Bell and Everett electoral ticket in 1860. He was elected United States Senator under the reconstruction policy of President Johnson, but was not admitted to a seat. Returning to the State, he resumed the practice of his profession, that of law, which he has followed since. He is 50 years old, and a resident of Jacksonville.

INDIANA'S DEMOCRATIC SENATOR.

VOORHEES ELECTED IN BOTH HOUSES—DEMOCRATIC BUNCOMBE IN THE HOUSE.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan. 21.—The day has been given up to Senatorial matters in the Senate. Before the noon adjournment the Republicans offered a resolution against the repeal of the Resumption act, which was passed under pressure of the previous question by a vote of 25 to 22, three Democratic Senators—Reeve, Saringhausen, and Winterbotham—voting with the Republicans. Then a resolution was offered that no one should be voted for for United States Senator who had voted for or pocketed the salary grab. This the Democrats moved to lay on the table, and succeeded, by a vote of 25 to 21. To get even, the Democrats offered a resolution that no man should be voted for who had speculated in Venezuelan bonds. This the Republicans generally supported, and defied any Democratic Senator to say on honor that he knew by competent evidence that Godlove S. Orth had ever so speculated. This was passed, 36 to 10, and then the Senate took a recess until the time to vote for Senator.

In the Senate the scene was tame and without incident. Reeve nominated Voorhees, and Langdon, of Tippecanoe, Orth. The Vote resulted: Voorhees, 26; Orth, 22; Buchanan, 1 —Poindexter, of Floyd. The two other National Senators voted with the Democrats. The vote on the long term was the same, Harrison receiving the 21 Republican votes. The Lieutenant-Governor declared Mr. Voorhees elected for the long and short terms.

In the House the scene was invested with interest and excitement. It was not certain, as in the Senate, that Voorhees would receive a majority on the first ballot, and no one knew how many were absent. The floor and galleries were crowded, among the spectators being Gov. Hendricks and wife. Gov. Williams was not present. Ninety-seven members answered to their names, one Democrat and one National being absent, and one elected member never having been sworn in, and still absent. Van Valzah, of Vigo, nominated Voorhees for the short term, as a man of the people, beloved by the people. The triumph of last October was Mr. Voorhees' triumph, and as he believed that to the victor belonged the spoils, Voorhees should reap the benefits of the victory. Owen, of Wayne, named Orth. The vote resulted: Voorhees, 57; Orth, 37; James Buchanan, 2; Shackelford, of Evansville, 1. This last was the vote of Major Gordon, of this county, who bolted Orth. Five so-called Nationals voted for Voorhees, because they had no chance to elect a man of their own party. For the long term, Willard, of Delaware, nominated Voorhees in a very fervid piece of rhetoric, patterned after Ingersoll at Cincinnati, but because of the wide variance between the eulogian and the subject, the speech fell flat upon the audience. It was badly overdone. He said the people demanded an able parliamentarian, a champion of the West, able to meet and defeat the Wall street man with a heart as cold as the eternal glaciers of Mont Blanc; to resist the sophistries of money power, a patriot, without fear or reproach; a statesman whose character was the apotheosis of political sagacity, whose integrity was as spotless as the plumage of the dove that descended from the bosom of the Father at the baptism in the Jordan. At this there were overstrained feelings of the crowd vented themselves in laughter. But the orator proceeded, and said that the man must be a worthy successor of Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, John C. Calhoun, Andrew Jackson, Thomas H. Benton, James Buchanan, and Stephen A. Douglas, and he said the only man who could answer their demands was the "grandest parliamentarian of the latter half of the nineteenth century, the brilliant leader of the people, Daniel W. Voorhees." After Pogram had been seated, Major Gordon named Gen. Ben. Harrison in a neat, but exceedingly plain, speech. The vote resulted: Voorhees, 57; Harrison, 38; Buchanan, 2. Immediately after the vote was declared, the House adjourned.

Gov. Hendricks said to the law partner of Voorhees, who was rushing to the telegraph office, "Give Senator Voorhees my warmest congratulations." The Democracy exhibited more interest and enthusiasm over to-day's work than has been seen in a Democratic Senatorial election since 1856. Voorhees is the idol of the rank and file of the Indiana Democracy. His style and swelling periods captivate the common mind, and it has come to be understood that he is not the favorite of the cold-blooded managing Ring here, led by Hendricks and McDonald. Hendricks is really deeply mortified, but is sagacious enough to be as warm in his approval as it is possible for him to be over anything. When Voorhees comes here on March 6, a grand ovation will be tendered him. Voorhees has 83 votes, three more than THE TIMES claimed for him at the start. His election has never been really doubtful.

THE WISCONSIN SENATORSHIP.

A DOUBTFUL CONTEST, WITH THE CHANCES IN FAVOR OF MATT CARPENTER.

MADISON, Jan. 21.—The Republican Legislative caucus held sessions this morning and this afternoon. Commencing with the eighteenth ballot, the voting continued without material change until the nintieth ballot, when Carpenter, aided by Keyes' votes, suddenly led with 35, Keyes following at 23, Howe at 25, with 4 for Washburn. Six more ballots were taken, an adjournment till evening being reached after the ninety-sixth ballot, which stood Carpenter, 33; Howe, 28; Keyes, 25; Washburn, 2. During both sessions there were frequent recesses for the purpose, if possible, of effecting a compromise, but none could be effected.

Pursuant to law, both houses of the Legislature met this evening and took official votes on the Senatorial successorship, with the following result: In the Assembly Carpenter received 20 votes, Howe, 20; Keyes, 18; Ryan, 21; Bouck, 11; balance scattering—no choice. In the Senate Keyes received 11 votes, Ryan, 8; Carpenter, 6; Howe, 4; Washburn, 1; Lewis, 1—no choice.

Midnight.—The Republican legislative caucus met at 7:30 o'clock, and, after considerable filibustering, the Keyes men forced an adjournment till 8 A. M. The Carpenter, Howe, and Keyes caucuses met immediately after. The Carpenter men decided that they would stand immovable. The Howe and Keyes men, in conference, decided that Judge Dyer, of Racine, should be their compromise candidate, but the fact is that the goods cannot be delivered, and the moment the men are absolved from allegiance to their respective leaders the Howe and Keyes voters will scatter, probably enough going to Carpenter as second choice to secure his election. It is generally believed at this hour that Carpenter will win within the first three ballots to-morrow morning. He is already preparing his speech of acceptance.

GOV. VANCE IN NORTH CAROLINA.

RALEIGH, N. C., Jan. 21.—Gov. Z. B. Vance was elected United States Senator today. He received the full Democratic vote. The Republicans voted solidly for Ralph P. Buxton. The latter has been Judge of the Superior Court for 15 years, and is an unflinching Republican. His vote for Senator is the forerunner of his nomination in 1880 for Governor.

LOGAN SUCCEEDS IN ILLINOIS.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 21.—Logan was elected Senator to-day—in the Senate by a majority of one; in the House by a majority of seven—over Black, (Dem.) Campbell, (Nat.) and McAuliffe, (Socialist.) There was no bolting, but two Republicans voted for Logan under protest.

THE ELECTION IN MISSOURI.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Jan. 21.—A ballot for United States Senator was taken in each house of the Legislature, at Jefferson City, at noon to-day, which resulted in the election of the Democratic caucus nominees, Gen. James Shields for the short term, and Col. George G. Vest for the long term.

AFFAIRS OF THE NATION.

THE NEW-YORK CUSTOM-HOUSE FIGHT.

SENATOR CONKLING PREPARING FOR A BITTER CONTEST—GEN. ARTHUR AND MR. LYDECKER IN WASHINGTON—THE REPLY TO SECRETARY SHERMAN'S CHARGES SAID TO BE A COMPLETE REFUTATION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—Senator Conkling, in anticipation of a bitter struggle with the Administration party in the Senate, is marshaling his forces, and to-night Gen. Arthur and his deputy, Mr. Lydecker, arrived in the city, and have been in consultation with him the greater part of this evening. Mr. Cornell will arrive to-morrow morning. It is understood that the reply of Messrs. Arthur and Cornell to the charges of Secretary Sherman will be ready for presentation to the Committee on Commerce at their meeting on Thursday. The document is pronounced by those who know its contents to be a complete refutation of the Secretary's charges. Mr. Conkling, it is said, will exert his influence to procure an adverse report from the Commerce Committee on Thursday. There will also be an attempt made at an early day to have the injunction of secrecy removed from both the charges and the answers thereto. Mr. Conkling will probably make this effort at the first executive session after his committee acts upon the nomination. There seems now to be no doubt but that both nominations will be reported adversely, and be rejected.

YESTERDAY'S CABINET SESSION.

THE ARREARS OF PENSIONS BILL UNDER CONSIDERATION — HOW MUCH MONEY WILL BE REQUIRED TO CARRY THE BILL INTO EFFECT—SITTING BULL SAID TO HAVE RETURNED TO THE UNITED STATES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—The arrears of Pensions bill was considered at the Cabinet meeting to-day. The President called it up in order to obtain the views of his constitutional advisers as to the effect of its provisions upon the revenue. The Secretary of the Treasury stated that it would take $150,000,000 to meet the requirements of the bill. Secretary Schurz, from whose department the money is to be disbursed, made the statement, as coming from the Commissioner of Pensions, that $50,000,000 would cover the contemplated expenditure. Mr. Sherman coupled his estimate of the amount required with the statement that if the bill became a law Congress would be obliged to make some provision for increasing the revenues, either by import duties on articles now on the free list or the sale of bonds. The President stated that he sympathized with the objects of the bill, and while he felt like doing exact justice to the soldiers of the late war, he was also inclined to give due weight to the effect such a measure would have upon the resources of the Government. All the Cabinet members agreed that this was a most inopportune time to draw such a vast amount of money from the Treasury. Yet they were equally unanimous in the conviction that on account of the unanimity with which the measure passed both houses of Congress, it should receive the sanction of the Executive. While nothing definite was agreed upon, the subject was dropped with the impression that the bill would be signed by the President.

Secretary Schurz submitted official information that Sitting Bull, with 5,000 lodges of Indians had crossed the Canadian frontier, and was anxious to take up his residence in the United States and live in peace with its citizens. It was not decided what action should be taken in relation to the appeal of the Sioux chief, and the subject was referred to the Secretary of War and Secretary of the Interior for decision.

REFUNDING THE PUBLIC DEBT.

A NEW FOREIGN SYNDICATE FORMED FOR THE SALE OF $5,000,000 PER MONTH OF 4 PER CENT. BONDS—ANOTHER CALL FOR $20,000,000 OF FIVE-TWENTIES.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—A contract was completed to-day between the Secretary of the Treasury and Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons, J. S. Morgan & Co., Seligman Brothers, and Morton, Rose & Co., of London, and Messrs. A. Belmont & Co., Drexel, Morgan & Co., J. and W. Seligman & Co., and Morton, Bliss & Co., of New-York, for the sale and delivery in Europe of not less than $5,000,000 per month of 4 per cent. bonds upon the same terms and conditions as the popular loan now being offered in the United States, the contract to continue until the 1st day of July, and the proceeds to be applied to refunding 6 per cent. bonds. The sale was made to promote the exchange of 4 per cent. bonds for 6 per cent. 5-20 bonds held in Europe. Thereupon a subscription of $10,000,000 was made by the parties, which is included in the call of $20,000,000 which the Secretary of the Treasury issued this afternoon for the redemption of 5-20 bonds of 1865, consols of 1867. Of the $20,000,000, $10,000,000 are coupons and $10,000,000 are registered bonds. The principal and interest will be paid at the Treasury on and after the 21st day of April next, and the interest will cease on that day. Following are descriptions of the bonds:

Coupon bonds—Dated July 1, 1867, namely: $50, No. 46,001 to No. 55,000; $100, No. 60,001 to No. 70,000; $500, No. 46,001 to No. 55,000; $1,000, No. 60,001 to No. 73,000, all inclusive; total coupon, $10,000,000.

Registered Bonds—"Redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st day of July, 1872," as follows: $50, No. 1,926 to No. 2,270; $100, No. 13,851 to No. 16,400; $500, No. 7,251 to No. 9,300; $1,000, No. 27,751 to No. 31,900; $5,000, No. 8,151 to No. 8,300; $10,000, No. 13,251 to No. 15,400, all inclusive. Total registered, $10,000,000. Aggregate, $20,000,000.

CONGRESSIONAL TOPICS.

ARGUMENTS TO BE HEARD BY THE COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON THE INTER-STATE RAILWAY BILL—ENGLAND CHARGED WITH DUPLICITY IN REGARD TO THE FISHERY AWARD—PROPOSED RETIREMENT OF ONE AND TWO DOLLAR NOTES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—Among the nominations sent to the Senate to-day was that of Judge Samuel Lee to be Postmaster at Sumter, S. C. The place is worth $1,500 a year. Judge Lee is the colored man who did so much to promote the Republican cause in his district during the last campaign. He is a man of good repute and ability, and his appointment is generally regarded by Republicans here as one of the best which the President has yet made in the South.

The sub-committee of the Committee on Commerce, appointed to consider the Reagan inter-State Railway bill, has decided to hear arguments for and against the measure. To that end they have sent notices to the New-York Central, Pennsylvania Central, the Erie, Baltimore and Ohio, and other leading railway companies, and it is expected that on Thursday next their representatives will appear here to speak on the bill.

At the executive session of the Senate held yesterday, in regard to the $5,000,000 fishery award made to England by the United States, Senators Blaine, Edmunds, and Dawes made speeches to the effect that our Government had received no adequate consideration for the money expended. It was further stated, in very plain terms, that the award had been secured by tampering with the Belgian arbitrator, and that the installment of $5,000,000 was only the first of the sums which England would demand; that, in fact, she would never be satisfied until, by hook or by crook, she had been repaid the $15,000,000 which the United States received from her by the Geneva award.

Senator Chaffee, of Colorado, introduced in the Senate to-day a joint resolution, the object of which is to compel the circulation of the silver dollar. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cancel all the $1 and $2 United States notes now in the Treasury, as well all that may be received after the passage of the resolution, and to replace the amounts so canceled by United States notes of a denomination of not less than $5. The amount of United States $1 and $2 notes now in circulation is about $40,000,000, or $20,000,000 of each denomination. The amount of standard silver dollars already coined is about $23,000,000, of which there are about $8,000,000 in circulation, leaving about $15,000,000 in the Treasury. The resolution does not propose to contract the circulation of greenback currency, as it changes the $1 and $2 notes into the same amount in larger notes, but simply provides for the circulation of silver by withdrawing from circulation all United States notes of a less denomination than $5. The resolution will be called up for action at an early day.

A PROPOSED BUREAU OF HEALTH.

THE PROVISIONS OF SENATOR MATTHEWS' BILL—A DIRECTOR-GENERAL AND A BOARD OF HEALTH, WITH EXTENSIVE POWERS, PROVIDED FOR.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—A bill was presented to the Senate to-day by Senator Matthews providing for the creation of a bureau of health, to be under the control of the Treasury Department, and which is to have charge and regulation of the sanitary condition of the country. The bill was prepared at the instance of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, which has recently been investigating the cause of the last yellow fever scourge, and is intended to embody, in a general way, the views of that committee upon this subject. The bill provides for a Director-General of the bureau, and a board of health consisting of seven members. The Surgeons-General of the Army and Navy are to be ex-officio officers of the board, which is to meet in Washington, or elsewhere, at the call of the Director-General, to make examination and report upon epidemic diseases. The bill abolishes the office of Supervising-General of the marine hospital service, and transfers that branch of the medical service to the care of this bureau of health. It gives to this bureau power over all quarantine regulations and makes the Consular service a part of its machinery. It may require Consuls in foreign ports to make weekly reports as to the health of the city or country to which they are accredited, and places special restrictions upon vessels leaving Havana and other West India ports at certain seasons of the year. It gives power to the bureau to appoint a health officer at each port of entry, who is to have the charge and enforcement of all sanitary and quarantine regulations. For this service the bill contemplates the employment, in a great measure, of the present marine hospital corps. It was referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, of which Mr. Matthews is a member.

THE CHARGES AGAINST THE REGISTER.

CONCLUSIONS REACHED BY THE GOVERNOR— MR. LOEW GIVEN TIME TO AMEND HIS REPLY.

ALBANY, Jan. 21.—The Governor has made a preliminary decision in the matter of Register Loew. He reached a conclusion yesterday, after a careful consideration of the charges preferred by the Committee of the Bar Association and the answer filed by Register Loew through his counsel. The Governor says that he considers that Register Loew has fully and satisfactorily answered the first charge, in which complaint was made that the Register had not complied with the law requiring him to keep certain books of account. Of the answer to the second and third charges, however, the Governor does not think so well. He says that if the Register really intended to answer, he has not succeeded, but has put in an apology or explanation which is by no means sufficient, but falls far short of being a satisfactory reply. The second and third charges are those alleging that the Register demanded and received fees in excess of the amounts allow myself, and for these reasons: At the last session of Congress I introduced a resolution for a committee to inquire into certain alleged and confessed wrongs in Florida and Louisiana, which had taken place under color of State law, and which were said to have been perpetrated under the influence of Federal visitors, and under the protection of Federal troops, and which wrongs the Electoral Commission had decided it was impolitic for the States to rectify or recall. Such a matter was a proper subject for Congressional legislation, for if Congress could not correct the wrong which had taken place in the States themselves, it could, at least, adopt such legislation as would afford those States an opportunity to correct and recall the action taken under color of their laws. It was, therefore, a proper subject for investigation, and when I introduced that resolution I declined to yield to an amendment which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Hale] desired to offer, proposing an inquiry into certain cipher dispatches in Oregon, because I insisted that it was not within the province of Congress to inquire into the individual wrong of any citizen which it could neither prevent nor punish, and that at any rate this investigation ought not to be overwhelmed by such an inquiry. I did not then suspect the existence of the dispatches which have been since published, but the analogy between those dispatches and the Florida case which are supposed to show that there was an attempt, by fraud or bribery, to influence the Electoral vote of Florida, Oregon, and South Carolina. The resolution does not assume that any such wrong was expected to show that any vote was influenced by those attacks. Then we have this case before us. We are brought to investigate the acts of private citizens, which were or were not crimes at the time they were done. If they were crimes, the law will punish them. If they were not crimes, we can make no ex post facto law that will punish them, and we have seen what was done requires no legislative remedy and no legislative action. We all know that bribery and fraud in elections can be punished, and we need no set of investigators of any set of men to frame a law for that purpose. There has been absolutely no ground of jurisdiction in this House to do what it is proposed it shall do. The only ground on which the House can take jurisdiction of private correspondence, whether by telegram or by mail, is that the House requires the information in order to get legislative action. There can be no other ground, under heaven, I submit to the lawyers of the House, to the good sense of every member of the House—whereon we can found our rights to put our hands on the act of any private man or the correspondence of any private man. This is a private man for this purpose, who does not hold an official United States position. Now, without jurisdiction, what is expected from these cipher dispatches? It is expected that somebody will either be indicted or the bubble thrown on the other—and it is absolutely none of our business to do either, and, above all, not to take the public money for that purpose. Never mind how high in party relations any private citizen may stand; never mind how it may affect any party or any man; this is absolutely beyond our reach, and ought to be beyond our reach. And above all, we should not take the public money to gratify the prurient curiosity for scandal of anybody, in the House or out of it. And that is what we propose to do. It is supposed that a part of these dispatches have been published, but there is no doubt that suppressed copies of them may have been published, but of that I have no knowledge. But whatever they may be, whatever has been published, better let it take its place—for the honor of the nation—among the orgies of the sensational journalism of the day rather than have it put upon the public records of the Congress of the United States as digesta to the nation, and its members should be like a family—never, never investigate the private scandals of a family unless there is divorce sought for on one side or the other. [Laughter.] and unless it is necessary for the purpose of justice and so, where there is no earthly advantage to be reached or gained, except to exhibit to the world the friction of the working of Republican institutions and to bring them into contempt, had we not better walk backward with cloak over our shoulders, and throw the mantle over what ought not to be seen?

Much has been said about these dispatches. Very wrong imputations have been cast upon a company for which I have no particular love—the Western Union Telegraph Company—of something wrong done on its part. It is but due to that company that I should furnish to the House and the country the origin and existence of those dispatches outside of its office—as they now exist outside of its office. When the Senate of the United States ordered an investigation into some portions of this matter in the Winter of 1876-7, a subpœna duces tecum was served on that company, and after the company had so much resistance as that, the whole Executive Committee was called, under a subpœna, to produce the cipher dispatches and other telegrams, and they were delivered over to a committee of the Senate. Some gentlemen examined a portion of them, and published the results of its examination, quod Oregon, I believe. But before it finished, the Senate adjourned, the Chairman of the committee died, the cipher dispatches were suffered to lie somewhere (perhaps that would be the best phrase,) and everybody dealt with them apparently as he chose to deal with them. The company having lost jurisdiction over them, did not (and probably did not) assume to have jurisdiction. If you go into the investigation of these cipher dispatches, it would be out a fragmentary investigation. I do not know what is in the bundle of dispatches which I found on my desk, nor the kind of testimony which the items of the expense of the committee, showing the manner in which the $20,000 already appropriated had been disbursed.

GEN. BUTLER'S OBJECTIONS TO THE RESOLUTION.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, said: I have sought the ear of the House for the purpose of putting before it the reasons that will influence my vote on this resolution. Those reasons will be very little as they will. I have in this matter neither friends to reward nor enemies to punish. I look upon it as a question of very considerable gravity—as furnishing a precedent hereafter. The resolution alleges that there are certain clandestine dispatches which are supposed to show that there was an attempt, by fraud or bribery, to influence the Electoral vote of Florida, Oregon, and South Carolina. MISCELLANEOUS CITY NEWS

THE STORY OF AMBROSE.

HE WHO SOLD CONSECRATED VESSELS TO FREE SLAVES—LECTURE BY DR. JOHN LORD.

Dr. John Lord lectured yesterday morning in Chickering Hall to a very large audience, on "Ambrose," as the representative of episcopal authority in the early Church, since he contributed more than others of the Great Fathers to raise the power of Bishops. The progress of episcopal authority was rapidly reviewed by the lecturer, from the Apostolic age to the time when the Bishop lived in a marble palace and had become one of the great dignitaries of the Empire—a gradual change brought about by circumstances, even as all Governments arise from the wants and conditions of society. Whatever force, said he, may be in the argument in defense of divine right, still, as a fact, the Bishop of the first century was little more than presbyter or elder, preaching in an upper chamber; in the second century he had considerable dignity; in the third he was a potentate. The Archbishoprics of Rome, Constantinople, Alexandria, and Antioch were great governments, and men were chosen to fill them for their administrative and executive ability rather than for eloquence or learning.

Now, also, power was virtually transferred from the Government of a Roman Province to the Government of a Bishopric. His father was Prefect of Gaul, a great Roman grandee, and when he died Ambrose went to Rome for the completion of his studies. His rank and character secured his appointment to the government of Northern Italy, in which his great abilities were conspicuous. On the death of the Arian Bishop of Milan, the people demanded that he fill this higher dignity—a proof of the great position of a Bishop in those times—higher than that of a Governor of a Province, or else he would not have accepted the dignified post, for he was a layman and had not even been baptized. But he was precisely the ablest man who could be found, and had the confidence of both Emperor and people. No sooner was he baptized and consecrated than a great change took place in his life, like that of Thomas Becket when he was transfered from the Chancellorship to that of the Primacy of the English Church. He first turned his attention to the heresies which were distracting the Church and the times, for one of the vocations of a Bishop was to guard the purity of the faith. Ambrose was not a great scholar or theologian, but it seems he knew this plainly enough, that the fashionable speculations about the Trinity were not the doctrines of Paul. He knew that the boastful philosophy then in vogue, by which some sought to bolster up Christianity, was that which the Apostles had endeavored to explode. He comprehended the Athanasian and the Nicene creed.

So he attacked the Arians, a powerful and cultivated sect, patronized by the Empress. Milan was filled with Arians, who hoped to make their form of Christianity the prevailing religion of the Empire. The Empress caused her son Valentinian to pass an edict by which liberty of conscience and worship should be granted to the Arians. This was as we should think, a just decree, in accordance with the recognized principles of religious toleration. But this edict was regarded by Ambrose as suggestive, not of liberty of conscience, but of ambition for ascendency. He saw in the Arian creed a most dangerous heresy —subversive of the doctrines of Paul and Athanasius. He looked upon concession as a compromise, and compromise as treason to his cause. Had he been the Governor of a Province, or a legislator, he might have accepted compromise, since Governments are built on it, but he would accept no compromise in regard to the fundamental principles of Christianity. So he opposed the edict of his sovereign, and prepared for a contest. He refused even to take part in a religious disputation in the palace of the Emperor, because a layman would be umpire in a religious controversy. This enraged the Empress Faustina, and she gave orders to eject the rebellious priest from the city. Ambrose retired to his church, with his friends and admirers, and called himself with them to arms. The soldiers dared not invade the sanctuary of the church. That was sacred, in accordance with the ideas of the age, which are ever irresistible. To amuse and inspire his followers, he instituted the beautiful antiphonal chant which bears his name.

The Empress, seeing she could not eject Ambrose from his church, sought to compromise. She asked for only one church in which the Arian creed should be preached. But this the Bishop refused. On this the Empress, furious, ordered the soldiers to seize the person of Ambrose in his church. A sedition was the consequence. The Bishop triumphed. So great was his spiritual authority, even in that age, confronting Emperors. Ambrose was the precursor of Hildebrand and Becket. His great power was further seen in his rebuke of Theodosius for the massacre of the illustrious Thessalonica. He compelled the Emperor to make public penance. He brought down his haughty pride. It was by such acts as these that he gained his ascendency, and set an example to future ages. His whole career is full of intrepidity. He was also enlightened and just and humane in his administration. He sold the consecrated plate of the church to redeem the Illyrian slaves. He re used to accept a legacy to his church at the expense of fraternal ties. He was also a great preacher. He converted St. Augustine. As a defender of the faith, and as a defender of church interests, raising the spiritual above the temporal power, he is justly ranked among the great fathers.

Dr. Lord's next lecture, on Friday, will be on St. Augustine.

SEEKING TO REGAIN HIS SEAT.

The action of Arthur L. Sewell to compel his reinstatement as a member of the New-York Stock Exchange, and for an injunction to restrain Brayton Ives, the President, and other officers and members of the Exchange, from interfering with him in entering or leaving the Exchange, or while transacting his legitimate business therein, was tried yesterday before Judge Sedgwick, in the Superior Court, Special Term. The evidence was mainly contained in the records of the transactions of the Governing Committee previous to, and at the time of, the expulsion of Sewell for "obvious fraud," on account of his partnership with John Bonner in the management of the Bankers and Brokers' Association, and at the time Bonner hypothecated the collaterals of securities pledged with John Bonner & Co. for loans. Mr. A. Ogden White, Secretary of the Exchange, identified the records, and the plaintiff told the story of his efforts to continue his business in the Exchange. Mr. Joseph H. Choate, appeared for the plaintiff, made a long address, claiming that the evidence that Sewell was guilty of "obvious fraud" was insufficient; that he had not been given a fair opportunity to answer the charges against him, and that his expulsion was illegal and unwarranted. Mr. Robert Sewell, who appeared for the Stock Exchange, said Mr. Ives intended that Arthur L. Sewell should be properly tried and expelled, and that if he had not been, he should not now be permitted to set aside the proceedings because he did not protest at the time of trial and expulsion. Mr. Choate replied that he and the plaintiff had put himself outside the Exchange by failing to settle the indebtedness existing against him when he suspended business on Dec. 29, 1877. The constitution of the Stock Exchange declares that an insolvent member forfeits all rights to entrance on the floor of the market, or to do business with, or as the partner of, a member of the Exchange, unless he shall settle his indebtedness within a year following his suspension. Judge Sedgwick reserved his decision.

ACTS OF AN EXECUTOR UPHELD.

When James I. Roosevelt died, his nephews, James A. Roosevelt and Theodore Roosevelt, became the Executors under his will, by which instrument he devised about $2,000,000 worth of real and personal property. One of the beneficiaries under the will is Charles Y. Roosevelt, who, several months ago, began a suit against James A. Roosevelt, the surviving Executor, claiming redress for the latter's alleged imprudence and negligence in making a loan of $80,000 upon real estate, and in not proceeding properly to foreclose the mortgage given him upon the property. The suit was tried in the Superior Court, before Judge Speir, who yesterday decided it. Judge Speir says the defendant was not guilty of the alleged imprudence or negligence. On the contrary, he says, it is shown that the property on which the loan was made is now worth from $110,000 to $120,000, and returns a revenue equal to 5½ per cent. upon $96,000.

TRYING TO RETIRE POLICEMEN.

The Police Commissioners yesterday had before them the papers in the case of members of the department who were to be retired under the provisions of the Police Pension law. The following were booked for retirement: Sergts. John Thompson, William A. Russell, George W. Barrett, Barnett L. Phillips, and E. P. Whitcomb, and Patrolmen George W. Bentley, John F. Standish, John Parsons, George Nevins, Gustavus G. Bowker, John E. Cogha, James McArthur, and Henry Mead. When the vote was called on the resolutions retiring these men on pension, Commissioners Erhardt, Wheeler, and Smith voted in the affirmative, while Commissioner Smith voted in the negative. As the retirement of members of the force under the rule requires a unanimous vote, the Sergeants and patrolmen mentioned above still remain members of the force, with full pay.

AN ANTE-BELLUM NOTE.

An appeal by Edward Matthews from a verdict for $10,490 rendered against him on a jury trial, before Judge Van Vorst, in the Supreme Court, was argued yesterday before Judges Davis, Brady, and Ingalls in the General Term. The plaintiff in the case is the Bank of Louisiana, the holder of a promissory note for $4,000 made by James S. Brander, Samuel S. Chamblias, and Edward Matthews, who composed the firm of Brander, Chamblias & Co., doing business in New-Orleans at the beginning of the late war. The note was made April 27, 1861, and Brander afterward Matthews left New-Orleans, and came to this City. The note was renewed several times during the war. In 1867 the Bank of Louisiana began suit against Matthews for the recovery of the amount of the renewed note dated Jan. 2, 1862, with accrued interest. Matthews interposed as his defense the plea that he was not responsible, because his copartnership with Brander and Chamblias had been dissolved by the war, and by the action of those partners in New-Orleans before Jan. 2, 1862. This defense was successful, but suit was soon afterward begun on the original note. In this proceeding it was decided that the war had nullified the renewals of the note by preventing the intercourse of the partners, but that this original note held good. On these grounds Judge Van Vorst ordered a verdict for the plaintiff, and the jury returned one for $10,490, that including principal and interest. The appeal to the General Term from this verdict is upon the grounds that the partnership was dissolved by the war, and that the renewed notes were made by Brander and Chamblias without the knowledge of Matthews, and for their own convenience.

THE PAY OF THE POLICE.

TWENTY PER CENT. TO BE DEDUCTED PENDING DECISION BY THE COURT OF APPEALS.

As foreshadowed in THE TIMES, the Board of Police, at their meeting yesterday, considered the question of reducing the pay of the members of the force 20 per cent. in pursuance of the provision of the act of 1866. The following resolutions in reference thereto were offered by Commissioner Wheeler:

Resolved, That in pursuance of the suggestion of the Counsel to the Corporation, the counsel to the board be requested to take early measures by arrangement with the Counsel to the Corporation, or otherwise, to secure the decision of the Court of Appeals, at the earliest possible day, upon the question whether or not the pay of the Police force is legally subject to a deduction of 20 per cent. and that after the 1st day of January, 1879, in pursuance of the provision of section 1 of chapter 861 of the Laws of 1866.

Resolved, That pending the legal investigation proposed in the above resolution the pay-rolls of the Police force shall be made with the deduction of 20 per cent. from the rate established by said section 1 of chapter 861 of the Laws of 1866, and that the Treasurer cause the pay-rolls to be made on the basis of 20 per cent. less than the rate established by said statute.

Resolved, That the payment made to the force at the advanced rate will be held to be made and receipt taken under the protest of each member of the force, so that his right to full pay in the event of a decision of the courts in his favor shall not be impaired.

Resolved, That from and after Jan. 1, 1879, fines imposed upon members of the force shall be deducted from their pay at the same rate allowed them on the pay-rolls.

Commissioner Erhardt offered as an amendment to the second resolution the following:

"That the requisition on the Controller for salaries of members of the force be made with the deduction of 20 per cent."

Commissioner Wheeler offered as an amendment to the amendment of Commissioner Erhardt the following:

"That the opinion of the Counsel to the Corporation be requested as to the ability of the board to draw the balance upon requisition, in case the courts should decide that the force are entitled to full pay."

The amendment to the amendment was adopted, and the resolutions as amended were unanimously adopted.

ALLEGED FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCY.

Simon Moses, bankrupt, a wholesale butcher, doing business in West Washington Market, was under examination yesterday, before United States Commissioner Osborn, on a charge of fraud in respect to his bankruptcy. He is specifically accused of concealment of his assets to the amount of $41,-000, with mutilating his books, and with omitting to enter the assets referred to on his schedule in bankruptcy. He is at present on bail in the sum of $10,000. His petition in bankruptcy was filed in June, 1878. The assets concealed or omitted were the proceeds of the sale of cattle which he bought and sold between Dec. 5 and Dec. 19, 1877. The cattle were purchased by him at the stock yards, he giving his checks therefor on the West Side Bank. The checks were all made payable on or about Dec. 22, 1877, a day or two after he made the assignment under State law. Among his principal creditors are Albert N. Monroe, J. Albert Monroe, David Walzell, and Edward Vogel. The allegation is that he fails to account for any of the proceeds of these sales. The purchases from the Monroes amounted to about $20,-000, and were made only three or four days before the assignment, which was also

The Signal Service Bureau reports indicate for this region, to-day, warmer southerly to westerly winds, with partly cloudy weather and light snow, and a slight fall, followed by a slight rise, in the barometer.

The House amused itself yesterday with a rambling debate on the proposition to appropriate $10,000 to the investigation of the cipher dispatches. Although Mr. Potter made the request for the appropriation, he accompanied it with very pointed opposition. He regarded the whole affair as strictly private, and as not coming within the jurisdiction of Congress. Mr. Potter was naturally more anxious about his own position than about Mr. Tilden's. The latter gentleman cannot make much by the present scheme. The investigation must be a farcical one in any case, not that Mr. Potter would not devote all necessary zeal and skill to finding out the truth; he is as incapable as any other Democrat of screening a political favorite for partisan purposes; but it is too late. Only five weeks remain of the session, and even the ability of the Potter committee would never worry the truth out of Mr. Tilden in that time. Whether intended or not, Mr. Tilden's procrastination has prevented any thorough investigation. Perhaps this is well for his reputation, but it must be regarded as a choice of evils. An investigation might confuse public opinion a little, but it could hardly clear him; as it is, he has allowed his case to go by default.

According to the report of the Adjutant-General of the State, the Militia of New-York is making good progress, and its present condition is excellent. The introduction of rifle practice and the substitution of inspection by the Inspector-General and his assistants for inspection by division and brigade Inspectors have had a marked effect on the efficiency and discipline of the force. The rifle practice has awakened a new interest in the National Guard, and the new method of inspection has assured greater uniformity in drill and tactics, and enforced a closer attention to duty. The Militia now numbers a little over 20,000 men, divided into seven divisions and thirteen brigades, with a few separate organizations of cavalry and artillery. Such a force, well disciplined and adequately equipped, ought to be sufficient for any of the ordinary demands likely to be made upon it, and would be a valuable contribution to the national Army, should its services be required.

Senator Chaffee, of Colorado, has got hold, rather feebly, to be sure, of the only right idea regarding the possible circulation of the silver dollars. He proposes to retire the United States notes of denominations under five dollars and to replace them by notes of not less than five dollars. As the notes to be retired are about $40,000,000 in amount, and as they are nearly indispensable to the transaction of ordinary business, their retirement would leave room for a nearly equal amount of silver dollars. It is obvious, however, that Mr. Chaffee's bill, were it passed, of which there is small prospect, would lead to the inflation of the currency by the total amount of silver thus got into circulation. Under the present policy of the Treasury, the bills would probably be allowed to accumulate, and would not seriously affect the volume of the currency. But if the silver and paper-money men should at any time succeed in compelling the issue of the note reserve of the Treasury, that feature of the bill would be full of mischief.

Sitting Bull is back again over the border. This noted Indian politician, when invited to return and behave himself, about a year ago, treated the Commissioners with contumely and derision. He said that the Americans were liars and cheats, and that he would hereafter be proud and happy to live under the protection of his "Great Mother," as he affectionately called the Queen of England. It was painfully evident at the time that the Canadian authorities looked with disfavor upon this self-invited guest. But it was a great relief to our people that Sitting Bull was determined to stay in Canada. The news that this prodigal son has returned will not only be unwelcome to his elder brother, but to his Great Father in Washington, and as the fatted calf was killed by the prodigal before he went away, it is not likely that there will be any merry-making over his return. The Commissioners explicitly told Sitting Bull and his band, when they offered them terms of surrender and amity, that they would have no second opportunity to consider a new settlement in the United States. As this statement was received with contempt, it would be only fair to Sitting Bull now to show him the way back to the dominions of the Great Mother, whose maternal care he so much needs.

A bill is now pending in the Legislature of this State to amend the act of March 22, 1875. The former act made taxes payable in gold, and contracts not in a specified kind of dollars payable in United States coin. Since the date of the passage of this law silver has been made a legal tender. The present bill proposes to make such contracts payable in gold. The bill excites the ire of Senator Voorhees, of Indiana, who denounces it as "virtually demonetizing silver," and as "unconstitutional." The Indiana war-horse is entirely mistaken. The act does not demonetize silver. Old debts, unfortunately, could still be paid in it, but it would prevent it from being forced on those who do not wish it. Nor is the law unconstitutional, and a very slight acquaintance with the decisions of the Supreme Court would have prevented Mr. Voorhees from thinking, if not from saying, that it was so. Mr. Voorhees has just been elected by a Legislature which declares that the "demands of trade" require United States notes to the amount of $30 per capita, or say $1,500,000,000 for the country. He had better confine his financial criticisms to his own State, which he fairly represents.

ONE OF THE ISSUES.

It may suit the purposes of the Democrats in Congress to have the resolutions adopted by the caucus of Senators regarded as a substitute for those presented by Mr. Edmunds. By this plan they hope to escape the responsibility which an apparently wanton assertion of the old State rights doctrine might entail. The Vermont Senator, they may plead, opened the question with propositions intended to embarrass them, and the caucus resolutions are the response. But the truth is, that the Democratic Senators merely echo the voice of their party, as heard in various States, and partially exhibit the outlines of an issue which, according to present appearances, will occupy a prominent place in the canvass of 1880. This fact it is that justifies the course of Mr. Edmunds and invests with significance the position assumed by Mr. Morgan and his Senatorial associates.

At least in four Southern States the Democratic Party has distinctly assailed the Federal authority which alone can be relied upon to secure freedom and purity at elections. The initiative was taken in Florida, where a joint resolution of the Legislature denounces the employment of Federal officials "for the purpose of supervising and influencing elections," "as subversive of the foundation of popular government and tending toward dangerous centralization of power." The Alabama Senate characterizes the same thing "as an evil of great magnitude," and makes it a pretext for submitting to a committee a proposition designed to vest in the State Legislature the selection of Presidential Electors. Joint resolutions now before the Virginia Legislature recall the substance of the historic propositions which identified Virginia's statesmen with the doctrine that found final expression in the rebellion. The present resolutions recite at length the State rights theory of the Union as the foundation of the pretension set up by Alabama and Florida, and repudiates as unconstitutional and void the Enforcement act and the Civil Rights bill. Not a word is said with reference to the constitutional amendments, though by a parity of reasoning they also must be rejected. Perhaps they are regarded simply as abstractions, which occasion little practical inconvenience. The Enforcement act, under whose provisions Federal supervision is exercised, is the rock of offense, and the Virginia Democrats say plainly how they would remove it. Amendment, as suggested by Mr. Edmunds, will not be entertained. Only the complete withdrawal of Federal authority from elections, and the surrender to the States, unchecked, of the power they have shamefully abused, will satisfy them.

But the demands now heard go much further. So far, we have cited only the declarations relevant to the resolutions of the Senatorial caucus. Resistance to Federal authority, however, extends to the Federal courts, and the exercise of jurisdiction in matters over which Democratic States claim absolute control. Thus, the action of a United States District Judge in Virginia, giving effect to certain provisions of the law, is assailed as an affront to that Commonwealth,—as an attempt "to regulate her internal policy," and otherwise to curtail her rights. This resistance to judicial authority, as exercised by Federal courts, has assumed its boldest form in Alabama, where local authority has arrested Federal officials engaged in the discharge of duties consequent upon the November election. They were, in fact, the custodians of certain evidence to be used in a United States Circuit Court under pending indictments for the violation of the Federal Election law. A State court asserted its right to try the cases, called for the evidence that had been intrusted to the Federal officials, and seized them for contempt. Similar tactics were employed in South Carolina, to frustrate prosecutions for fraud. They are part of the Democratic plan for preventing Federal interference at elections in the Southern States. The State is to be absolute; its courts are to be supreme.

Carrying out this idea, the Arkansas Democrats, in their desire to render repudiation easy and sure, not long ago said: "We demand by Congress such legislation as shall prevent the interposition of the Federal courts, by mandamus or otherwise, between the courts of the States and the counties and the cities of the States." The platform on which the Missouri Democrats conducted their recent campaign included a proposition essentially like this. Both intend to rob the non-resident holder of bonds or mortgages of the protection to be found nowhere outside of Federal courts. Both assert a principle that would destroy one of the most valuable safeguards afforded by the Constitution, and invest local courts with a power that would almost uniformly be exercised in obedience to local passion. The bills introduced into Congress by Senator Garland, of Arkansas, and Representative Townshend, of Illinois, are an embodiment of this hostility to the jurisdiction of Federal courts even in matters of common honesty. Alabama presents the same idea in a joint resolution representing Federal jurisdiction, as between the citizens of one State and the municipalities of another, as an intolerable grievance. The State rights doctrine, as now interpreted, not only affirms the right of a State to shield all kinds of fraud at elections, but clothes it with power to protect repudiating communities from the authority created under the Constitution to prevent the wrong.

We take the caucus resolutions, then, only as an installment of that broad, sweeping policy whereby the Democratic Party in the South, and in portions of the North and West, proposes to reaffirm, in the practice of the Government, the pretensions which obtained expression in nullification and secession. Mr. Edmunds' resolutions, apart from the recognition of the constitutional amendments, touch but a single point—the desirableness of so amending existing law as to protect effectually the freedom and integrity of the ballot-box. The Democratic Senators deny generally the right of Congress to legislate on the subject. By this course they reveal the nature of one issue which their party, as a party, is prepared to press upon the country. As we have shown, however, they do not indicate the extent of the issue, which in reality involves the judicial authority of the Government as between citizens of different States, not less than the power of the Government to guard from fraud and violence its Electoral system.

RETRENCHMENT IN NEW-YORK.

The movement in favor of more economical administration in New-York City has been begun in the Legislature by Mr. Erastus Brooks. The resolution introduced by the member from Richmond aims merely at an inquiry into the extravagant cost of the inferior courts of this City. As was suggested from the Republican side, the inquiry would hardly be complete without embracing the equally extravagant cost of the superior courts, and, as every New-York tax-payer will be prepared to urge, it should be still further expanded to include the exaggerated scale of salaries which exists in every department of the City Government. Mr. Brooks professes himself ready to aid in applying the pruning-knife all round, and if he addresses himself earnestly to that task he may succeed in establishing a reputation as a consistent economist which his previous efforts to save the exorbitant pay of the Commissioner of Jurors and other Tammany officials have somewhat impaired. In such a cause, the Republican majority cannot afford to be laggard, and the people of New-York will devoutly wish all possible success to a partisan rivalry at Albany in the direction of economical Municipal Government.

The necessity for any inquiry as a preliminary to such action is not, however, apparent. The City debt is not decreasing by anything like the amount of taxes, assessments, and revenues applicable to its reduction, and is, therefore, really on the increase. The cost of the City departments, instead of showing any diminution, is actually greater this year than it was last. A glance at the appropriations for 1879, as compared with those of 1878, will make this fact readily apparent. For the principal departments, the figures are as follows:

	1878.	1879.
Common Council	$107,500	$118,250
Mayoralty	46,000	46,000
Finance	225,000	252,500
Law	148,000	155,500
Public Works	1,611,100	1,576,860
Parks	316,000	479,000
Buildings	70,000	71,500
Charities and Correction	1,160,000	1,257,000
Health	190,000	190,000
Police	3,999,895	4,048,100
Fire	1,220,870	1,254,970
Taxes and Assessments	108,900	107,900
Education	3,400,000	3,400,000
Advertising, &c	133,000	137,200
Judiciary	853,255	865,484

The total tax levy of the year is $30,007,097, or, nominally, $71,980 less than that of last year. But the three items of State taxes, redemption of the debt, and interest on the debt, over which the Board of Apportionment has, virtually, no control, require this year an appropriation of only $13,705,661 against $14,231,006 in 1878. Of the $525,345 of saving which ought to have gone to the credit of the tax-payers, only $71,980 has been retained. The appropriations above quoted show where most of the remaining $453,365 has gone. Every dollar of this has been recklessly squandered. It has not been devoted to the improvement of our neglected streets, or to the increase of accommodation in our overcrowded public schools, for the Department of Public Works, not being in favor with Tammany Hall, gets $34,240 less than it did last year, while the Board of Education gets the same allowance. The money has been thrown away on the Department of Finance, which does less than half the work it had to do in Controller Green's time; on the Law Department, which exhibits a remarkable talent for "settling" claims on terms not particularly advantageous to the City; on the Park Department, whose administration is notoriously corrupt and wasteful; on the Police and Street-cleaning Departments, which waste at least a million of public money every year; and on the crowd of Tammany loafers who officiate as janitors and attendants in the courts.

Without touching the seven or eight millions of salaries fixed by legislation, the Board of Apportionment could have easily saved half a million of dollars on the budget of the year. That, added to the half million not required for fixed expenditures, would have made a very tangible saving to the tax-payers without at all impairing the efficiency of local administration. A Board of Apportionment not acting under the dictation of Kelly or of Tammany holds its first meeting to-day. The Legislature can give prompt relief to the overburdened tax-payers of the City by intrusting to that board the power to revise the estimates for the year, and by also passing such a general law as will enable it to regulate salaries which are now legally exempt from its interference. That it was the intention of the law of 1866 to compel a reduction of 20 per cent. on Police salaries after the resumption of specie payments, there can be no possible doubt. Whether that provision was, inadvertently, repealed or not, there can be no question that the rule should be enforced, not only in regard to the Police, but every other department of the City Government. The Legislature has not far to seek for the means of promptly enforcing the needed economy. A short and simple enactment can be quickly drawn and passed which would render possible a saving on the year's expenditures of at least two millions, and the reduction of the rate of taxation to not more than 2.40 per cent.

GAMBETTA'S TRIUMPH.

Though M. Gambetta sat silent in the Chamber of Deputies through the debate on the address of the Ministers that had been so disappointing to the more ardent Republicans, there can be little doubt that he controlled the result. By a majority of more than a hundred—the Right taking no part in the vote—it was decided to pass to the order of the day, with the hope that the Ministry would "not fail to give satisfaction, notably in regard to the administrative and judicial staff." So the threatened "crisis" was passed, and the Republic escaped an agitation that would have hurt more than it could possibly help its friends. Though affairs had not gone altogether to Gambetta's liking since the opening of the session, he did not forget the policy of "prudence and patience," on which he laid so much stress just before the Senatorial election. He concluded to bide his time, confident of the final result, provided nothing should happen to disturb the assurance, under which the people had so recently acted, that the Republic meant order and peace, and not revolution or continual agitation.

The Cabinet changes contemplated in advance were very moderate, and it was the evident purpose that the Dufaure Ministry should remain for the present. It was acknowledged on all sides that a change in the War Department was inevitable. Here was where the hand of reform, in the interests of the Republic, was especially needed, for the superior officers of the Army were well known to be for the most part Monarchists, who showed no disposition to submit cheerfully to an authority in which they had no abiding faith. It was not safe to leave this so. Gen. Borel had served for twenty years on the staff of Marshal MacMahon, and was the pliant instrument of his wishes, and the President, it is well known, is no ardent Republican, and, probably, sympathized with his old Army associates. He was doubtless reconciled to giving up his favorite, but was not disposed to accept in his place the favorite of his most bitter opponents. Gen. Farre, who was first named for the military portfolio, is President of the Committee on Fortifications, a man of study and reflection, as well as prompt firmness and decision, but he was almost as much Gambetta's man as Gen. Borel was the Marshal's; not that he is pliant or time-serving, but he sympathized fully with the views and purposes of the great leader of his party. The President objected to him resolutely and drew his favorite weapon, a threat to resign, to be put in effect if the appointment was insisted upon. Gen. Gresley was accepted instead. No one seems to doubt his loyalty to the Republic or his capacity, but he was not the choice of the triumphant party, and their dissatisfaction was expressed without reserve. Gambetta was beyond doubt sorely disappointed, but not discomfited. Then came the mild and non-committal Ministerial address, which increased the dissatisfaction to such a degree that for the moment it seemed doubtful whether the Dufaure Cabinet could stand. But it was not on Gambetta's cards that it should be overthrown now, and the policy of prudence and patience prevailed. If the address promised little upon which the hearts of the most zealous Republicans were set, as the legitimate fruits of their recent victory, it was eminently safe, and gave earnest of the reforms deemed essential to the consolidation of the Republic. It was finally accepted, with the hope pretty plainly expressed that the Ministry would do better in future, and Gen. Gresley's appointment was acquiesced in as not objectionable in itself, though better might have been done.

Moderation at this time was vital to the interests of the French Republic. The Senatorial majority obtained on the 5th was eminently moderate in its Republicanism. The address that produced so much commotion in the Chamber of Deputies was warmly cheered in the Senate by all sections of the Left. The new Senators are undoubtedly in favor of a consolidation of the institutions of the country and opposed to all monarchical schemes, but their election was no triumph of Radicals or Extremists. They had been sent to Versailles mostly by constituencies which three years ago were Conservative strongholds. They were chosen because the cause of the Republic had become the cause of genuine Conservatism. It was established, it had given the country peace and good order, it promised progress and security. To strengthen and settle it on firm foundations was, in their minds, to secure a continuance of tranquillity, while anything tending to weaken or overthrow it would be a menace of disorder and anarchy from which there was no certain issue. The Republic owes its present power to a cautious and conservative sentiment, which would recoil at radical or violent propositions. It has been trusted fully by the people, and the way for it to establish its success is to show that it can be safely trusted without the check of monarchical control in any department. It was all-important that imprudence at the outset should be avoided. The work of consolidating and strengthening can now go on, and changes can be effected in due time and proper order without agitation, while popular faith in the institutions is confirmed and increased. By "wisdom, prudence, and patience" the military and judicial administration may be brought into harmony with republican principles and requirements, the Constitution may be revised and strengthened in 1880, and all departments of power may in good time be placed fully and unreservedly in the hands of those who believe in the Republic and hope for its success, leaving all pretenders to the abolished throne helpless and harmless.

EXCITEMENT IN MORMONDOM.

The decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of George Reynolds, the Mormon polygamist, has created a great stir among the Latter Day Saints. The law under which Reynolds was convicted of bigamy has been declared constitutional. If it is enforced, and there is no good reason why it should not be, the polygamous system of Mormonism will fall into ruinous confusion. If other Mormons are proceeded against, as Reynolds was, an entire community will be practically unmarried, except so far as the retaining of one wife may fulfill the Mormon notion of marriage. For it is evident that a man who has twelve wives would not consider that much of a compensation which allowed him one wife in lieu of the eleven taken from him. It would not be necessary that each individual Mormon should be prosecuted for bigamy in order to break up the system now prevailing in Utah. Reynolds' was a test case, and a few more convictions like his would probably have such an effect upon the Mormon population that most of the polygamous offenders would make haste to prepare for a day of wrath. If there were any merciful provisions of the law by which a polygamous person could forsake his sins and "live cleanly," a wholesale indictment of the Mormon host would not be necessary. One of the plaintive arguments of the Mormon lobby now in Washington is that, should the law be enforced, some 60,000 women would be left without legal husbands, and that many times that number of children would be declared illegitimate. That this would be a hardship is undeniable. Unless each individual male Mormon were proceeded against, and on conviction punished for bigamy, the fate of their divorced wives would be far worse than that of the more guilty husbands. The woman is naturally the "weaker vessel," as St. Peter has declared, and she has oftener been coerced into polygamous marriage in Utah than she has sought it of her own free will. It will be comparatively easy to arouse Congressional sympathy for the 60,000 Mormon wives who may be made husbandless at a blow. And it should not be forgotten that these miserable women have been deprived of the right of dower by the Mormon Legislature of Utah. Having first allured the women into a pretended marriage relation which was unlawful, the Mormons next provided against any possible subdivision of their estates, after death, by taking away the right of dower. And now, having heaped various wrongs upon the heads of their concubines—for such they are—these whining hypocrites implore us not to take away their women, brand them with dishonor, and declare their offspring illegitimate.

Senator Christiancy has reported a bill which modifies, without weakening, the existing statute against bigamy, but which removes any ground of complaint, so far as the offspring of polygamous relations are concerned. This bill provides for certain exemptions under the statute against bigamy, and it legitimizes children born of parents living in polygamy. The wail of the 60,000 women who dread being deprived of such poor marital rights and defenses as they now have is not to be silenced, however. Delegations of Mormon women, assiduously "coached" by the Mormon lobby, have waited upon the wife of the President, beseeching her to use her influence with her husband so that the law may not be enforced to their disadvantage. This unseemly pressure has had the effect to introduce a provision in Senator Christiancy's bill by which the President is clothed with the power of granting amnesty for past offenses against the law prohibiting plural marriages. The intention of this is to allow the President to decide whether the Mormons accept in good faith the law against bigamy. If they refrain hereafter from entering into plural marriages, he may interpose the Executive clemency as a shield against the consequences of all past offenses. But it is, in effect, making the President the judge whether the law shall be enforced in Utah. He has already the power of pardon in cases where offenses have been committed against the laws of the United States. How far his sympathies can be trusted is shown in a recent instance in Massachusetts. A man convicted of sending obscene literature through the mails was pardoned by the President, and he and his "free religionist" friends celebrated his deliverance from jail by a meeting in which the name of Jesus Christ was blasphemed, the Christian religion derided, and all "psalm-singers" scoffed at and ridiculed. The Mormons are a wily class of people, and when they are in danger nobody can be so abject as they. It is a part of their code of morals, apparently, that lying to the Gentiles is no offense, just as taking the property of the Gentiles, when it could be done safely, was an honest transaction. Such people are not to be dealt with by soft-hearted and goody-goody sentimentalists. They despise the law now, as they did before the decision in the Reynolds case, and they will adhere to polygamy unless they are severely shaken up by an enforcement of the statutes.

Senator Christiancy's bill provides for the exclusion of polygamists from the jury-box in trials for bigamy. Unless some such clause as this is inserted in the pending bill it will be almost impossible to execute the law whose constitutionality has just been affirmed. The conviction of Reynolds was an exception in a long list of similar cases. It was procured only by an unusual combination of circumstances. To follow up the advantage already gained in the courts, it is necessary that a show of vigor be made by the Government, both in its legislative and executive branches. There is no more sense in leaving bigamists to be tried by other bigamists, than in packing a jury-box with indicted murderers in a trial for murder. It is perfectly competent for Congress to declare that persons suspected of being guilty of bigamy, or known to be so, shall not be admitted to the jury when persons are on trial for that offense. If the President were directed to enforce the law, without resorting to any special pardoning power, and Mormons were excluded from the jury, we should be able, before the next Congress meets, to decide whether bigamy in Utah is a permanent and impregnable evil.

It is not generally known that despite the long-continued enmity between England and Afghanistan, several of the bravest soldiers of Britain have been men of Afghan blood. Among the most noted of these was a Sepoy from the Bolan Pass, Schitab Roy by name, who specially distinguished himself in one of the earlier campaigns against the Mahrattas. When the little band of English were completely surrounded by clouds of charging horsemen, the gallant Afghan, bearing the regimental colors, was seen in the thickest of the fight, waving the flag over his head. A bullet at length broke the staff, when its indomitable bearer, determined at all hazards to save it from capture, tore it from the shatted pole, and, wrapping it around his own body, fought his way through the swarming assailants with the cherished banner, which, in the emphatic words of an eye-witness, "was literally riddled with sabre-cuts." When the battle was won, the brave man, reeling from sheer weakness, and covered from head to foot with blood and dust, was led forward to receive the honors which the whole regiment adjudged him with one voice, a veteran grenadier adding with rough admiration, "I never thought as any nigger could fight like that." It is melancholy to be obliged to add that the hero of this splendid achievement was subsequently imprisoned on an utterly unfounded charge of treason, and died shortly after his release.

The Apaches, who have given us so much trouble—though not near so much, probably, as we have given them—still claim to number, with all their tribes, from 8,000 to 10,000. When the Spaniards, in their search for gold in the high lands of what is now New-Mexico, first met these Indians they found them proud and independent, though harmless and even kindly. Wronged and outraged, the Apaches at last retaliated, and the Spaniards were never able to conquer them. To this day they hurl defiance at all government and civilization. They are the Bedouins of this continent, and are all mounted on small ponies capable of great endurance. Their chiefs can have any number of wives they want; but the Apache squaw found guilty of adultery is most atrociously tortured, and all women captured are infamously treated. These savages, fierce and untamed as they are, do not scalp their enemies. They are fond of smoking and of cards, and when idle have a strange, monotonous chant. In battle they keep their ponies in motion, and are themselves always changing position. They seem to be Monotheists, and Montezeums, or the spirit of God, is blended in their mind with some sort of religious aspiration. They have a superstitious regard for the eagle and owl, and will not kill or eat the bear or the hog. Rattlesnakes they dread, imagining them to be evil spirits. They never cultivate the soil; live principally by plunder, and are in the main ill-formed, emaciated, and miserable in appearance.

Two British Peerages were created last year, and two became extinct. As matters stand, two Dukedoms, Cleveland and Buckingham, will become extinct on the death of the existing Dukes, but the Duke of Buckingham, who is middle-aged and a widower, may marry again. The inferior dignities of these noblemen would, however, descend to their relatives, so that their deaths would not affect the number of seats in the House of Lords. Only two Dukedoms other than royal, Abercorn and Westminster, have been created by the Queen. The former is in the Peerage of Ireland. There is not at the present time any Whig nobleman who have just claims to such a distinction, but on the Tory side Lord Salisbury, who has a wife, is more than likely to end his career with only strawberries around his coronet. Lord Derby, even had he remained in the running—and he may be in it again—would have cared for such distinction even less than his sire, who, of course, might have had a Dukedom had he pleased. But what was a brand new coronet to the fourteenth Earl of Derby, Prime Minister, renowned scholar, and of whom "the traveled Thane Athenian Aberdeen," in his decline nearly as crusty, caustic, and uncomplimentary as Rogers himself, said: "I have heard Pitt, Fox, and Sheridan, but our own Lord Derby, when he is at his best, is equal to them all." Only some four or five of the Dukes can match Lord Derby in point of income, and while living in a princely semi-feudal style, the Stanleys have never been spendthrifts.

With one stroke of his pen Marshal MacMahon has given amnesty to 1,800 of the wretched men who were transported to New-Caledonia for having taken part in the Communal insurrection of 1871. It is now eight years since this terrible rebellion broke out. The second Empire, after a reign of eighteen years, had collapsed at Sedan. The German armies were devastating France; and two millions of people beleaguered in Paris had stood a five months' siege. Most of the working men in the place were enrolled in the National Guard, and as sorties were few and discipline lax, there was much idleness and drinking among the populace. M. Jules Favre had committed the fatal error of stipulating in the armistice that while the regular force laid down their arms, the National Guard should retain theirs. Prince Bismarck warned him that he might repent of this proviso, but the rifles were retained by the working men of Paris, who found themselves in a position, as they supposed, to dictate to the National Assembly, a majority of whose members were royalists, and, as was believed by the Parisians, were intent upon setting up a new throne as speedily as possible. Demands made upon the Assembly were haughtily refused, and, at a time when conciliation was most urgent, there was nothing but intimidation on the one side and resistance on the other. Blunder followed blunder, and things went on from bad to worse; and the war which had begun in mutual obstinacy was carried on upon wider issues than the Communists had at first intended. Once shots had been exchanged between Versailles and Paris, it became a question as to whether the great city should dictate to the rest of the country or allow itself to be dictated to, and, as a matter of course, the provinces, resenting Parisian supremacy, rallied to the Versailles party. A terrible struggle followed, which finally ended in a victory for law and order. In the final reprisals, the good fared as ill as the bad, and worse, for many of the bad escaped through the Parisian lines, while the good remained to be butchered wholesale. There is no stating how many men were shot on the barricades, or summarily executed after the rebellion had been quelled, for between the Communists themselves, who say 23,000, and the Conservatives, who say 6,500, there is a considerable diverzence. But one thing is certain, namely, that courts-martial were at work for two years after the close of the civil war, condemning insurrents to death, imprisonment, or transportation. Most of them were sent to New-Caledonia for life. During the last three years some 3,000 pardons have been granted, and to this number must now be added the 1,800 more just released by President MacMahon. As about 2,500 who were sentenced to imprisonment have served out their terms, it may be computed that over 3,000 Communists are still suffering in New-Caledonia.

The Princes Torlonia, whom every sojourner in Rome during this generation must remember and been indebted to for some such courtesy as tourists and foreigners expect in the Eternal City, are among the wealthiest Princes in Italy, and exercise great influence through their wealth, though they were plebeian enough only yesterday. Many of the Italian Princes claim to be descended from the ancient Romans; the Torlonias make no pretense of the sort, as it would be idle for them to do so, since everybody knows their recent humble origin. The founder of the opulent house, born only 134 years ago, was Giovanni, a poor cicerone, who hung about the Piazza di Spagna, and gained a meagre livelihood by showing strangers the sights of the city. He used to consider 10 carlini (70 cents) a day a handsome recompense for his services, and for years had no other fare than polenta, dried beans, and vino nostrale. By steadiness and economy—the latter a rare virtue in men of his class—he secured regular patronage, and grew to be a great favorite with travelers. He became in time an agent of the French emissaries sent to excite the Roman populace to revolution, and, when the project failed, found himself with considerable cash in his hands. He turned money-lender and usurer, married a widow of means, and, by shrewdness and foresight, got possession of divers estates of nobles to whom he had made loans, and eventually secured an immense fortune. He was made a Grandee of Spain and Duke of Bracciano by the Pope, and his three sons married Princesses of the bluest blood and oldest lineage. The Torlonias of to-day are never taunted with their origin. Italy needs money more than she needs pedigree, and wealth is ever welcome to the impoverished nobility.

One of the saddest features of excessive deafness is the unhappy mental effect it is apt to leave on those troubled with it. So frequently is this the case that it has been said that persons of morbid dispositions are peculiarly liable to this affliction: but there is reason for thinking that in this way of looking at the matter, cause and effect are transposed. It is certain that persons of cheerful disposition have been apparently transformed into something wholly different from their former selves by being deprived of the ordinary powers of hearing. This change is not difficult to understand when one takes into account the many trials and deprivations a person whose hearing is greatly impaired is called upon to bear. He is outwardly in no way different from other people, and unless he has with him at all times some ugly symbol of his infirmity, like an ear-trumpet, strangers cannot know and friends are likely to forget that he is wanting in one of the most-used powers of sense. Of course, when something is said to him which he does not understand, in consequence of the light, careless way in which the words are uttered, or because the sounds are lost to him in the jarring hum of a general conversation, it is easy to explain one's helplessness and ask to have the question or statement repeated. But to be thus perpetually acknowledging one's weakness is exceedingly distasteful to most persons; the more so as the confession rarely brings with it any satisfactory return. The prevailing belief of those who have not associated much with deaf people is that to make them hear it is only necessary to raise the voice. This, in most instances, is a complete mistake. Few men, and still fewer women, who are not professional vocalists, speak plainly when they speak with a loud voice, and hence it often happens that the victim of their kind efforts is in no way assisted in the task of understanding them, while all those who may be near are made aware of his misfortune. The proper way is to speak slowly and distinctly, for with the deaf the recognition of volume of sound exists, just as a near-sighted man has a perception of an object, only in one case as in the other, the outlines and divisions are uncertain and confused. As this is rarely understood, those who are troubled with deafness soon find that attempts at general social intercourse bring with them more discomfiture than pleasure, and the natural result is to force the sufferer into a kind of mental isolation. There may be natures so strongly molded as not to be influenced by a separation from the small delights of social life, but in most cases it is productive of more or less active misanthropic opinions.

GENERAL NOTES.

Fifteen Kentucky Democrats are candidates for the nomination for State Superintendent of Public Instruction.

A Philadelphia paper clamors for the erection of elevated railroads in that city, that the surface horse-car companies may be forced to reduce their fares to five or three cents.

A Southern paper says that Gen. Albert Pike is now engaged in organizing the "Knights of the Cactus," to be composed of the veterans of the Mexican war, and the order to descend to their male children.

A paper up in Springfield, Mass., makes the astonishing assertion that the leading journals of Georgia urge Gov. Colquitt to appoint Col. William T. Thompson, editor of the Savannah News, to fill out Congressman Hartridge's unexpired term. Where would Gov. Colquitt get his authority to appoint a Representative in Congress?

Rev. G. H. Crawford, a Methodist preacher in Camden, Me., could not continue his ministerial labors by reason of impaired health, and, unwilling to become a charge to the church, set himself at the task of self-support, and regularly twice a day delivers milk to customers about the village, formerly carrying it by hand, but latterly on a wheelbarrow, or, when there is snow, on a sled.

A Greenback member-elect of the Legislature of Michigan is accused of writing a letter to a Representative in Congress, which reads as follows: "Dear Sir—I find in Looking over the Rept of the State Treasurur Remaning in his Office Township of —— county of St Jo michigan are Line Railroad Amount 50000 I would advice you to Take Leagle proceedings to obtane that Bond"

The Utica Herald of Monday says: "Boss Tweed's former coachman tramped into Utica one night last week. He walked from New-York to Fort Plain, where a newspaper friend fed and brushed him up and paid his fare to Utica, where he has relatives. His wife and three children died recently. The 'Boss' gave him $500 once for saving his youngest son from drowning."

A Missouri lady sent to Gen. George G. Vest, during the Senatorial contest, the huge claw of a grey eagle, with a message to the effect that he "must not let go his grip, but, with talons like unto these, cling to the pure tenets of a party which, in its efforts to advance truth, honors itself." Gen. Vest as soon as he was elected let go his grip upon the claw, giving it to one of his supporters in the Legislature.

The Democrats split in Macon, Ga., the other day, and had a fight among themselves in the municipal election, with the usual fraud accompaniment. And now the Louisville Courier-Journal dismisses the matter (it being all in the family) in this cool way: "The Mayoralty contest in Macon is evincing the fact that both sides have shared in the wrong. Neither has the advantage of the other. The matter goes before the Supreme Court on several counts."

Senators Ransom and Merrimon, of North Carolina, both say that they could not accept the Democratic nomination for the Vice-Presidency in 1880, as the time has not yet come for recognition of that Southern right. Or, as the Raleigh Observer puts it: "The Northern Democracy, both assured us, would concede the right now—indeed the South had but to claim and take it—but both also assured us that either to claim or to receive it would be dangerous to the success of the Democratic Party, and therefore to the interests of the country. Neither would for a moment permit the hope of personal advancement to imperil either."

THE DEMOCRATS FIND PEACE.

A LOVE-FEAST IN THE ADJOURNED CAUCUS —MR. BROOKS EXPATIATES ON THE NECESSITY OF HARMONY—THEREFORE THE CAUCUS RESOLVES THAT HARMONY DWELLS IN THE PARTY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 21.—The adjourned caucus of the Democratic members of the Legislature was held this afternoon, to hear the report of the Committee, appointed last night to prepare an address upon the subject of apportionment, in connection with the election of United States Senator. The committee, however, was not ready to report—in fact it had done nothing so far as could be learned toward preparing a report. But Erastus Brooks availed himself of the occasion to lecture the brethren on the importance of harmony and brotherly love. Without harmony, he said, the Democracy was powerless to withstand the assaults of the wicked Republicans, and every Democratic nerve should be strained in the future toward promoting union and concord in the party. Mr. Brooks succeeded in producing the impression upon his hearers that in his humble opinion, Erastus Brooks, as the embodiment of harmony, concord, and brotherly love, might be regarded as not the least available among the many Democratic aspirants for the next Gubernatorial nomination.

Mr. Ecclesine essayed a few words in the harmonious strain, though he came near flying off once or twice into an attack on somebody or other. But, remembering the counsels of Brother Brooks, he restrained himself, and, to the great relief of his hearers, sat down without reviving his protest. Mr. Jacobs agreed with Brother Brooks on the necessity of harmony in the Democratic ranks, and said that no Democrat, be he big or little, should be permitted to stand in the way of such harmony. This sentiment elicited from one of the brethren the earnest ejaculation of "Amen," and for a time great solemnity reigned in the caucus. Senator Hogan also preached harmony, and would have entranced John Fox, had he been here.

Finally some resolutions were adopted to the effect that there ought to be harmony in the Democratic Party, and that, therefore, as a matter of fact, there was harmony, and should continue to be evermore. The committee on the address was further instructed to prepare some kind of a paper about apportionment, and the harminious Brooks was deputed to the task, with the understanding that all the Democratic members of both houses should sign it to-morrow morning, and shove it out on the public.

Mr. Brooks is now racking his brains over the address, while his Democratic colleagues are poking fun at his waste of time in lecturing Democrats about harmony. The jovial Wagstaff declares that the Democracy is now cemented together closer than a pressed brick.

SEEKING ECONOMY IN THE COURTS IN THIS CITY.

DEBATE UPON THE RESOLUTION OF ASSEMBLYMAN BROOKS—HIS REPLY TO THE ATTACKS OF MR. STRAHAN—A BILL TO MAKE CHANGES IN THE COURT OF SPECIAL SESSIONS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 21.—Erastus Brooks to-day returned to the contest which he began a day or two ago over the cost of the inferior courts in New-York City, and he once more showed himself to be in the Assembly to do something to recover, if possible, whatever reputation for economy the Democratic Party has ever claimed in this State. He called up his resolution, offered on Friday, calling for a reduction of the expenses of courts whose Clerks are paid $7,000 and whose Judges are given $12,000 to $15,000 a year. The resolution also instructed the Committee on Cities to report whether abuses existing in those courts could not be reformed or corrected.

Speaker Alvord had put the question on the passage of this resolution, and many members had responded, when Mr. Strahan objected to the phraseology of the resolution, which, he said, did not make clear what was aimed at. If is was to be passed at all, its scope, he suggested, should be made more comprehensive; the investigation should extend beyond the Court of General Sessions. While New-York City is paying $2,000,000 in salaries, it was strange that the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Brooks] should single out the only court not controlled by Tammany Hall for investigation. He objected to a system of reform that would save at the Anti-Tammany spigot, while expenses were flowing at the Tammany bunghole. He gave the members an idea of the comfortable position of the Commissioner of Jurors, doing almost nothing at a salary of $15,000.

To Mr. Strahan's attack upon Tammany Hall, Mr. Brooks, with flashing eyes, facing Mr. Strahan, and speaking with such sharpness an: clearness as to attract the attention of every member, said: "The gentleman can offer no proposition tending to the reduction of expenses in New-York, whether it affected Tammany Hall, or Anti-Tammany Hall, or any other hall whatever, that would not receive my support." He would follow where Mr. Strahan would lead. He defended himself by saying that in the last Legislature he had voted to reduce the salary of the Commissioner of Jurors from $4,500 to $5,000, and other bills for which he had voted would have reduced expenses $2,000,000. Mr. Brooks set forth these facts with due emphasis, and as Mr. Strahan had made remarks that led Mr. Brooks to suppose that he was the spokesman of Tammany Hall, the member from Richmond beat his breast with his clenched fist, as he said: "As for Tammany Hall, I am no man's man; I wear the livery of no organization." He declared that the amount paid in salaries was $14,000,000, instead of $10,000,000. This was not, he said, the fault of local government, but of legislation under the Tweed régime. "When the honorable gentleman was a member of the House, and did not offer any strong opposition to the measures." He hoped that if a broad and sweeping investigation was to be made, it would include the Controller's office, the Mayor's office, and other offices. He disclaimed any partisan purpose in the matter, but since genral politics had been introduced, he only replied to defend himself.

He then went over a list he had prepared of court officers and their salaries, together with those of the Judges. In the City the total amount of judicial salaries was $853,225. All this extravagance was the result of legislative interference. "By your consent," said he, looking at Mr. Strahan, "by my consent, and by the consent of the minority and the majority in this House," they would not permit another dollar of increase in these expenditures.

Mr. Strahan, taking up the gauntlet, persisted in showing Mr. Brooks' purpose to be merely a political one. The salaries of the Supreme Court Judges had been increased by a Tammany Board of Aldermen. The party represented so ably by the gentleman from Richmond had been steadily opposing any reduction of salaries. He insisted that the resolution should bring in the Marine Court, the Superior and Supreme Courts, and when it was made an order he would give it his hearty support. As for the allusion made to his connection with the Legislature of which Tweed was a member, he said that his name could not be found on the record as sustaining any of Tweed's legislation.

That doughty champion of down-trodden Tammany, Mr. Grady, broke in here with a burst of his silvery eloquence, and for a quarter of an hour alternately exhibited the excellence of Tammany's work and abused the Republican Party, which, he said, enjoyed its share of the court patronage outside the Court of General Sessions. He was determined that the abuse of Tammany Hall should cease, in view of the magnificent showing made by Kelly as its leader, and he made a passing melancholy allusion to that "poor man Tweed." Mr. Strahan admitted that Tammany had shown some improvement since Tweed's time, but it was because it had been punished badly, and under the circumstances it had to make a good record. As Mr. Brooks had been challenged by Mr. Strahan to make good some of his figures, the member from Richmond read over a list of the Judges of the General Sessions and Over and Terminer and their clerks, making amusing sarcastic allusions to the interpreters, clerks, and deputy clerks as he proceeded.

Mr. Varnum seized an opportunity, as 2 o'clock approached, to say a word, and his maiden speech in the Assembly showed him to be a man who will vigilantly and temperately represent the Eleventh District. He made a good impression. He objected to the limited form of the resolution, and thought Mr. Brooks had provoked the criticism directed toward him. On his motion the resolution was laid on the table for the present.

Mr. Madigan introduced a bill which requires every horse railroad company in the City of New-York to employ a driver and a conductor for each car used on said road.

Mr. Varnum introduced a bill to secure better administration of the Courts of Special Sessions. It seeks the following changes:

I. The Special Sessions should be held by one Judge. At present three Police Justices "sit," but practically the trial is conducted by only one of their number. Each of these three Police Justices while holding Special Sessions is obliged to close his Police court for about five hours, during which time no warrants can be there obtained or other business transacted. In addition to this, each Justice loses an hour in going to and returning from the Special Sessions; and this occurs four times a week. Not infrequently the Justice who commits the prisoner for probable cause sits as a member of the court which tries him. This conflicts with the spirit of the Constitution of the State, which disables a Judge from reviewing his own decision.

II. The Special Sessions should have its own Justices. Two only are needed, each sitting daily on alternate months. The salary of each should not exceed $5,000 a year, and none but lawyers of at least five years' practice and approved by the Presiding Justice of some local court of record should be eligible. In other words, proper professional (and not merely political) qualifications should be essential. They should be appointed and not elected.

III. There should be required a daily session of the court, at a specified hour. The present court never opens at the same hour on two days in the week, owing to the fact that the three Police Justices who convene it must leave their Police Courts in widely different parts of the City to do so. Consequently the Police officers, complainants, and witnesses are subjected to invariable delay—sometimes of two hours—in the total disarrangement of both private and public business. The present court never opens punctually at the hour fixed by its own rules.

IV. The jurisdiction of the Special Sessions should continue as at present, but excluding cases of official misconduct, and cases where, in the public interest, the District Attorney elects the General Sessions. That officer should have the right to appear and dispose of the calendar as he now does in the latter court, and his consent to the restoration of these should be made essential. Provision should also be made for the speedy sentence of a prisoner pleading guilty on committal, instead of compelling him to remain in jail until his case is reached in its order on the calendar of the Sessions, when the penalty may be only a fine.

V. The expenses incident to the changes proposed can easily be met by reducing the present enormous salaries and dispensing with the services of some of the employes of the existing court. The City now pays annually for this court $23,000. The subpœnas and other process of the court should be served by officers of the Municipal Police detailed for that purpose. If a daily court were held there would be fewer cases to dispose of at each session, and but little labor would be required to secure the attendance of the witnesses for the people.

VI. Lastly, the absurd practice of "appeals" should be abolished, and review of all convictions by certiorari retained, thus making the form of review uniform with that elsewhere existing in the State. The present statutes governing the "appeals" from this court are a mass of inconsistencies.

Mr. Flynn introduced the resolution, published in THE TIMES of to-day, calling for a report of the condition of the Manhattan Institution for Savings, to be furnished by the Bank Superintendent. Mr. Fish secured the passage of a resolution calling upon the Knickerbocker Life Insurance Company within 10 days to give an account of all moneys loaned on real estate, where such real estate is situated, when such loans were made, the amount of interest paid thereon from date of said loans, and the amount of interest defaulted thereon, also, what amount of counsel fees has been paid upon such loans.

Members have been complaining that persons who gain admission to the floor of the House crowd upon them from the rear and annoy them by conversation. To-day Mr. Baker offered a resolution directing the Clerk to see that a proper railing should be erected to keep back the crowds, and that chairs be provided on the floor for lady visitors. Mr. Fish rose to debate this resolution, and it went over. The architects and the Capitol Commissioners will probably be amazed at the idea of erecting a rail across the handsome chamber, but something more than a rule will be necessary to exclude stragglers from the floor.

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

SENATOR POMEROY'S EXPOSITION OF ITS MIS STATEMENTS—MR. ECCLESINE THE GOVERNOR'S SOLE CHAMPION—BILLS RELATIVE TO THIS CITY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 21.—In the Senate to-day, a vote was taken for Regent of the University, to fill the place of Mr. Rankin, deceased. The Democratic Senators were without a candidate, owing to the failure of their caucus last evening to make a nomination, but some one suggested the name of Robert B. Minturn, and they all accepted the suggestion, and voted for him. The vote stood 19 for Charles E. Smith to 12 for Mr. Minturn, and Mr. Smith was declared elected.

The Senate held a three hours' session, which was mostly consumed in a debate on the Governor's Message. Mr. Pomeroy opened the discussion in a speech of nearly two hours, in which he severely criticised the Message, both in its manner and matter. He began by charging the Governor with a lack of official courtesy in nearly all his communications to the Legislature, and quoted, as an example, the opening paragraphs of his late Message in relation to the new Capitol, in which the Governor assumes the combined functions of Chaplain to the Senate and libeler of its integrity and honor. He denied the assertion of the Governor that "the natural tendency" of the surroundings of the new Capitol was to foster "extravagance and corruption," and argued that a Governor who had signed the appropriations for the structure should be willing to accept his portion of the responsibility, instead of whining over his own actions and libeling those whose legislation he approved. Mr. Pomeroy next exposed the deception practiced by the Governor in his remarks relating to the reduction of the State taxes—claiming the credit therefor for a Democratic Administration of the State Government—in the well known fact that the reduction had been brought about by Republican legislation long before the present Governor or his predecessor reached the Gubernatorial chair. So, too, the Governor's claim to credit for the improved management of the canals and State prisons was without foundation. This came from constitutional amendments carried through by Republicans, and the present Democratic Canal Board and Democratic State Government had done was to make the management of the canals and State prisons more partisan than they were ever before, when the intention of the constitutional amendments was to take them out of politics. At the proper time, Mr. Pomeroy said, he should propose an investigation of the partisan outrage perpetrated in changing the superintendent of the Auburn Prison. The Governor's remarks about the common schools also came under Pomeroy's lash. They were based, he said, on the theory that society in this country was composed of classes, and that it was the duty of the poor to make them dissatisfied with the class to which they properly belong. He took square ground against the Governor on this question. He denied that there are any "classes of society" in this country. There were accidental conditions of rich and poor, which were temporary, and which did not constitute "classes" of society. In his own city he was struck by a review which he made of its inhabitants only a few days ago, in which he found that the whole intellect, the whole wealth, and the whole enterprise and business talent of the city was represented by men who started life as poor as anybody in the United States.

Mr. Pomeroy closed by a severe criticism of the Governor's remarks relative to legislation touching the City of New-York. These remarks were insulting to the Committee on Cities and to the whole Legislature. Last year, he said, the Legislature passed almost unanimously in both Houses, and with the approval of the entire press of New-York, and of all the departments of the New-York City Government, a bill generally called the "Public Burdens bill," designed to relieve the tax-payers of New-York from their heavy load of taxation. Never did a bill receive more careful and unanimous consideration than that. And what did the Governor do with it? He refused to sign it and put on record in the Secretary of State's office what purports to be his reasons therefor. These reasons (which Mr. Pomeroy read,) were not merely untrue in fact, but they contained an atrocious libel upon the committees that had the bill in charge, and upon the Legislature that passed it. The Governor charged that the bill "opens with a piece of jugglery," that it is "deceptive" and "two-faced," and that it was an "attempted evasion of the provisions of the Constitution." This language of the Governor he pronounced "unealled for, unjust, and untrue." No respectful language could characterize it as it deserved, and he did not choose to ape either the manners or the mendacity of his Excellency. Mr. Pomeroy then explained the provisions of the bill and the object it had in view. It was an honest and faithful attempt to protect the City of New-York from the extravagant administration of its government by Democratic officials under a charter framed by a Democratic Legislature. It was solely in the interests of economy and of the heavily-burdened tax-payers of the City, and it was prevented from becoming a law solely by the perverseness and malevolence of a Democratic Governor, who resorted to a gross libel upon the Legislature to cover up his gross neglect of duty.

At the conclusion of Mr. Pomerov's speech, Senator Ecclesine came forward as the sole champion of the Governor, and spoke for half an hour in his defense, his remarks being, for the most part, an attempt to parry, by personal attacks and sarcasm, the forcible speech of Mr. Pomeroy. Considering the attitude of Ecclesine toward the Governor last year, his present zeal in behalf of Gov. Robinson was a surprise to his Democratic colleagues, few of whom were able to congratulate the Governor on this new accession to the ranks of his defenders. The further discussion of the Message was made a special order for Wednesday.

Among the new bills introduced to-day was one by Senator Loomis for the creation of a Board of Railroad Commissioners. The bill is similar to one introduced by him last year, providing that the Governor shall, with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint three persons as a Board of Railroad Commissioners. The board may have a clerk. The persons connected with the board are prohibited from owning any railroad stocks or lands, or being in any way connected with any railroad in the State. The Commissioners are to have general supervision of all railroads, and to keep themselves informed as to their condition, and the manner in which they are operated, with reference to the security and accommodation of the public, and the compliance of the several corporations with the provisions of their charters and the laws of the State. The board may require the production of papers and subpœna witnesses, and compel their attendance as though such subpœna had issued from a court of record. The bill was ordered to be printed.

Senator Hogan introduced a bill to secure better administration of the Court of Special Sessions of the City of New-York. This was introduced in the Assembly by Mr. Varnum.

Senator Ecclesine introduced, as he said by request, a bill in relation to assessments for local improvements in New-York. It provides that all assessments for regulating, grading, sewering, or otherwise improving St. Nicholas-avenue, Sixth-avenue, and Seventh-avenue, north of One Hundred and Tenth-street; East One Hundred and Tenth-street and East One Hundred and sixteenth-street, from Avenue A to Sixth-avenue, which were confirmed since Jan. 1, 1869, shall be reduced one half the amount of the assessment imposed. The reduced assessment may be paid in four equal installments—the first on or before Dec. 31, 1879; the second on or before Dec. 31, 1880; the third on or before Dec. 31, 1881, and the last on or before Dec. 31, 1882, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. a year. Persons who have paid any assessments for this improvement may have one-half of the full assessment paid in returned to each, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent.

Mr. Pomeroy submitted a bill to amend the act relating to the assablization of assessments.

THE ARTISTS' RECEPTION.

PAINTERS AND THEIR FRIENDS.

DISPLAY AT THE OPENING OF THE ARTISTS' FUND EXHIBITION—PICTURES BY AMERICAN ARTISTS—THE COMMONPLACE AND THE ORIGINAL.

The usual annual reception preparatory to the sale took place last night under the auspices of the Artists' Fund Society. There was the usual jollity on the part of the artists and their friends; the usual civility to the invited guests. It is nearly 20 years since the death of the artist Ranney gave rise to a charitable foundation, bearing a close resemblance to a life insurance company, which is limited to artists. At that time some 40 artists contributed to the sale in aid of the widow of their deceased comrade, and the surplus fund remaining after the object of the sale had been attained suggested a systematic plan of co-operation. At present the number of artists connected with the association is 60. The great majority reside in New-York, but two—Lang and Griswold—have been long resident in Italy, while England has absorbed Boughton, and Britanny continues to keep Hennessey. Thomas Hicks is the President, and Casilear, S. R. Gifford, Gray, Hubbard, and David Johnson form the Board of Control. The medical examiner for this small life insurance company is Dr. F. N. Otis. It is rather surprising that, with some 300 artists of all kinds resident in and about the City, the society should have so small a membership. The sum which goes to the widow of an artist is $4,000.

The 65 members of the Artists' Fund contribute over 100 pictures to the exhibition for 1879. They are to be sold on the evenings of Monday and Tuesday next at the gallery of Leavitt & Co., No. 817 Broadway. The President, Mr. Thomas Hicks, contributes an interior, with figure of an old woman, called, "By the Open Door." It shows an ancient housewife sitting near her dishes and platters, which are carefully ranged in a cupboard behind her. Mr. J. S. Brown, Vice-President, offers more than one canvas. The most noticeable is that of a ragged boy being snow-balled—No. 23, "Fire Away!"—painted after Mr. Brown's well-known manner. There is humor in the situation, and the action is passably good. Less can be said for the flesh textures. J. M. Falconer, the Treasurer is still more liberal in his contributions, as befits the man who holds the moneybag. No. 35, "Fading Day, Gowanus," and No. 81, "God's Providence House, Chester, England," are his. The latter is the representation of an interesting bit of architecture that has a history dating from the great plague in the middle of the seventeenth century. While all the houses about were ravaged by the black death, this one escaped, and received its name in consequence. H. W. Robbins, the Secretary, has a view of "Cloud Shadows," No. 79. The Board of Control are variously represented. David Johnson exhibits a "View at New-Berlin, Chenango County, N. Y.," which supports well his reputation for careful, conscientious work. A "Sunday Afternoon at Goodham." Both tell of long and earnest work in the open air by a man little influenced by the passing troubles of city life. David Johnson has his limitations, but in his way his manner of regarding nature is idyllic. We might rank with him, but after him, Mr. R. W. Hubbard, who exposes three pictures to the criticism of press and public, and to the knock-down argument of the auctioneer. No. 24, "View near Trumbull, Conn.;" No. 59 a, "Lake George—View up the Lake;" No. 72, "View near Munro, Conn.," represent well his quaint, picturesque method of work. Even when Mr. Johnson expresses anything dramatic in landscape; they are content with striving after the quiet beauties of nature, and would probably regard any one who attempted to improve on their view, or improve on nature, as they would regard it, in the light of a heretic who should object to anything ordained by the Being who created the world. Sanford R. Gifford is of a different spirit, but apparently has not a copyist of nature. His "Sunrise" (No. 62) takes more liberty with clouds and cloud-shadows than the other pictures dare, and has some of the boldness we see in Turner. An Italian sketch is also contributed by Mr. Gifford, representing the "Arch of Nero," (No. 27.) Of Casilear the examples are two, being a Lake George view (No. 34) and a "Meadow Brook," (No. 83.) Mr. Guy, unlike the preceding, has no ambition to be landscape painter, but devotes himself to the more precarious study of the figure. His ideal picture of a little girl whose lover has gone to sea is projected against a background of ocean and sky. Many of the people who are crowding the gallery this morning will stop before this head with a pleased emotion. It would be cruel to ask them to see how hard and unreal is the flesh, how commonplace the subject. Nor would it do much good, seeing that most people have a healthy love of the common-place.

Mr. Julian Scott is still at work on war subjects, whether they be of the rebellion or the revolution. No. 28, "Treachery," betrays no more first-hand knowledge or depth than any of his canvases heretofore exhibited. Mr. Humphrey Moore does not belong to the school of art in which the preceding gentleman claims to be educated. He makes a position in the quiet ranks by the figure of "A Moorish Guard." This canvas looks like the surrender of an artist beset with people who demand Oriental color and fresh subjects. He has chosen a tall man with pronounced Arab face, swathed his head with white and purple scarfs, clothed him in a gorgeous jacket, bound his legs in a long, soft blanket, so that he could not move, hung his weapons on his body, with every conceivable kind of dagger, yataghan, and sword; put a long Arab flint-lock behind his back, and rolled at his feet a gorgeous carpet. This tremendous mass of color is put before the public as if the Alhambra, and we are told to enjoy our Oriental feast. Unfortunately, even Oriental sweetmeats, when taken too exudely, give one an indigestion.

Mr. Homer Martin also breaks ranks with two pictures as different from the former as well could be. While Mr. Moore shows the effects sought by the modern color school, to which Fortuny and Madrazo belong, Mr. Martin remains himself. It might be said against the two little landscapes here that they are somewhat flat in tints, flat even in drawing, but they show a strong individuality—an original conception of nature. Mr. Martin is looking about his own eyes, not the spectacles of any master. No. 85—"A Spring Scene on Sleepy Hollow Brook," is the work of a colorist, timid it may be, but sure to work out into excellence. A singular delicacy of touch and grace pervade the scene, an unaffected oddness. Besides all these, are many pictures we would like to notice. Mr. Quartley has two large canvases of out-door life. D. M. Armstrong a good bit of interior. Finally, William H. Beard rebukes his critics by painting a crowd of owls gathered in front of an easel on which rests a picture presumably by himself. He has given the birds various shades of expression, telling of their foolish sapience. Aside from this, there is nothing to admire in the painting or composition of the picture.

A WINTER CAMP-MEETING.

A Winter camp-meeting is in progress in the Willett-Street Methodist Episcopal Church, under the auspices of the National Camp-meeting Association, and the special direction of Rev. J. S. Inskip, President of the Association, assisted by Rev. Mr. McDonald, Rev. Mr. Wood, and a host of volunteers. The services yesterday, morning and afternoon, did not rise to the ecstatic height peculiar to such occasions; but last night, under the influence of an address by the veteran Mr. Inskip himself, the barriers gave way, and more than half the congregation flocked to the altar for prayers. The scene now became of that exciting type that always ensues when large bodies of men and women are swayed by a common religious enthusiasm. A young brother was called upon to lead in prayer, and commenced with a low, solemn, basso whisper, so distinct in its enunciation that every syllable seemed to ent its way into the brain. Low groans and prolonged amens came from every part of the house; and as the young man rose on his body from the rock to and fro with a slow, rhythmical movement, and his arms to jerk spasmodically. He prayed for the blessing to come down, for God to reveal himself to the sinner at the penitent altar, his voice rising and swelling in volume, and his imagery growing bolder and more dramatic with every sentence. He pictured Jesus descending and knocking at the door of the sinner's heart, his voice rising almost to a shriek as he three times pronounced the words, "Come in Lord." The effect for the moment was terrific. Men groaned; women sobbed aloud; brothers and sisters sank up and down, clapping his hands at intervals of a few seconds, and crying: "Glory! Hallelujah!" As the young brother ceased, a cracked and quavering female voice commenced crooning:

"There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Emanuel's veins,
And sinners plunged beneath that flood
Lose all their guilty stains."

The kneeling figures at the altar took up the refrain, the audience joined in, and the old stone building trembled with the vehemence of the hymn. Brother Brownleigh prayed, brother Brown prayed, and finally two brothers who had been walking to and fro and clapping his hands, suggested that the whole congregation should unite in prayer, and all who wanted to see Jesus should shut their eyes. The proceedings will be opened with a prayer-meeting at 10 o'clock this morning.

INVESTIGATING RENO'S CONDUCT.

CHICAGO, Jan. 21.—In the Reno inquiry today some time was consumed in debate between counsel as to whether the witness Girard had Indian children, and whether his testimony on that point was admissible. The latter issue was decided in the negative. The witness testified that Gen. Custer, on seeing Reno moving away from the timber, shouted: "Who the mischief ordered that command!"

Lieut. C. A. Varnum, Quartermaster of the Seventh Cavalry, testified that on the 25th and 26th of June, 1876, he was a Second Lieutenant in command of a party of scouts under Custer; on the 26th he was detached from the main body of troops; being away with the scouts he did not know what troops were assigned to Major Reno, but he had about 120 men; the witness described the manœuvres of the forces; the Indians were in greater numbers than he had ever before seen; he recounted the advance and retreat of Major Reno much as Gilbert had done; he said the horses and men were greatly fatigued; the troops were badly demoralized on their retreat.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE OPERA AT BOOTH'S.

The first appearance of Miss Maria Litta as Marguerite in Gounod's "Faust" last evening was a musical event which attracted a full house. The young lady gave a careful, painstaking performance of the rôle, and deserves commendation for her singing, though it cannot be said that she succeeded in eliciting the sympathies of the audience, or that she was equal to the poetical demands of the character in this exquisite composition. In voice and stage action Miss Litta is cold, and though she may vocalize well at times, she is not forcible at the moment when success is to be lost or won. No artist can ask for better opportunities than are afforded in the part of Marguerite if she has high aspirations. Vocally and dramatically there is abundant field for the employment of the highest powers of the lyric singer, and if Miss Litta was last evening unable to cope with the difficulties presented to her, it is only to say that her ambition was creditable, though the rendering of the part was not up to the high standard to which a New-York audience has been accustomed. Miss Cary's Siebel was, as heretofore, a beautiful and finished performance. She sang and acted with her own grace, and in a less meritorious rendering of the opera would alone have made the evening enjoyable. Mr. Adams was not in good voice, and though he sang like an artist, was not what was expected of him. Mr. Conly's Mephistopheles was exceedingly good throughout. This gentleman has a noble and genuine bass voice, which this part requires. A low baritone, singing down and out of his range, is so often assigned to the part that it is a treat to hear a basso in the rôle. Mr. Conly acted with spirit and force, and delivered his music with skill and an artistic manner which is to be warmly praised. The opera was well mounted, and the orchestra was rather better than usual, though there is room for improvement in this part of the entertainment, which Mr. Behrens has under his control.

GENERAL MENTION.

The last nights of "Cinderella" at the Aquarium are announced. This pretty spectacle has had a long and prosperous career.

Mr. Strakosch announces the engagement of Mlle. De Murska, who will appear as Leonora, in "Il Trovatore," to-morrow evening.

The English Glee Club will have a concert this afternoon at Chickering Hall. The services of Miss Finch and Miss Ilda W. Hubbel have been secured.

In the revival of "Lear" at the Broadway Theatre, next week, Mr. George Edgar, who is then to make his début as the King, will have the support of Miss Marie Gordon as Cordelia.

Popular prices will prevail at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, under the management of Mr. Harkins. Reserved seats in the orchestra will be sold for $1 25, and reserved seats in the balcony for $1.

At the Theatre Comique this week the chief attraction is "The Mulligan Guard Ball," which draws crowds of people every night. The rest of the performance is as good as any given heretofore.

At the Academy of Music, next Saturday evening, the New-Orleans Opera Troupe will appear in Auber's opera comique, "Haydee." The entertainment will be for the benefit of the French Benevolent Society.

The next public rehearsal of the Chickering Hall series will take place to-morrow afternoon, and the corresponding concert on Saturday evening. The soloists are Mrs. J. K. Barton, soprano, and Mr. Richard Hoffman, pianist.

The management of the Broadway Theatre announce the last four performances of "Les Fourchambault." The Lingards will appear in "Our Boys" on Friday and Saturday. Their engagement will close with the present week.

In the reproduction of "The Danites" at Booth's Theatre next Monday evening, the cast will include Mr. and Mrs. McKee Rankin, Mr. Louis Aldrich, Mr. C. T. Parsloe, and Miss Bessie Hunter. The theatre will be under the management of Mr. J. H. Haverly.

Mr. Samuel Devere, to give him his full name, made his first appearance as a member of the San Francisco Minstrels Company on Monday night. He is a "specialty artist," and a very amusing one. The present programme of the Minstrels comprises a pleasant variety of songs and sketches.

Mr. Oliver Doud Byron may be seen this week at Niblo's in a part which he has successfully performed elsewhere—Ben McCullough. As a rule, people like Mr. Byron, and Mr. Byron therefore likes the people. His play is, of course, highly sensational. He is supported by the regular company of the theatre, which includes Messrs. Tannehill, Littell, Miss. Tiffany, and Miss Rose Keene.

Mr. Lanzer's fourth concert last evening drew a good audience. The concert was not a particularly noticeable event, being, indeed, the least meritorious of the series. Mr. Lanzer was assisted by an orchestra announced as the "Grand Orchestra of the Mozart Musical Union Amateur Orchestra," which consisted of some 25 performers who played very badly, and by Miss Goodwin, soprano, and Mr. Arbuckle with his cornet, on which he blew his accustomed tuneful blasts, and for which he was recalled with unmistakable marks of favor. Mr. Lanzer played two solos during the evening.

Steinway Hall was well filled last evening on the occasion of the second concert by the Messrs. Carri. These young gentlemen treat their audiences to programmes which are full of statistical information, the full names of composers being given, as "Ludwig von Beethoven," "G. F. Handel," &c., and the dates of the birth and death of all authors are printed in brackets, a blank space being left to the future historian in the case of those who have survived the performance of their works at the concerts of the Messrs. Carri. The concert last evening was evidently enjoyed by the numerous audience who were in attendance, and the Messrs. Carri, in their solo performances on the piano and violin, were favorably received. Miss Gertrude Franklin, who sang Rode's "Theme and variations," was twice recalled, and achieved a pronounced success. The concerted music in which the Messrs. Carri took part was the least interesting part of the programme, though it was the most ambitious, and was creditable to the artists who took part in it.

OBITUARY.

GEORGE STILLMAN HILLIARD.

George Stillman Hilliard died yesterday morning at his residence in Longwood, Mass. He was born at Machias, Me., Sept. 22, 1808. He was graduated at Harvard College in 1828, and served for some time as a teacher in the Round Hill School, at Northampton, Mass. Entering upon the study of law, he was admitted to the Bar, in Boston, in 1833, and soon took a leading position among the Boston lawyers. He served in both branches of the Massachusetts Legislature, and was United States District Attorney for the Massachusetts District from 1867 to 1870.

He was well known as an author. Returning in 1847 from a visit to Europe, he delivered a course of 12 lectures on Italy before the Lowell Institute. He was one of the editors of the Christian Register, the Unitarian periodical, in 1833. He afterward held a similar position on the Jurist and the Daily Courier. His chief literary works of length included a "Life of Capt. John Smith," written for Spark's "American Biography;" "Six Months in Italy," "Life and Campaigns of George B. McClellan," "Political Duties of the Educated Classes," "Dangers and Duties of the Mercantile Profession," and a series of school readers. He edited "Spenser's Poetical Works," translated Guizot's "Character and Influence of Washington," and edited the Boston "Memorial of Daniel Webster" and "Selections from the Writings of Walter Savage Landor." He was married, in 1834, to the daughter of the late Judge Howe, of Northampton.

MARKSMANSHIP IN WINTER.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Jan. 21.—The Shrewsbury Gun Club met yesterday at Red Bank, in response to the call for the second match for the club badge. S. W. Morford won the first match. The second match had 10 entries; fifteen glass balls at 18 yards rise; Parker rotary trap; Bogardus rules. The following are the principal scores: S. W. Morford broke 13 balls; L. B. Campbell, 14; G. H. Wild, 13; A. R. Coleman, 12; G. T. Marsden, 11; T. Parker, 11; J. B. Bergen, 10.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL AT NIAGARA.

NIAGARA FALLS, Jan. 21.—The Marquis of Lorne, accompanied by the Princess Louise and party, arrived here this afternoon from Toronto. They expect to remain until Friday. The weather here remains cold. The ice scenery, with the ice bridge, presents a beautiful spectacle.

WHY THEY USED TISSUE TICKETS.

THE TELLER COMMITTEE IN SOUTH CAROLINA—DEMOCRATS EXPLAINING THE USE OF "KISS JOKES."

CHARLESTON, S. C., Jan. 21.—The Teller committee, consisting of Senators Teller, Kirkwood, Cameron, Randolph, and McDonald, began its investigation of the late general election to-day. All of the witnesses examined were residents of Charleston County, and it was admitted by both Democrats and Republicans that all of the election officers, excepting the clerks, were appointed upon the recommendation of the Democratic committee; that one of the three Commissioners of Election for the county was a Republican; that the Managers of Election at the different precincts were exclusively Democrats, and that the United States Supervisors at the different polls were not allowed to have a clerk, there being no provision of law for such person. It was also testified that the Democratic Supervisors had no clerks, and that the clerks of the Republican Supervisors were excluded from the polling-places by order of the Democratic committee.

J. N. Gregg, (colored,) Republican, United States Supervisor at the Eagle Engine-house, was the first witness. He testified that the election was quiet; when the polls closed, it was found that there was a number of tissue Democratic tickets in the box, and that there were 258 votes more than there were names of persons who voted; the excessive votes were drawn out, as required by law, by a blindfolded manager, and the witness believes that a majority of those so withdrawn were Republican ballots; he did not see any tissue ballots voted; many persons were challenged and prevented from voting, as non-residents or minors; the Democratic majority at the polls was 253.

Mr. Hutchinson, (white,) a Republican, United States Supervisor, testified that, at the poll in St. James, Goose Creek Parish, there were 135 tissue Democratic tickets, and the same excess over the number of voters; the excessive ballots were drawn out, a majority of these being Republican votes; not a voter was challenged, and the election was quiet. The witness considered all the colored people Republicans and all the whites Democrats.

W. J. Elfe, (colored,) Republican, United States Supervisor at the Washington Engine-house, testified that 81 voters were turned away by the managers for different reasons; soon after the count of the votes began the lights went out, and the witness fled through the back window, and went home; the belief of the witness was, that the Republicans had a large majority at this poll; nothing has ever been heard of the ballot-box or ballots.

C. C. White, Democratic Commissioner of Election, testified that a resolution to appoint only Democrats as managers was agreed to by the three Commissioners, one of them being a Republican, and the appointments were so made unanimously. The Republicans applied to have their party represented, but without success. The witness was a member of the County Democratic Committee, but did not act as such after his appointment as Commissioner.

T. Barker Jones, a Democratic Commissioner of Elections, testified to the same effect; also that he was a member of the County Democratic Committee, and attended its meetings now and then after becoming a Commissioner; he first saw the Democratic tissue ballots in the rooms of the Democratic committee; after election he found in the ballot-boxes a number of tissue Republican ballots bearing the names of Republican candidates; the object of the Democrats in using tissue tickets was to enable colored people to vote secretly for the Democratic candidates without risk of detection; he did not know where the Democratic tissue tickets came from or who distributed them; he heard they were printed in Columbia, but did not know by whom they were printed; the Democrats expected to get 50,000 colored votes; there was no law requiring Managers of Elections to be of different parties.

T. K. Buist, Democratic County Chairman, testified that no application having been made by the State, the whole expense of conducting the election fell on the Democrats; the County Committee had nothing to do with the tissue tickets; they were intended for colored people who expected intimidation from the Radicals, and did not wish their tickets to be seen; some might have been irregularly used. The witness did not know who printed the Democratic tissue tickets, nor did he see them; nor did he see any of them used, or give any instruction regarding them.

The committee then adjourned until to-morrow.

STATE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

LOOKING AFTER RESERVE FUNDS—CONDITION OF JOINT STOCK FIRE COMPANIES.

ALBANY, Jan. 21.—Justice Learned has granted an order postponing until Feb. 15 the meeting in regard to the claims, respectively, against the reserve fund of the Guardian Mutual Life, Reserve Mutual Life, Widows and Orphans' Benefit Life, all of New-York, and the New-York State Life Insurance Company of Syracuse, at which time the holders of policies are requested to appear and submit any proofs showing the validity of any policies which are questioned. The number of claimants are as follows: Guardian Mutual Life, 48; New-York State Life, 2; Reserve Mutual Life, 4; Widows and Orphans' Benefit Life, 18. The Attorney-General has brought suit for the dissolution of the Empire Mutual Life Insurance Company, and an order to show cause why the relief asked for should not be allowed and a Receiver appointed has been granted. The company has done no business, according to the complaint, since 1872, and made no annual reports to the department.

Superintendent Smyth, of the Insurance Department, has prepared a chart regarding New-York joint stock fire insurance companies, which gives the following information for the year ending Dec. 31, 1878:

	1877.	1878.
Total number of joint stock companies reporting	99	95
Assets	$56,585,455 55	$56,503,798 63
Total liabilities, exclusive of capital	37,884,693 73	39,348,158 93
Capital stock	23,057,620

TUESDAY, Jan. 21—P. M.

On the Stock Exchange to-day there was some reduction in the volume of business, with the great bulk of the transactions in the Granger shares, Erie, Lake Shore, and Delaware, Lackawanna and Western. The market at the opening exhibited a very strong undertone, and prices showed an advance of ¼ to 1 ₰ cent., and subsequently a still further rise of ½ to 2½ ₰ cent. was established, the improvement, except in a few instances, being well maintained in the final dealings. The sharp upward movement in prices was due to covering of short contracts, accompanied by large purchases for the long account. The coal stocks were active and strong. The statement submitted at the annual meeting of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, held at Philadelphia to-day, was regarded as a favorable exhibit, under all the circumstances. It is generally believed that the negotiations in progress looking toward a renewal of the coal combination are likely to be attended with success. Erie was quite prominent in the dealings, and advanced sharply. The reports in regard to the business and prospects of the company are of a very encouraging character. C., C., C. and I. made the greatest advance of the day, rising 2½ ₰ cent., purchases of the stock being stimulated by rumors that the company will, at an early day, resume the payment of dividends. The dealings in the Granger stocks were at intervals attended with considerable animation, and the speculation in these shares continue to be characterized by a buoyant tone.

The transactions aggregated 259,274 shares, including 61,075 North-western, 55,600 Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, 40,710 Erie, 36,780 St. Paul, 18,060 Lake Shore, 9,025 Ohio and Mississippi, 6,340 New-Jersey Central, 5,250 Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati and Indianapolis, 4,924 Michigan Central, 4,040 Morris and Essex, 2,946 Pittsburg, 2,275 Canada Southern, 1,800 St. Louis, Kansas City and Northern, 1,540 Delaware and Hudson, 1,270 Illinois Central.

North-western common advanced from 57 to 58⅞, closing at 58¾. The preferred rose from 82⅜ to 84, and reacted to 83½. St. Paul common advanced from 39⅜ to 40¼, and the preferred from 79¾ to 81, with final sales at 40 and 80⅜, respectively. Lake Shore advanced from 69⅝ to 70⅜, and reacted to 69⅞. Michigan Central rose 1¾ ₰ cent., to 80, and closed at only a fractional reaction from the highest point. Canada Southern advanced from 46 to 46⅞, and Erie common from 23¼ to 24. Erie preferred was 1½ ₰ cent. higher, selling up to 40. Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati and Indianapolis rose from 40¼ to 42⅜, and closed at 42½. Ohio and Mississippi advanced from 8⅞ to 9⅜, and preferred from 24 to 24¾. Wabash sold at 21⅜@22, and St. Louis, Kansas City and Northern at 8. The preferred rose from 33 to 33¼, fell off to 32¾, and closed at 32⅞. Hannibal and St. Joseph declined from 15¾ to 14⅞ for the common, and from 39 to 38⅜ for the preferred. Delaware, Lackawanna and Western sold up to 50¾, and closed at 50⅝, making the advance on the day 1 ₰ cent. to 2¼ ₰ cent. New-Jersey Central advanced nearly 2 ₰ cent., selling up to 41¼, and closing at 40⅝. Morris and Essex rose from 81½ to 82⅜, and Delaware and Hudson from 42 to 43¼. Pacific Mail sold at 13@13¼. Western Union declined 96@94. Among investment shares, Rock Island advanced from 124½ to 124⅞, and reacted to 124½. Chicago, Burlington and Quincy rose from 113 to 114. New-York Central sold at 114⅛, Panama at 123, and Chicago and Alton at 83½. Pittsburg advanced from 90⅝ to 91¾, and reacted to 91½. Illinois Central rose from 81⅞ to 82⅞. Express stocks were firm, on small transactions.

The Money market was extremely easy again to-day, and the range of rates for call loans was 1½ and 3 ₰ cent. Prime mercantile paper was quoted at 3½ to 5 ₰ cent., according to the date of maturity. The following were the rates of exchanges on New-York at the undermentioned cities to-day: Savannah, buying at par, selling ¼@¾ premium; Charleston firm, buying ⅛@1-16 discount, selling par; New-Orleans, commercial ¼, bank ⅛; St. Louis, 75 premium; Chicago, steady, buying 1-10 discount, selling 1-10 premium, and Boston 20 cents premium.

The foreign advices reported the rate of discount in the open market at London down to 2⅞@3 ₰ cent. The Bank of England gained £22,000 bullion to-day on balance. Consols advanced to 96⅜ for both money and the account. United States bonds were firm for 4½s at 108⅜@108¾; 5s fell off to 107⅞, and subsequently advanced to 108⅛. United States 10-40s declined ⅜ per cent., to 105½, and 1867s ⅛, to 103⅝. Erie rose to 23⅝, and the preferred to 39, but the former afterward reacted to 23⅜, and the latter to 38⅜. Illinois Central advanced ¼ ₰ cent., to 84; New-Jersey Central ¼, to 41, and Reading ¼, to 12½. At Paris, Rentes were strong, and closed at 113f. 85c., against 113f. 27½c. yesterday.

The Sterling Exchange market was firm, and the nominal rates were advanced half a cent., to $4 86 for bankers' 60-day bills, and $4 89½ for demand. Actual business, however, was at a concession from the posted rates, and there is, consequently, at the moment, no apparent profit in Gold shipments. It is claimed that there are large stocks of Sterling in our market, upon which money has been borrowed, likely to be offered for sale at prevailing quotations, and that thus the necessity for an export movement in Gold may be obviated. Actual business was at $4 85@$4 85¼ for 60 days, $4 88½@$4 89 for demand, $4 89½@$4 89¾ for cables, and $4 83¼@$4 84 for commercial.

Government bonds were firm, with an advance of ⅛ ₰ cent. in coupon 1868s and currency 6s. In railroad mortgages there was a large and well-distributed business, with a further improvement in some issues and a decline in others. Harlem registered Firsts sold at 122½, do. coupon at 122½, New-York Central registered Firsts at 121¾, do. coupon at 121¾, Rock Island 6s at 109⅞@110, Chicago, Burlington and Quincy 8s at 110⅜@110½, C., C., C. and I. Firsts at 112¼, and Michigan Central 7sat 115. New-Jersey Central consolidated Firsts rose from 80@80¾, and reacted to the former figure. Do. Adjustment fell off to 94¾, do. convertibles, reacted, 79¾, and Chicago and Milwaukee 8s consolidated, assented, to 48. Canada Southern Firsts advanced to 78⅜, St. Paul consolidated Sinking Funds to 102½; C., C. and I. C. Firsts to 107⅜; Delaware and Hudson, registered, of 1891, to 97; C., C., C. and I. consolidated, to 100; Chicago, St. Paul and Minneapolis 6s Firsts to 90½; Chicago and Alton Sinking Funds to 102¾, and Cincinnati and Springfield Firsts (guaranteed by the Lake Shore) to 95½. Denver and Rio Grande Firsts declined to 87¼, Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern Firsts to 71½, and Missouri, Kansas and Texas consolidated assented to 50. Delaware, Lackawanna and Western 7s of 1907 rose to 106⅜, and reacted to 106½. In State bonds Louisiana Consols advanced to 63¾, but finally sold at 63¼. District Columbia 3.65s fell off to 81¼, and North Carolina ,old, January and July, to 19¼. Tennessees sold at 36 for old, 28⅜ for new, and 28 for new series.

The exports of domestic produce from the ports of New-York under the date of this date were $5,950,349, against $5,866,962 for the corresponding week last year, and $6,375,186 in 1877. The total exports of produce since Jan. 1 this year were $14,627,304, against $17,442,673 for the same period last year, and $16,854,592 in 1877.

FOUR HEARTLESS ROGUES.

AN ATROCIOUS CASE OF ARSON.

THE ATTEMPT TO BURN A LUDLOW-STREET TENEMENT-HOUSE—THE PERSONS IMPLICATED—ABRAHAM PERLSTEIN'S TRIAL BEGUN.

The trial of what will probably prove to be one of the most atrocious cases of arson ever committed in this City was begun before Judge Cowing in the General Sessions Court yesterday. The persons implicated are named Abraham Perlstein, Joseph Levy, Charles Bernstein, and David Freeman. They are known to the Fire Department as a gang of daring and reckless "firebugs," who have on more than one occasion defrauded insurance companies by overinsuring their effects and then setting fire to them. The plan adopted was that the member of the gang whose goods were to be set on fire was to be absent at the time, so that he could, in case of suspicion, assert his innocence and prove an alibi. It is charged by the prosecuting officers that the gang had set fire to various tenement-houses and endangered the lives of their fellow-beings, in order to possess themselves of a few hundred dollars insurance fraudulently obtained. The case was set down for trial yesterday, and Assistant District Attorney Rollins, who has tried so many important arson cases, took charge of the prosecution. Mr. Charles W. Brooke, counsel for Abraham Perlstein, demanded a separate trial for his client, and the case was accordingly placed on trial. The court-room was crowded with firemen, insurance men, and the relatives of the prisoners.

The facts of the case, as forth by Assistant District Attorney Rollins in a long opening, are as follows: On the night of Nov. 10 last, a fire was discovered in the six-story tenement-house, No. 11 Ludlow-street, in which 24 families lived. An alarm was given and the firemen speedily extinguished the flames. It was then discovered that the fire had originated on the third floor, in the three rooms occupied by a peddler named Joseph Levy and his wife. Now it happened that Levy's actions for days previous to the fire had been closely watched, as heand his alleged confederates were suspected of being a gang of organized "fire-bugs," whose object was to overinsure their effects, in order to defraud the insurance companies. In this instance Levy's effects were only worth about $200, yet they were insured for three times that amount. "It was desirable to Levy," said Mr. Rollins, "that this place should be burned, so that he could recover his insurance; but it was not desirable that he should be on hand at the time, so that he could truly swear he was absent. Therefore it was that he procured the assistance of his confederates in crime to do the job in his absence." Being under surveillance on the day of the fire, the gang were traced to their head-quarters, at No. 62 East Broadway. Bernstein, Perlstein, and Freeman were seen by employes of the Fire Department to leave this place, carrying a basket and a demijohn supposed to contain kerosene to the third floor of No. 11 Ludlow-street. They were seen to unlock the door of Levy's apartments, which the latter had by previous arrangement vacated. Perlstein was seen to pull down the blinds, and so certain did the watchers feel that arson was being perpetrated that they went to the nearest enginehouse and cautioned them to be on the look-out for a conflagration in No. 11 Ludlow-street. The foreman called his men to their posts, hitched up the horses, and for 10 minutes awaited the promised alarm. The alarm did come, and so speedily, too, that the fire must have been initiated in its presence felt. The firemen knew exactly where to look for the fire, and when they burst open the doors undeniable evidence of incendiarism met their gaze. The floor was saturated with kerosene, every article of furniture was impregnated with the same inflammable fluid, and fires had been started in three distinct places. The fire having been arrested in its inception was speedily subdued, and overwhelming evidence of a fiendish crime was discovered. The firemen departed, and at midnight the three conspirators met at the house of Perlstein, and after spending two hours together, separated. Next morning the entire gang were arrested at their head-quarters on East Broadway, and charged with arson. They denied that they had been engaged in any conspiracy; indeed, they denied knowing each other at all, and branded as a falsehood the statement that they had visited Levy's premises. The evidence against them, however, was overwhelming, and all four were indicted by the Grand Jury for arson in the first degree. "What a dreadful picture," he presented to you," said Mr. Rollins in concluding his opening. "What a drama of crime—a drama that if presented on the stage would be looked upon as unreal. I hold that in the person of the prisoner at the bar you see one of the worst criminals that ever stood in a court of justice. The man who would participate in the burning of that crowded tenementhouse, with its 24 families, containing scores of helpless little children, is guilty of as atrocious a crime as ever disgraced civilization, and I know that if you believe from the evidence which I shall present to you that this man has done what I have charged him with, you will, with honest satisfaction and gratification find him guilty of arson in the first degree."

The first witness examined was Fire Marshal Rhelden, who detailed the evidence of arson discovered by him in Levy's apartments after the fire had been extinguished. The Marshal also exhibited a map showing the location of the various and distinct fires as they existed when discovered. Several inmates of the house No. 11 Ludlow-street were then examined, and the court adjourned until to-day.

NO NEW PRODUCE EXCHANGE.

THE MEASURE DEFEATED BY A CLOSE VOTE —THE COMMISSION BUSINESS SAID TO HAVA REACHED ITS MAXIMUM.

The speculative furor on the Produce Exchange yesterday was supplemented by an excitement scarcely less absorbing over the ballot as to whether or not steps should be taken at once to provide for the erection of a new Exchange building. It was confidently believed by the progressive party that they would have no difficulty in securing a large majority of votes; but the conservatives issued a circular yesterday giving nine reasons why the plan proposed should not be accepted. These were: That property south of Wall-street will probably be lower in price; that there is nothing to warrant a rise in values in this locality; that cash-down purchases can be made as favorably at any future time as at present; that the loss of interest, the payment of taxes, &c., until it should be decided to build would diminish the present income of the Exchange and compel an assessment or involve a bonded debt; that the assess, if allowed to remain on interest, will in time, together with the present building, be sufficient to defray the whole cost of ground and building; that there is reason to fear that the Exchange has reached its maximum of business and membership, the development of transportation facilities making this port simply a transfer point, and doing away with the intervention of commission merchants as buyers or sellers of large quantities of grain, provisions, &c.; that it would be more in keeping with sound policy to let the membership initiate the movement than to have it pressed upon them by the Board of Managers; that the plan as submitted was open to abuse and favoritism, and gave the members, as a body, no voice in the future disposal of the fund; and that it would be much better to ask for proposals for the purchase of real estate, the members to have the right to determine which to accept. These arguments captured the wavering, and the result was the defeat of the measure by a vote of 637 in favor to 693 against. The provision men, who occupy the lower and worst ventilated floor of the Exchange, were largely in favor of a new building. When the result was announced they laid the blame of their defeat upon the grain men, who deal on the upper floor, which has a lofty ceiling, and threatened to take measures to force a change of places, and thus give their opponents a chance to "see how it is themselves."

A NEW SUPERVISOR OF THE CITY RECORD.

The Mayor, the Commissioner of Public Works, and the Corporation Counsel met yesterday as the City Record Commission for the purpose of receiving an answer from Mr. Charles F. Wood in reply to their communication requesting him to show cause why he should not be removed from the office of Supervisor of the City Record on the ground of inefficiency. Mr. Wood, in his answer, requested that any charges against him be specified, and that he be furnished with a copy of them. The board then sent Mr. James E. Morrison, the Mayor's private secretary, for Mr. Wood, but he was not at his office. Mr. Morrison subsequently met him in the City Hall Park, and informed him that the Commissioners desired him to appear before them. Mr. Wood, however, declined to accompany the Secretary, remarking that he would not appear before the board except with or by counsel. When this fact was communicated by Mr. Morrison to the Commissioners, they adopted a resolution removing Mr. Wood, and Mr. Thomas Costigan was appointed to fill the vacancy. Mr. Costigan was formerly a member of the Legislature from this City, and during his term in the Assembly he presented several notable measures relating to the reorganization of our local Government, one of them being widely known as "the Costigan bill." He commenced life as a journalist, and is a member of the New-York Bar. Last Fall he was actively identified with the movement of the Independent Democracy against Tammany.

THE RAID ON THE COUNTERFEITERS.

Jacob Ott, the lithograph printer, who was arrested by the Secret Service officers on Monday evening, on a charge of being implicated in the operations of Charles Ulrich and Henry C. Cole, the expert counterfeiters, was arraigned before United States Commissioner Deuel yesterday. Assistant United States Attorney Wetherbee appeared for the Government, and ex-Judge A. J. Dittenhoefer for the prisoner. When the Commissioner called the case, Mr. Wetherbee said he would be compelled to ask for an adjournment of the examination for a day or two, in consequence of the absence of the principal witness for the prosecution. Ex-Judge Dittenhoefer said he was ready to proceed at once, and he thought the Government, when it initiates a proceeding against an individual, should certainly not plead inability to prepare, with such vast resources at its command. He was ready to show that Ott was absolutely and entirely innocent, and that this remarkable activity of the Secret Service officials would in the end amount to a useless and senseless demonstration. He had often been accommodated by the United States Attorney, however, and he would consent to an adjournment, on the prosecution stipulating that during the interval no attempt should be made by the officials to "spirit" the prisoners away to Philadelphia, as he had heard was intended to be done. The stipulation being agreed to, the examination was adjourned.

REPUBLICAN CENTRAL COMMITTEE.

FIRST MEETING OF THE NEW BODY FOR 1879—A LARGE NUMBER OF CONTESTED SEATS—NO ORGANIZATION YET EFFECTED —EULOGY OF CONKLING.

The Republican Central Committee of the City of New-York for the year 1879 held its first meeting last night at Republican head-quarters, and took steps toward forming a permanent organization. All the leading members of the party in this City were present. Joseph C. Pinckney, as Chairman of the last Central Committee, called the meeting to order, and Solon B. Smith, as Secretary of the committee of 1878, called the roll of delegates, 145 members answering to their names. When the names of Col. George Bliss, Jacob Hess, and Sheridan Shook were called there was some applause, and when, a few minutes later, Gen. Chester A. Arthur and Col. Bliss, entered the hall there was a hearty demonstration of welcome tendered them. When the Chairman asked if there were any protests from contesting delegates or delegations, the Secretary announced that the entire delegations from the Third, Fifth, Eighth, and Fifteenth Assembly Districts were contested, and the protests filed in the usual form. From the Sixth Assembly District there was a protest and notice of contest, signed by Henry A. Smith and Horace H. Nelson, against the admission of John Hunt and Patrick Clark as delegates. The protest sets up the provisions of Article 14 of the constitution of the committee, in respect to the eligibility of delegates holding office under Democratic authority and appointment, and charges that Hunt is an employe of the Dock Department and Clark of the Street-cleaning Bureau, and that both men are, therefore, ineligible. An individual protest was filed also by Samuel Hamilton and John Fricke, of the Fifteenth Assembly District, against the admission as delegates of Sheridan Shook and Adam Rohe, charging that they are ineligible because they are not duly elected members of the district association. A protest signed by Christopher Pullman and Francis B. Nugent, of the Eighteenth Assembly District, against the admission of John R. Lawrence and David Milliken, was also announced. The contestants charge that Lawrance and Milliken were not duly elected at the primary, but that they were counted in after the polls had been closed by James R. Cosgrove and the other inspectors of election. A protest against the admission of Benjamin B. Sealey, as a delegate from the Twenty-third Ward, was also filed, and alleged that he is not a resident of the district, and therefore ineligible. On motion, all contested seats were directed to be referred to the Committee on Contested Seats as soon as such committee shall have been appointed.

The Chairman announced that, under the authority conferred upon him as Chairman of the last Central Committee, he would appoint the Committee on Contested Seats, and would make the appointments public through the press before the next meeting of the Central Committee.

John D. Lawson, delegate from the Seventh District, offered a series of resolutions eulogistic of the abilities and public services of Roscoe Conkling, and congratulating the State and the country on his re-election to the United States Senate for a third term, and moved their adoption.

Col. Charles S. Spencer seconded the motion in a brief speech, and said that when the Lieutenant-Governor at noon to-day announced the election of Roscoe Conkling to the United State Senate, the news would gladden the heart of the entire country.

Gen. George W. Palmer, of the Eighty-first Assembly District, said Senator Conkling did not need the commendation conveyed by the resolutions—his commendation existed in the fact that he was elected by the unanimous vote of the whole Republican caucus at Albany. This was no time to make distinctions, but in such a superb exhibition of strength and unity all might be stimulated to stand by the entire administration of the Republican Party.

The resolutions were then put to a vote of the committee, and were unanimously adopted.

On motion, it was ordered that when the committee adjourn it adjourn subject to the call of the present Chairman, and the committee then adjourned.

DEARER FOOD.

A BULL MOVEMENT IN PROVISIONS AND BREADSTUFFS—FAILURE OF A BEAR.

Provisions, particularly pork and lard, have touched lower prices during the past season than ever before. When the recent snow blockade occurred, speculators, deeming it a favorable opportunity for a grand bull movement, induced a number of outside capitalists—Wall-street men, and others with money seeking investment—to join them, on the representation that there would be great difficulty in making deliveries; that the forthcoming hog statistics would show a short crop; that the quality of pork coming forward would be of a poor quality; that owners of live hogs were reluctant to part with their goods in view of the low prices offered, and the cheapness of corn, and so on. During the past 10 or 12 days there has, consequently, been an exceedingly active speculation for a rise in provisions based on these reports. The movement culminated yesterday, on more favorable foreign advices, a better export demand, and easier money. Pork has advanced from $2 to $2 25 per barrel, and lard from 75 to 87 cents per 100 pounds. The advance yesterday alone was on pork from 40 to 50 cents per barrel, and on lard 20 cents per 100 pounds. In Chicago, where the movement originated, the market for pork, for March delivery, opened yesterday at 20 cents, advanced to 55 and 65 cents, and closed at 45 cents bid. Lard advanced 17½ cents. Consolidated Pools were formed yesterday for the first time, and speculation in them was very active. Wheat advanced from ½ to 1 cent per bushel, and options on corn from ¼ to ½ a cent. Both kinds of grain were very strong. All the transactions on 'Change during the day were characterized by much excitement.

George D. Hencken, provision-dealer, of No. 214 First-avenue, notified the Produce Exchange yesterday of his inability to meet his engagements. He was a large speculator in pork and lard on the bear side, and is credited with having made profits on his contracts during the past Summer of over $20,000. He was caught badly in the rise, and was obliged to suspend, with liabilities estimated at $35,000. These are distributed among a great many creditors, and the market will consequently not be affected.

WHAT KILLED MR. ROCKWELL.

At a meeting of the Brooklyn Board of Health yesterday, a long report was received from Sanitary Inspector Raymond in reference to the causes which led to the death of the late James S. Rockwell, a millionaire, who owned one of the finest houses on Brooklyn Heights. Within a short time there were seven cases of diphtheria and scarlatina in Mr. Rockwell's house, two of which proved fatal, the owner being one of the victims. The report set forth that the house was furnished with all the traps and other appliances known to plumbers, but all the pipes were drained by a 6-inch pipe which descended perpendicularly—the house being on a great height—into the common sewer in Furman-street. This pipe was not trapped, and all the poisonous gases from the Furman-street sewer flowed freely into the house. The theory of the Sanitary Inspector is that some of the pipes in the house became unsealed, and that the temperature of the rooms being kept at about 70°, while the temperature outside was frequently at zero, a vacuum was produced and the poisonous gases drawn into the house. The report recommended changes in the plumbing of the house, and the trapping of the sewer leading to the Furman-street sewer on the outside of the house. The recommendations contained in the report were adopted.

DEATH FROM EXPOSURE.

Messrs. Kiernan and Devine, residents of Flatbush, Long Island, found a woman named Mary Bromley lying in the snow on Albany-avenue, near Webster-street, on Saturday night. She was thinly clad, without shoes or stockings, and so benumbed from exposure that she was unable to speak. Devine raised the woman on his back and carried her to a house near by occupied by a family named Leonard. A wake was in progress in the house, and the young man who opened the door refused the woman admittance, saying that "one wake was enough at a time." The woman was subsequently taken to the Kings County Hospital in a cart, but when they came to lift her out of the cart she was dead. Yesterday the Coroner's jury returned a verdict of death from exposure.

THE INDICTED BROOKLYN OFFICERS.

The trial of Commissioners Flaherty and Bennett, of the Brooklyn Board of City Works, and Messrs. Milne and Dody, subordinate officers of same department, was fixed by Judge Nelson, in the City Court, yesterday, for the third Monday in February. Counsel for the accused objected to the jurisdiction of the court, on the ground that the indictments were found by the Court of Sessions Grand Jury, and then transferred to the Court of Oyer and Terminer, where argument on a demurrer was heard and pleas put in, then transferred back to the Court of Sessions, and from that court sent to the City Court. Counsel asserted that there was no authority for sending the indictments back to the Court of Sessions, and, consequently, that court had no power to send them to the City Court. It was further claimed that the pleas being accepted in the Oyer and Terminer after hearing of argument on demurrer, the trial was, to all intents and purposes, begun in that court, and could not be continued in another court. Judge Nelson desired counsel on both sides to hand in memoranda of authorities.

SEXTON ENTERS THE LISTS.

HE IS READMITTED TO THE TOURNAMENT.

THE SECOND DAY OF THE BILLIARD CONTESTS—RUDOLPHE WINS A TIRESOME GAME WITH GALLAGHER—DALY'S BRILLIANT PLAY WITH HEISER.

The second day of the Brunswick and Balke Tournament, held at Cooper Institute yesterday, brought about an increase of the list of contestants, which will be hailed with pleasure by all lovers of the game. William Sexton, conscious of the consequence that would attend his rash act in breaking his pledge and retiring at the last moment from the tournament, has reflected upon his conduct, and adopted the manly course of atoning to the best of his ability for an action that was denounced far and wide. Yesterday afternoon he attended a private meeting of the contestants, and in their presence signed the following letter:

The Messrs. Brunswick and Balke:

GENTLEMEN: My health having greatly improved within the past few days, and being anxious to aid the success of the tournament so brilliantly inaugurated, I desire to reconsider my withdrawal from the list of contestants therein, and if agreeable to you and the players, and not too late, I would be glad to carry out my original engagement. In the event of receiving a favorable reply, I will do everything in my power to further the interests of the tournament. Respectfully,

WILLIAM SEXTON.

The players and managers at once readmitted Sexton, and thus have secured to the public the longwished-for opportunity of witnessing the meeting between him and his adversary, Jacob Schaefer. Sexton will play George Slosson this evening. The afternoon game yesterday was between A. P. Rudolphe and Thomas F. Gallagher, of St. Louis. The contest began with the selection of Mr. Eugene Carter as umpire for "Tom" Gallagher and E. M. Smith for Rudolphe. Mr. Geary was referee and Mr. G. H. Ellis marker. Gallagher winning the lead, took the white ball, and retired after making a counting stroke from the string. Rudolphe repeatedly chalked his cue on its tip and side, and whitened his fingers with powdered chalk, but though he played carefully, the balls rolled badly. Gallagher, whose curly head rose above the polished surface of a high linen collar, got his cue in correct swing after a while, and gathered a neat 21 in the third inning, while the long-whiskered Frenchman stood cautiously watching him, and Sexton, sitting with some friends, looked on with a critical eye. Neither player seemed able to gain control of the ivories for many innings, and although a fine shot was made at rare intervals, the play was, as a rule, very poor, and not much above that of any fair amateur. Gallagher in his twenty-first inning got the balls into position on the bottom rail, after making a great "scratch," and began to roll them slowly and carefully toward the left side rail. They "broke" as they reached the side rail, but on his ninety-ninth shot he gathered them, and, amid applause, began another period of delicate "nursing." Gallagher kept up until the balls again broke, and he retired after scoring 183.

It was now the Frenchman's turn, and he soon gathered the ivories and began some delicate "nursing," "varying the balls" broke," with some bold open-table play for position. He retired after netting 110 points, with a score 113 less than his opponent's. Indifferent play was now begun and continued tediously until Rudolphe ventured to accompany with a brilliant run of 159, during the progress of which he excited great laughter by saying, as he began to "nurse" after running 100: "It's a pity to see the game reduced to this [nursing]. I don't call it brilliant, do it." After some further skirmishing on both sides, Rudolphe closed the game with a run of 82, beating his adversary 161 points. Following is the score:

Rudolphe—1, 5, 7, 6, 8, 3, 1, 1, 2, 0, 0, 0, 0, 3, 5, 3, 12, 8, 0, 7, 0, 0, 0, 0, 0, 19, 2, 4, 8, 11, 18, 159, 0, 0, 47, 19, 7, 15, 0, 82—800.

Gallagher—1, 6, 5, 21, 7, 3, 13, 0, 0, 0, 2, 9, 3, 2, 27, 2, 2, 0, 0, 1, 183, 7, 1, 0, 1, 2, 1, 3, 32, 0, 26, 4, 0, 2, 48, 1, 6, 18, 0, 0—439.

Winner's average, 15; loser's, 10 39-40.

Best runs—Rudolphe, 159, 110, 82; Gallagher, 183, 48.

Time of game—3 hours and 10 minutes.

Randolph Heiser, the young Bostonian, and Maurice Daly, the young Chicagoan, the latter of whom played an unusually brilliant and rapid game, crossed cues in the evening. Heiser won the "bank," and counted from the string and made 6 points, Daly following with 2. Heiser made a fine run of 92 points, the majority of which were scored on the open table. In his tenth inning, Heiser played a very difficult "draw" that brought the ivories together on the right side rail, and then followed a glimpse of his powers at delicate "nursing," and his strength on the open table, at "banks," "cushion," "draw" and "masse" shots. He retired after counting 62. He guarded his unisex on difficult occasions with fine "safety" play, in which course he was justified, as he was playing an adversary who was taking no chances, but he was too frightened to play well. Daly soon gathered the balls, and again he came very fine rail "nursing," turning the lower right-hand corner with ease, and driving the ivories rapidly toward the top of the table. By the time they reached the top Daly had piled out 100 points, and the player still had them under perfect control, and rolled them over to the top rail, and across to the left side rail, near the middle of which they "broke." After 168 had been counted he drove unsuccessfully to gather them, and retired after counting 175, the score standing Daly 553 to Heiser's 77. At this stage the announcement of Sexton's re-entry into the tournament was made, and greeted with great applause. After some unsteady play on both sides, Daly gathered the balls upon the rail once more, and, with a run of 37, closed the game in the twentieth inning, beating Heiser exactly 500 points, and making the largest average ever gained on a quick-cushion table. The following is the score:

Daly—3, 0, 0, 82, 0, 6, 11, 36, 1, 0, 0, 6, 0, 0, 233, 175, 2, 2, 6, 37—600.

Heiser—6, 0, 0, 0, 3, 0, 0, 1, 0, 62, 2, 2, 1, 0, 0, 0, 1, 15, 0, 7—100.

Winner's average, 30; loser's, 5.

Best Runs—Daly, 233, 175, 82; Heiser, 62.

Time of Game—1 hour and 30 minutes.

This afternoon Gallagher will play Garnier.

DINNER TO LEON CHOTTEAU.

A complimentary dinner was given to M. Leon Chotteau in the saloon of the transatlantic steamer L'Amérique last evening. Among the 30 gentlemen present were M. Louis de Bébian, agent of the Compagnie Générale Transatlantique; Capt. De Lort, of the steamer L'Amérique; Mr. William Appleton, of the firm of D. Appleton & Co.; Mr. Nathan Appleton, of Boston; Mr. Paul Forbes, Mr. G. L. Fenardent, and others. The dinner, which was entirely informal, and intended as a compliment to M. Chotteau, was served and thoroughly enjoyed by all present. When the menu had been exhausted, Mr. Nathan Appleton, Capt. De Lort, and others spoke in French, and were followed by M. Chotteau, who proposed the American Press. Responding to M. Chotteau said that, as a journalist himself, he desired to speak in the highest terms of the energy of the American press, and relied upon its aid to effect a commercial treaty between France and America. His remarks were much applauded, and were responded to briefly by M. Menier. M. Chotteau said that he, in conjunction with Mr. Nathan Appleton, had spoken before the Boards of Trade in a large number of French towns, and had been received most cordially. He proposed to do the same in the principal cities of this country. M. Chotteau will remain in this City until Thursday or Friday, when he will take his departure for Washington.

THE OLD GUARD RECEPTION.

Great preparations have been made to make the civic and military reception of the Old Guard tomorrow evening a highly successful affair. Many of the best military organizations of the country will be represented, and a number of them have already arrived in this City. Among these are the Boston Light Infantry, Seventh Regiment Veterans, Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston, Twenty-second Regiment Worcester Continentals, Twenty-third, Thirteenth and, Fourteenth Regiments of Brooklyn, New-Haven Grays, United Train of Artillery of Providence, Amoskeag Veterans, Ninth Regiment, Albany Burgesses Corps, Twelfth Regiment, officers of the United States Army and Navy, Troy Citizens' Corps, Utica Citizens' Corps, Washington Light Infantry of Charleston, Seventy-first Regiment Providence Light Infantry, Maryland Fifth Regiment, National Lancers of Boston, the State Fencibles of Philadelphia, and Governor's rates and suites. The prestige the "Old Guard" enjoys among our best society-people speaks well for a brilliant gathering. The great demand for tickets has necessitated a limitation, and only a few boxes are unsold.

TAXATION OF INSURANCE COMPANIES.

The cases of the people on the relation of the Manhattan Insurance Company and of the Niagara Insurance Company against the Tax Commissioners, decided by the Court of Appeals yesterday, are of great importance both from the questions decided and the amount of money involved. The fire insurance companies, 52 in number, brought writs of certiorari to review the assessments of their personal estate for the purpose of taxation made by the Tax Commissioners for the year 1878. The companies made returns under the provisions of the general insurance law to the Commissioners, by which it appeared that they possessed either very little taxable property, or, as in several cases, none at all. The Commissioners compared these returns with the annual reports of the companies made to the Superintendent of Insurance, and in every case assessed for a much larger sum than was stated in the return. The companies claimed that there was error and that the Commissioners were bound by the returns. They also claimed that the whole amount of the premiums on unexpired risks and policies held by them should be deducted from their taxable property, and that United States securities should be deducted at their market value. The Commissioners allowed one-half of such unearned premiums as a contingent liability, and deducted such sum and the amount of United States bonds held by the companies at their face from the gross amount of their taxable personal property. The two cases named were selected as test cases, and the Court of Appeals has on all points affirmed the action of the Commissioners. The amount of the tax levy for the year 1878 involved in these decisions is about $240,000. The cases were argued by William Allen Butler for the companies and John Alexander Beall, Assistant Corporation Counsel, for the Commissioners.

FIRE IN ELIZABETH, N. J.

THE ARCADE PARTIALLY DESTROYED—THE OPERA-HOUSE GUTTED—THE LOSSES AND INSURANCE.

The largest private building in Elizabeth, N. J., known as the Arcade, was discovered to be on fire yesterday at 10:30 A. M., the alarm being given by its owner, Hon. Amos Clark, Jr., who found smoke issuing from a garret of the building. The Volunteer Fire Department promptly responded, and five steamers, two hose, and two hook and ladder companies did excellent service, and by 1 o'clock the fire was extinguished. The flames were confined to the upper or fourth story of the building, and are supposed to have originated from a defective flue, and to have extended into a garret which was over the entire building. From this they reached downward into the Opera-house, which was on the third and fourth floors of the building, and completely gutted it. The scenery, curtains, and wood-work of the stage, which were in the front of the building, gave light fuel to the flames, and they poured out of the windows with such force that it was supposed no part of the edifice could be saved. The roof, covered with tin, quickly fell in, but in so doing afforded an opportunity to the firemen to pour in water from above, and thus the flames were checked. The building was of Philadelphia brick, with stone trimmings, and was erected by Mr. Clark in 1868 and 1869 at a cost of $150,000. It was situated near the railroad depot, and had a frontage of 65 feet on Broad-street, while it extended back 180 feet, with a side frontage of 90 feet on West Grand-street. The Broad-street part comprised an entrance and two stores on the first floor, while the back portion had a side entrance on West Grand-street, and was built as an arcade, with a large space in the centre. Here was situated the Post Office, and on the first alarm Postmaster Harris called together his six letter-carriers and four clerks, and had everything removed from the office, save the safe. A temporary Post Office was established in a store near by, and there was little or no interruption in the business. As the Post Office room was only damaged by water, it will be reoccupied in less than a week.

The two stores on the first floor were occupied by S. M. Clark, tailor, and D. C. Hayes, grocer. Clark removed his goods with little or no damage, but Hayes estimates his loss, which was principally by water, at from $2,000 to 2,500, on which he is fully insured. In the Arcade were the rooms of the Conservatory of Music, Masonic Hall, Elizabeth Glee Club, Western Union Telegraph office, that of Amos Clark, Jr., and others. As the Arcade proper was only injured by water, the loss on rooms and contents is confined to but small. The building of the First National Bank occupies a niche taken out of the Opera house and Arcade building on the front and side, but a strong partition wall saved it, although the bank officers removed their valuables to the other bank, so that their business might not be interrupted if the worst happened. In the basement of the bank building are the offices of the Dime Savings Bank, but they suffered no damage. In the upper stories were lawyers' offices, and these suffered some damage from water. The Opera-house was the only part of the large structure that suffered from fire, and that is only destroyed from the floor up. Mr. Clark expresses his intention to refit the Opera-house at once, and estimates the cost at fully $35,000. On the entire building he is insured for $51,000, but he cannot at present tell how much of this is on the Opera-house and how much on the Arcade. He thinks, however, that he is insured for an amount sufficient to rebuild the Opera-house. Following is a list of the insurance on Mr. Clark's building:

Firemen's Trust, New-York	$2,500
Produce Exchange, New-York	4,000
Lafayette, New-York	5,000
Guardian, New-York	2,500
Kings County, Brooklyn	2,500
Franklin, New-York	2,500
Commercial Union, New-York	5,000
Columbia, New-York	2,500
Lamar, New-York	3,000
Montauk, Brooklyn	2,500
Adriatic, New-York	2,500
Transatlantic	2,500
Spring, New-York	2,500
Liverpool, London and Globe	2,500
Manhattan, New-York	2,500
German American, New-York	1,500
Royal, England	2,500
Manufacturer's, Newark, N. J	2,500
Total	$51,000

THE PINCKNEY TRIAL CLOSED.

DAMAGING TESTIMONY GIVEN ON REBUTTAL —THE REPORT TO BE SUBMITTED ON FRIDAY.

Alexander Lamont, a lawyer, gave some very damaging testimony on Monday last, at his residence, No. 868 Lexington-avenue, against Civil Justice Walter S. Pinckney. Mr. Lamont has been ill about six weeks, and the prosecution, in closing their side of the case, reserved the right of examining him at any future time before submitting the Referee's report to the Supreme Court, General Term. Mr. Lamont testified that he tried a large number of cases in Justice Pinckney's court, and that on many occasions he had seen him intoxicated on the bench; he mentioned several dates, including May 1, Sept. 27 and 29, 1877, and Feb. 7 and May 29, 1878; on one of these occasions a suit for the recovery of a small sum of money was tried, and judgment was rendered for the plaintiff; a Marshal named Kennedy hearing that a horse and wagon belonging to the defendant were standing in front of the Court-house, went out to levy on it; Justice Pinckney left the bench, bare-headed, and ran out on the sidewalk and stopped the proceeding, informing the Marshal and the plaintiff that the horse did not belong to the defendant; he afterward invited the plaintiff into his private office and tried to settle the case. Mr. Lamont also testified that he personally accused Justice Pinckney of drunkenness on the bench, and that Pinckney did not deny it. In his cross-examination the witness said that the reason he made memorandums of the dates on which he had seen the Justice drunk, was that, believing he was not only a drunkard, but also dishonest in his judicial practices, he [the witness] had resolved to institute, on his personal responsibility, proceedings for the removal of Pinckney from the bench. Mr. Lamont gave the names of a number of persons, who, he said, were able to corroborate his assertions. The further hearing of the case was resumed and closed yesterday at the office of Corporation Counsel Whitney. A statement of the amount of business transacted in the Seventh District Court during the year 1877 was submitted, from which it appeared that 1,824 cases were disposed of; this number included 655 inquests and 1,23 cases settled out of court. Of the remainder, Justice Pinckney tried 374; Justice Gedney, 164; Justice Dinkel, 218; Justice Parker, 103; Justice Callahan, 37; Justice Flanagan, 40; Justice Campbell, 44, and Justice Kelly, 49.

James R. Davies, having sworn that he never saw Justice Pinckney under the influence of drink on the bench, Cornelius Farley, a Marshal, was called in rebuttal. He testified that he had seen Davies standing near Justice Pinckney when the latter was under the influence of liquor, and that he [Davies] was aware of the fact that the Justice was drunk; on one occasion the lawyers dragged the Justice off the bench, and Davies, who was standing near by, announced to the litigants that he would take care of the papers in all the cases. Clerk Patrick Anthony and Michael Angermann, formerly interpreter of the court, gave similar testimony. The former testified that more than half a dozen times Davies, observing the Justice's condition, had him removed from the bench and placed on a sofa in his private office. A recess was taken at 3 P. M. to await the arrival of Mr. Reavey, of counsel for the defense, who it was expected would examine Justice Pinckney in his own behalf. Neither Mr. Reavey nor the Justice having put in an appearance up to 3:45 P. M. the Referee closed the case, and announced his intention of presenting the report in the case to the General Term on Friday morning. Should Justice Pinckney, in the mean time, signify his desire to testify, the case will be reopened for the purpose of placing his evidence on the record.

FAILURE OF A GLASS WORKS FIRM.

The failure of John B. Doblemann, of No. 35 Warren-street, proprietor of the Doblemann Flint Glass Works at No. 214 Plymouth-street, Brooklyn, is announced. The liabilities are estimated at $60,000, and the assets, which consist of real estate, machinery, stock, and receivables, are nominally valued at $100,000. He has been in the glass manufacturing business many years, but for a long time past has had no credit rating, on account of financial embarrassment. He was formerly President of the Dorflinger Glass Company and of the Doblemann Flint Glass Company, and when the latter failed a year ago he endeavored to retrieve its losses. He assumed the compromise at 50 cents on the dollar, and paid the first installment. The second becomes due next month, and, being unable to meet the notes, Mr. Doblemann yesterday made an assignment to John G. Walsh.

STILL RUINING THE HARBOR.

The Pilot Commissioners yesterday received a report from the pilot of the British bark Piscitagua, saying that at 3:30 P. M. on Jan. 12, while coming up the harbor, he saw three scows dumping garbage into the Bay at the Narrows. The Secretary was directed to notify the Police Commissioners of this violation of the law by their agents. Inspector Conway reported four sunken vessels removed from the harbor during the week, and that another—the canal-boat Morris, sunk in Buttermilk Channel—is now being raised.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

All the mail trains to this City are now running on schedule time.

Nathaniel D. Bush and Thomas Long were yesterday reappointed patrolmen by the Police Commissioners.

The dead body of a newly born infant was found yesterday in an ash-barrel at No. 123 West Forty-seventh-street and sent to the Morgue.

The officers of the New-York City Insurance Company state that their entire loss by the late Worth-street fire will not exceed the sum of $5,000.

An assignment for the benefit of creditors from John Wolf and Abraham Levy, composing the firm of Wolf & Levy, to Isidore Loewenthal, was filed yesterday in the County Clerk's office.

The fourth annual reunion of the William Herring Class Union will be held at the Coleman House this evening. The society is composed of gentlemen who were formerly the pupils of Assistant District Attorney Herring in one of the public schools.

The Lincoln Club, composed of colored Republicans of the Fifteenth Ward, fired an artillery salute yesterday afternoon at Washington-square in honor of the renomination of Senator Conkling. The salute consisted of one gun for each vote cast for Mr. Conkling in the caucus.

The funeral of ex-Sheriff Matthew T. Brennan will take place at St. Patrick's Cathedral, Mott-street, to-morrow morning, where a solemn requiem mass will be sung by Vicar-General Quinn. The interior of the edifice is to be draped in mourning, and a select choir will perform the musical services.

Margaret L. Reilly, widow of the fireman John Reilly, who was killed by the falling walls at the Broadway fire a week ago, applied to the Surrogate yesterday for letters of administration on her husband's estate. She has five children, and the letters are merely to enable her to draw the salary due her husband.

Sanitary Inspector Bryant reported to the Board of Health yesterday that there were large accumulations of stable manure on the wharves at the foot of West Thirty-seventh and West Thirty-eighth streets, but owing to the cold weather and the ice in the river the accumulations could not be removed at present.

The funeral of the late John Blair Scribner, senior member of the firm of Charles Scribner's Sons, will take place to-morrow at 2 o'clock P. M., from the Church of the Covenant, Park-avenue and Thirty-fifth-street. A meeting of the New-York publishers will be held to-day at Leavitt's sales-rooms, in Astor-place, to take action in regard to Mr. Scribner's funeral.

The Board of Directors of the Young Men's Christian Association, at their regular meeting on Monday evening, re-elected all the old officers for the present year, as follows: President, Elbert B. Monroe; Vice-President, William E. Dodge, Jr.; Corresponding Secretary, Robert R. McBurney; Recording Secretary, James A. Bennett; Treasurer, Jacob F. Wyckoff.

Dr. Day, Sanitary Superintendent, reported yesterday that for the week ending 18th inst. there were reported at the Sanitary Bureau 9 cases of typhoid fever, 204 cases of scarlet fever, 5 cases of cerebo-spinal meningitis, 6 cases of measles, and 52 cases of diphtheria. Yesterday 4 new cases of scarlet fever and 8 cases of diphtheria were reported, and 11 deaths from scarlet fever and 5 from diphtheria occurred.

Mr. E. R. Powers, the efficient Superintendant of the Cotton Exchange, having recently been appointed by Col. Cruger Commissary of Subsistance of the Twelfth Regiment, National Guard, the members of the Exchange clubbed together and purchased a complete sword and equipments, which they presented to him after the close of business yesterday afternoon. Mr. James A. Beall acted as spokesman, and Mr. Powers returned thanks in a neat speech. The usual festivities followed.

The fourth anniversary of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children will be held at Chickering Hall Tuesday evening next. The following gentlemen have accepted invitations to deliver addresses: Hon. John R. Brady, Rev. C. D. W. Bridgman, Joseph H. Choate, Rev. Edward McGlynn, Lewis L. Delafield, Rev. Henry S. Jacobs, Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, Rev. John P. Newman, Gen. Horace Porter, and Rev. Charles C. Tiffany. A select musical entertainment will also be given.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—For some purpose of their own, not yet fully understood in Washinington, the friends of acting Collector Merritt, who is here with a large troop of personal supporters, are endeavoring to create the impression that Gen. Arthur is also here, and that he will appear in person tomorrow before the Committee on Commerce to defend himself against the charges which Secretary Sherman has made touching his management of the New-York Custom-house. A story to this effect has been widely circulated during the day, and has been credited by some persons who are not easily deceived. It has further been stated that the Committee on Commerce has informed the Secretary of the Treasury that he will be required to appear before that committee to-morrow, and, either in person or by counsel, give proof of the charges which he has brought against Gen. Arthur and Mr. Cornell. There is no truth in either of these stories. Gen. Arthur is not now in Washington. He has not been here since the meeting of Congress, and it is not probable that he will be until the Senate has acted upon the nomination of acting Collector Merritt. The facts in the case are that the Committee on Commerce has received Gen. Arthur's reply to the Sherman charges; that the whole matter will be considered at the regular meeting of the committee to be held to-morrow morning, and that, in all probability, the Custom-house case will be finally disposed of at the next executive session of the Senate.

Gen. Arthur's answer is now in the possession of the Chairman of the committee, Mr. Conkling, and has been seen by one or two of the prominent Republican Senators. It is described as a document of great force, clear and straight-forward in statement, and full of evidence which will prove conclusively that the charges brought by Mr. Sherman "by order of the President" and to sustain the action of the Administration, are either absolutely false or entirely unworthy of consideration. It will appear from it that the Secretary must have had very little knowledge of the official figures, when he charged that the cost of collecting the revenue was greater under Gen. Arthur than under Merritt, and that, in fact, such was not the case. To prove what, to speak mildly, may be called the Secretary's error, the answer makes specific and detailed reference to the official records. As to the charge that the amount of revenue received at the Custom-house under one Administration was greater than under another, it is stated significantly, and with not a little sly humor, that the importers, merchants, and traders of the country, and not the Collectors of Customs, are responsible for the quantity of goods imported and the amount of duty received.

The answer completely demolishes one portion of the Secretary's labored accusation, by proving conclusively, and by reference to documents on file in Mr. Sherman's own office, that all the reforms recommended by the Jay Commission, and many others in addition, had long before been proposed by Collector Arthur; that, in fact, he had specified how such reforms might be carried out, and that the Treasury Department had given no attention to his advice, subsequently, however, taking all the credit for the second-hand recommendations made by the Jay Commission. In addition, it can be, and if necessary will be, shown that the whole Jay investigation, so called, was from the first an irregular and one-sided affair; that special agents of the Treasury, who had a personal spite against a number of the heads of departments under Collector Arthur, were detailed to "coach" witnesses who subsequently appeared before the committee, and at the same time that other witnesses, who desired to give their testimony in favor of Collector Arthur and his management, had no adequate opportunity of being heard. In addition to these points, the answer contains much that is important and interesting. It is described by those who have seen it as being a complete vindication of Collector Arthur, if such vindication be necessary, and there can be no doubt that it will leave the Secretary of the Treasury without a leg to stand on.

After it has been read to the committee to-morrow, there is an understanding that the injunction of secrecy will be removed and the charges and answer together given to the public. The feeling among prominent Senators to-night is warmly in favor of Gen. Arthur. His manly course in remaining away from Washington is favorably contrasted with that of his opponent, who comes here with a crowd of agents and underlings to lobby for his confirmation, and if the answer proves to be half as strong as is predicted, there is no doubt that Merritt and company will be rejected by a very decided majority.

SMALL BILLS VS. SILVER DOLLARS.

OPINIONS REGARDING SENATOR CHAFFEE'S RESOLUTION TO CANCEL THE ONE AND TWO DOLLAR GREENBACKS — THE ADVANTAGES OF SILVER AS SET FORTH BY FRIENDS OF THE MEASURE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—Senator Chaffee's resolution to cancel all the one and two dollar bills now in the Treasury, as well as those in circulation, in order to bring out the standard silver dollars as a popular circulating medium, has been the subject of considerable talk to-day among persons who give financial questions special attention. The Senator has already received assurances from different sources that the measure is one that ought to commend itself to Congress, on the double ground that it will increase the home demand for silver bullion for purposes of coinage, and stimulate the poorer people to save, in small sums, an immense aggregate of earnings. One popular objection urged against it is, that it would do away with the convenience of sending small amounts in letters—sums too small to require Post Office orders—and that this inconvenience would be more manifest in country districts, remote from money order offices. On the other hand, it is urged that when the people throughout the country become accustomed to the use of silver for change, in sums under $5, they will like it better than small denomination greenbacks, and that this is a sure and easy way to make them familiar with it. It is claimed that, inasmuch as the production of silver is an important industry in this country, and the chief source of wealth in certain States, it ought to be encouraged, and that this result can be naturally brought about by increasing the demand for silver as a circulating medium. Those who favor the measure say that, sooner or later, the great mass of the working classes, and through them the country at large, will reap substantial benefit from this sowing broadcast of the standard silver dollars. In support of this view of the case, attention is called to the wonderful recuperation of France. At the close of the Franco-Prussian war it was found that France was richer than the world had imagined because the poorer people had laid away, in small sums in coin, what proved to be an immense amount, and the country was enabled to reap the benefit of these popular savings when the day of national calamity came. It is estimated that from $200,000,000 to $300,000,000 might be circulated throughout the United States in this way, and that, individually and nationally, we would be so much the richer.

Inquiry at the Treasury shows that the amount of United States $1 and $2 notes outstanding on the 20th inst., was, of ones, $20,252,600, and of twos, $19,949,742, making a total of $40,202,342. The total amount of standard silver dollars at the same date was $23,130,500, of which there remained in the Treasury $17,312,597, leaving a balance of $5,817,903 in circulation. The resolution proposes to call in the notes and put out the silver, and while the ultimate effect of its passage would be to increase the volume of money in the country, it is claimed that this could only result in benefit to the people, because they would have in their own hands, in hard cash, against an evil day, most of the many outstanding millions, that would not be needed for circulation.

POTTER'S WHITEWASHING FARCE.

MR. ST. MARTIN TO BE EXAMINED, AT THE REQUEST OF SECRETARY SHERMAN—GEN. BUTLER CONSENTS TO SURRENDER THE CIPHER DISPATCHES—THE MYSTERIOUS MANNER IN WHICH THEY CAME INTO HIS POSSESSION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—The Potter committee met in secret session this morning, and the affidavit of St. Martin, as usual, gave them a great deal of trouble. There was to-day, as there has been, a disposition on the part of the Democratic members to force the Republicans to call St. Martin as their witness. The Republicans took an opposite view of the matter, however, and held that the Democrats had not assailed his affidavit in any particular. Judge Shellabarger relieved the embarrassment by presenting a letter in behalf of Secretary Sherman asking that St. Martin be recalled for further cross-examination on the testimony he had already given, and on the affidavits which were recently filed with the committee. The letter of Mr. Shellabarger criticised sharply the course of the committee in not recalling Mr. St. Martin upon their own motion. It is now probable that the witness will be called before the committee to-morrow and examined in relation to the matters above referred to. It will probably rest with the Democrats themselves as to whether he will be examined upon any other subject, but the impression is that, once upon the stand, he will be questioned at length upon his reflections upon Mr. Stenger and the conduct of his sub-committee while in New-Orleans.

The committee did not decide whether they would call any witnesses in regard to the cipher telegrams in advance of the passage of the appropriation for the expenses of the investigation by the Senate, nor was it decided whether or not they would send a sub-committee to New-York, but the drift of discussion indicated that the investigation would take place in Washington, although it is possible that it may be thought best to send a committee to New-York, to take the testimony of ex-Gov. Tilden.

The interest in the committee meeting centred in Gen. Butler's action and statements. He said that he had in his possession a large number of telegrams which had been duly numbered and placed in such shape as to be easily referred to, but he did not disclose the manner in which he had come in possession of them. He found them, he said, upon his private table, and had no knowledge as to how they came there. These dispatches, it was said, were a part of those printed in the Tribune; if so, he had nothing to do with their publication. They had been furnished to the Tribune before they came into his hands. During the Summer they were missed for several weeks, and subsequently they were found again, when he had them numbered and stamped and put in a place of safety. He stated that he doubted the right of the committee to demand these dispatches, and was opposed to the investigation, but in view of the action of the House, and his relations to the committee, he should hand the dispatches over, with the understanding that they should all be printed and given to the public. Mr. Potter and other members of the committee spoke in favor of calling a number of telegraph operators and others who had been engaged in deciphering certain dispatches which had recently been published. Mr. Hiscock opposed such action, however, on the ground that the dispatches were all in the hands of the committee, and that there was no need of going all about the world to find them. His view of the case was accepted, and then the committee adjourned. The preliminaries to the whitewashing investigation will be continued to-morrow.

The number of cipher telegrams in possession of Gen. Butler, which he will deliver to the Potter committee to-morrow, is 641.

DEMOCRATIC FAMILY JARS.

A NORTHERN DEMOCRAT DENOUNCES SOUTHERN WAR CLAIMS AND THOSE WHO URGE THEM—A REMARKABLE SCENE IN THE HOUSE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—A truly remarkable scene, which well illustrates the tendency to disorganization which has recently been so apparent in the Democratic Party, occurred in the House this morning. The debate was a continuation of the one begun yesterday in regard to the bill which came from the Committee on War Claims. Upon its face this measure simply grants to minor heirs of the original claimants, the right to press in the Court of Claims their demand for claims for damages for property destroyed during the war. In reality, however, it has a much deeper significance, and, as Gen. Bragg, of Wisconsin, aptly put it, was a new way which had been discovered to press Southern war claims. This bill was warmly opposed by Mr. Potter, of New-York, yesterday, and to-day, when it came up as unfinished business, Gen. Bragg, who ranks as one of the leaders of the Northern Democracy, also made a strong, and, at times, an exceedingly bitter speech against it. He was loud in his denunciations of every species of claims which came from the South, denounced those who pressed them as enemies to their country, and declared, with a vehemence which startled many of his party friends into loud shouts of disapproval, that if the solid South could only be Democratic by the payment of fees; if the Southern States could only be true to the Democratic Party because of money received from the national Treasury, it would be better for the party and for the country that the solid South went over to the other side. These remarks, and others of a like nature, created no little confusion, and it was some time before Mr. Ellis, of Louisiana, could obtain the floor to reply to them. When he did so, however, he made a "blood-and-thunder" speech of the typical White League order, and, referring to a portion of Gen. Bragg's remarks, said that no man in the South had been "loyal" during the war who had not fought in the Confederate Army, and further, that the war itself had been the result of teachings inculcated, not by the leaders of the South, but by the Democracy of the North. Gen. Hooker, of Mississippi; Gen. Chalmers, of Fort Pillow massacre memory, and others of the same type, attempted also to reply, but the morning hour being at an end, they were prevented from doing so, and the bill went over as unfinished business. During the evening the scene enacted this morning has been the subject of very general comment, and there is every likelihood that the bitter feeling between representative Democrats of the North and South, which the discussion has already engendered, will be increased and intensified as the debate goes on.

OBLIGED TO PAY THEIR TAXES.

BOSTON, Jan. 22.—The Supreme Court has confirmed the decisions of the lower courts in favor of the City of Boston against William F. Weld and John E. Wright, for taxes assessed against them and paid under protest, they claiming to be residents of Nahant. This decision will probably affect a large number of similar cases.

NEW HOMES FOR FREEDMEN

SENATOR WINDOM'S EMIGRATION PROJECT.

VIEWS OF A DELEGATION OF COLORED MEN REPRESENTING SIX STATES—REST AND FREEDOM FROM POLITICAL TURMOIL DESIRED—DISCONTENT AND UNHAPPINESS IN THE SOUTH—EMIGRATION TO THE WESTERN TERRITORIES PROPOSED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—At the request of Senator Windom, a number of prominent colored men, representing six of the Southern States, to-day held a long consultation with him regarding his resolution, which proposes a migration of the freedmen from the South to the West. Prof. Greener, of the Law Department of Howard University, was selected to speak for the delegation. He alluded to the wide-spread discontent at present existing among the colored people at the South, resulting, naturally, from their changed political condition. Deprived of rights guaranteed by the Constitution, there was no alternative except migration to some place where, in a measure, they might enjoy that freedom which a great party had pledged itself to maintain for them. Many had gone to Africa, he said, and others were still looking to that land as a refuge. He said the colored people asked no gratuity, no more guardianship, but only judicious and constitutional assistance in reaching the Territories best adapted to their methods of living. One thing was certain, the present anomalous condition of the colored people of the South could not long continue. Men accustomed to liberty and the enjoyment of their rights would not always submit to the outrages which were systematically perpetrated upon them with impunity. It was idle, unstatesmanlike, and contrary to the American theory of suffrage, to talk of taking away the right of voting from the colored man. No such dangerous principle could be tolerated. Better save the credit of Northern foresight and philanthropy by helping the colored people to emigrate to places where laws are equally and fairly administered, and where prejudice engendered by slavery and Confederate service are unknown. There were leading colored men now at the South who had proved their capacity, men who had filled creditably high offices. such men might be appointed to official positions in some of the Territories, and the people thus encouraged would naturally follow their leaders. He knew the objection likely to be urged against any plan to help the colored people in a movement of this kind. Paternal government, no subsidies, no special legislation, were the specious cries when anything was suggested which could really benefit the colored people connected with politics. The black man was tired of being a mere political puffet. If the advice of leading colored men had been listened to 10 years ago, many of the mistakes of reconstruction might have been prevented, and the black man would not have been left, as now, naked and helpless in the hands of his enemies.

In conclusion, Mr. Greener showed that several cities were already in process of formation in several Southern States and in the District of Columbia and in Virginia. The colored people needed information as to the character of the soil, the temperature, and prospects held out to them, and he thought the Government had much right to be at pains to furnish this data to the colored people as to send documents and agents abroad to disseminate knowledge of the resources of our country to foreigners. In some States and Territories the colored people would be just such a population as was desired. He ridiculed the idea that the black man needed political supremacy. In States where the negro had enjoyed the widest political scope he had elevated native whites and Democrats often to the highest judicial and political offices. The colored man did not seek the West or Southwest now for political power. He looked forward to a period of rest from political turmoil, where he might enjoy that freedom of political and civil privileges which very evidently and conclusively the present Administration was utterly powerless, however much it may be inclined, to secure for him at the South.

Congressmen Rainey, Cain, and Smalls spoke briefly to the same effect, the latter drawing particular attention to the fact that on one of the islands off the coast of South Carolina, where all the inhabitants were negroes, they prospered and lived at peace. He and all the other speakers were warmly in favor of setting apart a territory for colored men, to be governed by them.

CONGRESSIONAL TOPICS.

AN ADVERSE REPORT PROBABLE ON THE INTER-STATE COMMERCE BILL—TARIFF LEGISLATION ABANDONED FOR THIS SESSION—HOW SENATOR EDMUNDS WAS DEFEATED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—The Sub-committee of the Senate Committee on Commerce, having in charge the Inter-State Commerce bill, will to-morrow evening begin its consideration. Persons interested in it have been informed of the action of the sub-committee, and will be present to make arguments in behalf of their special interests. The committee will make an effort to report the bill at an early day, and the indications are that this report will be an adverse one.

It is now generally admitted in well-informed circles here that all tariff legislation has been abandoned for this session. One of the largest importers of New-York, who is now in Washington, was to-day informed by a member of the Committee on Ways and Means that no tariff act could by any chance go through. The member also declared that in his opinion the Sugar bill was dead. In this belief he is joined by a number of the best informed members of the house.

In the Senate this afternoon, at the close of the discussion on the Navy bill, Senator Edmunds tried to call up his resolutions in regard to the constitutional amendments. Because of the inexcusable absence of Republican Senators, however, he was unable to do so. His motion was defeated by a vote of 19 to 24.

Mr. Waite, representing the New-York Blind Asylum, together with representatives from the blind asylums of Maryland and Kentucky, were before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor to-day, and made strong arguments in favor of the House bill, which sets aside $250,000 in 4 per cent. bonds, the interest upon which sum is to be annually paid out in support of the Kentucky Printing House for the Blind. It was urged that this was the only establishment of the kind in the country, and that by its work the condition of the blind was greatly improved. The facts and figures presently will be sent to the Senate by the committee, together with a favorable report on the bill.

Senator Ben Hill has just completed the minority report in the Corbin-Butler contested election case from South Carolina, and it will be submitted to the Senate as soon as Mr. Logan Cane, who has charge of the majority report, returns from South Carolina, where he now is as a member of the Teller Investigating Committee. The minority report is, of course, in favor of Butler, and deserves mention only because of the peculiar position it assumes in relation to the case. It dismisses entirely the consideration of the points raised by the contestant, and declares that neither the Senate nor the committee has a right to make inquiry as to any matters prior to Butler's admission to the Senate; in other words, that the case is closed, and that the Senate, having all the facts before it prior to the admission of Butler, settled them by giving him the seat, and are now estopped from considering and acting upon any matters which are alleged to have happened prior to Butler's admission to the Senate. This is new argument and new law, and not likely to be seriously considered.

As soon as Senator Cameron returns, both reports will be submitted and speedy action urged by both parties.

The election of Cameron, Logan, Conkling, and Carpenter to the United States Senate is commented upon here as another blow at that policy of conciliation which helped to make the South solid.

MR. BLAINE'S NAVY AMENDMENTS.

A DEBATE IN WHICH NAVY REORGANIZATION AND FREE SHIPS ARE FAVORED AND OPPOSED—THE NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL FINALLY PASSED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—The Navy Appropriation bill was under consideration in the Senate to-day, when Senator Blaine took occasion to pay his respects to the bill introduced by Mr. Beck, of Kentucky, in relation to free ships. Mr. Beck replied to Mr. Blaine sharply and at some length, and at times the tilt between them was exceedingly interesting. Mr. Blaine proposed to reduce the expenses of the Navy by reducing the number of its officers, and with the amount saved by such reduction to subsidize American lines of steam-ships to revive our commerce. He offered an amendment to the bill, which proposed that there should be no appointments after 1883 of Midshipmen after graduation, unless vacancies existed or should occur, and that the merit of graduation should be considered in determining appointments. He also offered an amendment providing for a Board of Naval Officers, to consider what reduction should be made in the number of officers of the Navy, and to report a plan of reorganization. He said that we now had one officer for every three men in the Navy, and he cited the Naval reports of Great Britain and France to show that this was out of all proportion to the needs of the service. While the discussion was mainly for the purpose of amending the Naval Appropriation bill, it took a wide range, and the whole subject of granting American registers to foreign-built ships was discussed. The bill was finally passed without the amendments.

LORD LORNE AT NIAGARA.

HIS VIEWS UPON THE SUBJECT OF AN INTERNATIONAL PARK AND EXORBITANT CHARGES.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Jan. 22.—The Vice-regal party, which arrived at Niagara Falls on Tuesday, spent a pleasant day yesterday in seeing the sights. The members are traveling incognito as far as possible, and there is little opportunity for the display of Canadian loyalty. The Marquis of Lorne was asked in regard to the proposed International Park, on both sides of the river, as suggested by Lord Dufferin to Gov. Robinson, and strongly recommended by the latter to the New-York State Legislature. "I am familiar with Dufferin's ideas," said the Governor-General. "I have read with pleasure Gov. Robinson's Message relative to the matter. I heartily concur in the idea, and it should be carried out."

"Do you consider it practicable?" asked the correspondent.

"O, yes; but, of course, a large outlay of money would be necessary. Money, you know, can do any great work in this country."

"Are you in favor of making the project a subject of consultation by the two countries?"

"Really, Sir, I have not given the matter enough attention to speak definitely on that point."

The Marquis referred to the alleged exorbitant charges made by hackmen and people who had bought up available ground for seeing the cataract. "I thought," he said "the matter should be looked into. The subject might be brought before the Dominion Parliament."

BURNING GOVERNMENT HAY.

HOW THE RANCHMEN ENDEAVORED TO FORCE THEIR STOCK UPON UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES.

OMAHA, Neb., Jan. 22.—Information was received here to-day of a conspiracy to defraud the Government of about $100,000. The United States authorities advertised last Fall for 4,000 tons of hay, delivered at Fort Buford. The ranchmen near there hauled double that amount to the fort and tried to force it upon the Government authorities, who refused peremptorily to be swindled. The principal ranchmen leagued themselves together to compel the purchase, and planned to burn the entire supply, thinking this would bring the Government to terms. They hired several men to do the work. Empty cans were cut open and reshaped to suit their purpose, and were partly filled with inflammable materials. A lighted candle was arranged in the can so that the expected conflagration should take place simultaneously in every stack. Between 12 and 1 o'clock at night, as agreed upon, the incendiaries set their fire and made their escape. From some cause, the candles did not burn as planned. By strenuous efforts part of the property was saved, but a very large quantity was destroyed. The General commanding the department telegraphed orders to buy no hay of ranchmen, if they had to freight all they used 100 miles. Detectives were employed to investigate the matter, and several of the men implicated were arrested. R. D. Gntgesell, J. Jones, and "Kid" Nelson have been bound over by the United States Commissioner, and sent to Virginia City, Nev., under $10,000 bonds each. It is thought that one will give the names of the principal conspirators, and that ultimately the whole band will be caught and punished.

BILLINGS PROBABLY TO BE TRIED AGAIN.

TROY, N. Y., Jan. 22.—Deputy Sheriff Wolf, of Saratoga County, visited the residence of Jesse Billings, Jr., at Northumberland, on Monday afternoon, to serve notice of motion for a change of venue, preliminary to another trial on the charge of murder. Billings was at home, in the same room and very close to the spot where his wife sat when she was killed. Billings was composed, and remarked that he had expected the notice. It is returnable on Feb. 10, and will be argued before the Court of Over and Terminer at Ballston. It is considered more than likely that the motion will prevail, and that Jesse Billings will again be placed on trial on a charge of killing his wife. The prosecution insists that it has new and strong points. The defense, it is said, has been busily engaged in strengthening its side. If the motion for a change is granted the prosecution will offer the defense the choice of Albany, Rensselaer, or Washington Counties for a new trial. The expense will fall upon Saratoga County. Some tax-payers vigorously oppose another trial, on the ground that the county cannot afford it. Three banks have suspended, two County Treasurers have defaulted, and several expensive trials have occurred recently, and consequently taxes are higher and money scarcer. There remonstrances, which, it is said, will be circulated, as petitions, for signatures, will not, however, have much effect.

TRYING PHILLIPSBURG TOWN OFFICERS.

BELVIDERE, N. J., Jan. 22.—Francis McDermott, ex-Councilman of the Town of Phillipsburg, was convicted to-day of defrauding the town of $185 50. The next case was against Thomas L. Titus, ex-Mayor; Charles Sitgreaves, ex-President of the Council, and Francis McDermott, Councilman of Phillipsburg, charged with the larceny of $867 64 in town orders. A verdict of not guilty was returned. The convicted officers will be sentenced on Saturday.

ELECTION FRAUDS IN FLORIDA.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Jan. 22.—The jury in the case of the Brevard County Canvassing Board, for making false returns in the late Congressional election, brought in a verdict of guilty, with a recommendation to mercy in the cases of the Sheriff and the Justice of the Peace. The County Canvassing Board and two inspectors of the late election from Alachua County were arrested to-day on a charge of violation of the Election laws.

MURDER OF A HERMIT.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 22.—Jason Robbins, 60 years of age, who had led the life of a hermit for many years near Farwell, Mich., was found dead last evening with a bullet-hole through his head. It is believed that he was killed for a large sum of money which, it was supposed, he possessed. He was a man of culture, and is said to have taken refuge in the woods on account of disappointed love.

CHOOSING THEIR SENATORS.

ROSCOE CONKLING'S THIRD TERM.

THE JOINT SESSION OF THE SENATE AND ASSEMBLY — LIEUT.-GOV. DORSHEIMER FORMALLY ANNOUNCES THE ELECTION.

ALBANY, Jan. 22.—At 12 o'clock to-day, according to the law, Roscoe Conkling was formally elected to be his own successor as the representative of the State of New-York in the United States Senate, for six years from March 4, 1879. In expectation of the event, the galleries of the Assembly Chamber, in which the election was held, were filled with spectators. Just before 12 o'clock, Gen. Husted and Mr. Holahan, and Gen. Sharpe and Mr. Brooks were sent to the Senate to give notice to that body that the Assembly was ready to proceed to the election of a United States Senator and a Regent of the University. From the Senate came Senators Harris and St. John, Pomeroy and Hughes, to announce that the Senate was ready to compare nominations with the Assembly in joint convention. At noon the doors of the Assembly opened to let in the Senate, the Assembly rising as the Senators appeared. At the head marched the Lieutenant-Governor, with the Clerk, and after followed the members of the upper house. Mr. Dorsheimer took a seat beside Speaker Alvord, and the Senators sat in a double row of chairs, arranged in a semi-circle within the lowest line of members' desks.

With the olive-wood gavel of Speaker Alvord, decorated with red, white, and blue ribbons, the Lieutenant-Governor called the joint convention to order, and stated the purpose for which it had met. Then Clerk Vrooman read the proceedings in the Senate, reporting the number of votes cast for Roscoe Conkling and William Dorsheimer. Clerk Johnson, of the Assembly, read the proceedings in the lower house touching the matter. The vote having been announced, Lieut.-Gov. Dorsheimer declared that Roscoe Conkling was elected. A comparison of the vote for Regents showed that Charles E. Smith, of the Albany Evening Journal, had received a majority of the votes cast in each branch of the Legislature, and he was also declared elected.

ILLINOIS—JOHN A. LOGAN.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 22.—In joint session to-day, Logan was declared elected Senator. He returned thanks and in his speech alluded to the currency question as follows: "The resumption of specie payments is an accomplished fact. The Republicans will stand by the proposition that our paper currency shall be converted into coin at the option of the holder now and in the future." On the Southern question he said: "The Government is bound to give such protection as it can to its citizens on land and sea, at home and abroad, and where political rights are guaranteed to citizens under one Constitution, there should be no distinction made between those guaranteed to white or black, to rich or poor, in Illinois or South Carolina, and when the authorities of a State are powerless, or when they fail or refuse to protect persons or communities against armed mobs while attempting to exercise such political rights as have been guaranteed them, it is the duty of the Government to use such power as it possesses to protect citizens in the exercise of such rights, by efforts which shall be used to uphold and protect citizens in their guaranteed rights wherever they may be, and to maintain the laws of the United States in all parts of our country." The speech was applauded and cheered by the Republicans.

WISCONSIN—MATT H. CARPENTER.

MADISON, Wis., Jan. 22.—Both houses of the Legislature met in joint convention at noon to-day, Lieut.-Gov. Bingham presiding. There was a very large attendance of people from all parts of the State, the galleries, floor of the House, and lobbies being crowded. After the usual preliminaries the official ballot for United States Senator was taken, with the following result: Carpenter, 84; Ryan, 28; Bouck, 13. M. H. Carpenter was then declared elected, and he, being waited upon by a committee, soon appeared before the convention and made a short speech. He thanked the convention for the honor conferred upon him, promising close and hard work in the Republican ranks, congratulating the country on the resumption of specie payments, and promising to resign his trust whenever the Legislature declared him to have violated it. E. W. Keyes, on being called upon, made a few remarks, and cordially approved the work of the convention. Chief-Justice Ryan replied to repeated calls in a few remarks of a humorous character.

PENNSYLVANIA—J. D. CAMERON.

HARRISBURG, Penn., Jan. 22.—Both branches of the Legislature met in joint convention in the Hall of the House to-day. The vote of yesterday for United States Senator was then read, after which Lieut.-Gov. Stone declared James Donald Cameron elected United States Senator, to represent Pennsylvania in the Senate of the United States for six years from the 4th of March next. The convention then adjourned.

NO ELECTION IN ARKANSAS.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 22.—Three ballots were taken to-day for United States Senator. The following is the last ballot: Walker, 44; Johnson, 31; Bell, 24; Baxter, 14; scattering, 7. Necessary to a choice, 61.

CONNECTICUT—O. H. PLATT.

HARTFORD, Jan. 22.—Both houses of the General Assembly met in convention at noon to-day and ratified the election of Orville H. Platt as United States Senator.

STILL SEEKING A CANDIDATE.

NEW-ORLEANS, La., Jan. 22.—At the caucus of the Democratic members of the Legislature this evening, to nominate a United States Senator, no result was reached.

RUFFIANS SUCCESSFULLY RESISTED.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 22.—The Young People's Literary Society of Deerfield, near Lebanon, Ohio, has been troubled by a gang of ruffians which has gathered near the society's meeting place recently. Last Saturday the society stationed a guard at the door, and when the ruffians attempted to force an entrance resistance was offered by the guard. One of the assailants, named Fairchild, was cut seven times on the head and shoulders. He was carried away on a shutter, and it is thought that he is mortally wounded. The remainder of the gang fled. There were no arrests.

FIVE PERSONS BURNED TO DEATH.

SCRANTON, Penn., Jan. 22.—Mrs. Davis and her child, 1 year old, were burned to death Monday night at Hyde Park. The fire was caused by the explosion of a kerosene lamp.

ST. JOHN, New-Brunswick, Jan. 22.—A dispatch from St. Stephens says: "William O'Brien and two sons were burned to death in their camp, at Millberry Brook, on Friday last. The three dead bodies were found in the ashes."

MINERS DEMANDING MORE MONEY.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Jan. 22.—A convention of coal miners from the Monongahela River Mines, held at Elizabeth yesterday, resulted in a unanimous vote for 3 cents a bushel, and declaring they would go on a strike unless the advance was agreed to by the operators. The miners have been getting 2¾ cents a bushel. It is thought that the mine-owners will not agree to the advance, and that a strike will follow.

ARMY AND NAVY MATTERS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—The order of June 6, 1878, directing First Lieut. F. V. Greene, of the Corps of Engineers, to report in person to the Chief of Engineers, is amended so as to direct him first to complete the duties upon which he is now engaged. Lieut. Greene was the officer detailed by this Government to accompany the Russian Army in its invasion of Turkey, and the work upon which he is now engaged is the preparation of a full report upon the Russo-Turkish campaigns in Bulgaria and Roumelia.

Lieut. F. P. Gilmore is ordered to duty at the Hydrographic Office. Master H. F. McIntosh is detached from the Hydrographic Office and granted six months' leave.

THE OHIO GOVERNORSHIP.

AN ATTEMPT EXPECTED TO FOIST FOSTER UPON THE REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Jan. 22.—While so much attention has been directed to the Democratic Party and the wrangle going on between the adherents of Gov. Bishop and those who are desirous of his defeat, attention has been diverted from the Republicans, and little has been said during the past two weeks in regard to their probable candidate. Since it became known that the anti-Hayes men of the Republican Party would not support Hon. Charles Foster for Governor, the subject has been dropped, apparently, or ceased to agitate the surface, but the plan of forcing him on the convention has by no means been abandoned. It is a well-known fact that certain members of the Republican State Executive Committee committed themselves to Foster the day following the October election. It is now known that since that time the committee, either directly or indirectly, has been endeavoring to mold the public mind so as to make it conform to the views of the committee. The agitation of the subject some time ago led Gen. Beatty to give his views on the probability of Mr. Foster becoming a candidate. The General's opinions were published in THE TIMES.

To show that the effort in behalf of Foster has not been abandoned, it is only necessary to say that the rooms of the Republican Committee have been open during the Winter, and that one of the members has been making a tour over the State in the interest of Foster; that the plan of the committee is to put him in nomination as Governor if possible. Failing in this, he is to take second place on the ticket, with Gen. Garfield at the head. Garfield is to be elected to the Senate, should the Republicans carry the Legislature, thus placing Foster at the head of the State Government. Those who are managing the affair believe that with Garfield and Foster on the ticket next Fall, the full Republican vote would be drawn out, and that the bolters of 1877 would support the nominees; but in this they would doubtless be mistaken. There is no doubt that the same men who sent Judge West to private life then would bolt again, should Mr. Foster be foisted on the convention. This class of Republicans will not be reconciled to Foster, and any effort made in that direction will be without avail, and it would be suicidal for the Republican convention to nominate a man for the Governorship who cannot poll the full Republican vote of the Western Reserve. But with a candidate of the ability of Taft, Axtell, F. Perry, or Garfield, without Foster, they could easily carry the Republican Party through by 20,000 majority.

There is no longer a doubt that the Democrats are making bids for the National vote, and already the name of Stephen Johnston, late candidate for Governor on the National ticket, has been put forward, the ticket to be Bishop for Governor, and Johnston for Lieutenant-Governor. The latter gentleman claims that he still adheres to the National cause, but there are indications that he would succumb were the loaves and fishes placed within his grasp.

CRITICISING RENO'S CONDUCT.

TESTIMONY OF A MEMBER OF MAJOR RENO'S COMMAND—HE THINKS THERE WERE NO INDICATIONS OF COWARDICE.

CHICAGO, Jan. 22.—Some of the most interesting testimony in the Reno inquiry was given today by Lieut. C. A. Varnum, of the Seventh Cavalry. In his opinion, Custer must have been at the point where he engaged the Indians when Benteen joined Reno on the hill; it was not until this time that firing was heard down the stream in Custer's direction. He was impressed that Custer must have been having "a pretty warm time" of it. The Recorder of the court pressed the witness closely as to Major Reno's deportment, asking whether he appeared to be commanding his men as though in the presence of great danger. The witness replied that Major Reno certainly was commanding his men, but regarding his conduct the witness did not know as there was anything in it that especially attracted his attention so that he should remember it now. He was asked then if there was any uneasiness in the command in regard to where Custer was. The witness replied that there was of course considerable wonder as to where he was, and whether he had got into a predicament, too. In regard to his own impressions, the witness said that it never entered his mind that Custer had been slaughtered. His impression was, when the Indians began to come up stream, that they were driving Custer off, they were coming back to attack Reno's command. If Reno had gone forward to assist Custer, his command would have had to go through the village, and this the witness did not believe either command could have done. There was a large force, probably several hundred Indians, within 500 yards of Reno's command when it retreated from the timber.

"Now state to the court what was the conduct of Major Reno at the battle of the Little Big Horn; was it such as to inspire his command with courage or the reverse?" The witness intimated that he did not care to answer this question. He was informed that he would have to answer the que tion, and no objection being made by either Reno or the court, the witness said that so far as his observation went there was nothing in Reno's conduct that day that indicated cowardice. When asked what was the feeling in Reno's command on reaching the hill after the retreat, the witness replied that he could only speak for himself; he felt as though he had been "pretty badly licked."

BUSINESS EMBARRASSMENTS.

NEWBURG, N. Y., Jan. 22.—Stephen McKinstry, a tanner, of this city, has made an assignment to Floyd S. McKinstry, of Gardiner, Ulster County. Assets, $38,500; liabilities, $44,601.

OGDENSBURG, N. Y., Jan. 22.—The following notice, signed by J. D. Judson, is posted on the doors of the Judson Bank this morning: "Owing to unusual financial pressure and the large depreciation in real estate and securities, I am compelled to close the Judson Bank. With moderation on the part of my creditors I confidently expect to pay all my liabilities in full."

SENATOR-ELECT PLATT'S FRIENDS.

MERIDEN, Conn., Jan. 22.—One thousand of Hon. O. H. Platt's townsmen and a number of members of the Legislature from various parts of the State were present at a reception tendered the newly elected Senator this evening. There was music by a band, and for an hour the Senator's friends, irrespective of party, shook hands with and congratulated him. The reception was held in the large armory. Mr. Platt, in response to calls, made a speech, thanking his friends for the honor conferred upon him, but without reference to politics. A banquet followed.

DIED IN HER HUNDREDTH YEAR.

ERIE, Penn., Jan. 22.—Mrs. Capt. Daniel Dobbins died here to-day in her hundredth year. She was living in Erie when Commodore Perry fitted out his fleet that defeated the British at Put-in-Bay in 1812. Mrs. Dobbins, whose husband helped to equip the fleet, was well acquainted with the Commodore and his officers. Lafayette was a guest at her house when he visited Erie in 1824. Her mental vigor was remarkable for one of her age, and she retained vivid recollections of the past up to within a short time previous to her death.

AN INCENDIARY CONVICTED.

RONDOUT, N. Y., Jan. 22.—Charles Van Gassbeck, the Kingston incendiary, who was pardoned from State Prison while serving a term for arson, was again found guilty of the same offense to-day. He is 24 years old, and of respectable parents. He has not yet been sentenced, but it is supposed that he will get 10 years.

THE ICE-GORGE AT PARKERSBURG.

WHEELING, West Va., Jan. 22.—The river has backed up to within 18 feet of the gorge at Parkersburg. The ice is thin and scattering. The tow-boat Annie Kelly sank last night, but will be raised as soon as the river falls.

STATE INSURANCE METHODS

NOT TOO MUCH CARE FOR CORPORATE FEELINGS.

ANIMATED DEBATE IN THE ASSEMBLY UPON GEN SHARPE'S DESIRE TO RECONSIDER THE DISPOSITION OF MR. FISH'S RESOLUTION—A VOTE OF 83 TO 27 AGAINST SENDING IT TO THE INSURANCE COMMITTEE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 22.—Gen. George H. Sharpe provoked a very animated debate in the Assembly to-day, which resulted in a vote that is regarded by members with whom opportunity has been had to converse on the subject, as showing that the Assembly is not disposed to be very tender or fateful of the feelings of insurance corporations. Gen. Sharpe rose to move that the resolution offered yesterday by Mr. Fish, and calling for information concerning the Knickerbocker Life Insurance Company, be reconsidered. He said that he was absent when it was offered and passed, and that he now desired that it should be referred to the Insurance Committee.

Mr. Fish interrupted to make an explanation, and he very bluntly declared, for the benefit of the House, that he was unwilling to allow the reconsideration asked for. He said he believed that the somper named in his resolution was entirely rotten, from top to bottom. He could not see why there should be any objection to obtaining the information asked for. There were many peculiar things about the company, and he knew that the relations of the Superintendent of Insurance to that company were of a peculiar nature. If gentlemen in the Assembly would look back a year or two they would find that inquiries of a similar character to those now made had been adopted by the Assembly, but that the company had made no answer to them. Mr. Fish said that he did not care to have it go to the Insurance Committee, and he urged the gentleman from Ulster not to tie the hands of the House by insisting that it should take that course. Mr. Sharpe, in reply to Mr. Fish's offer to state reasons, said that he did not want them stated here, as the proper place to make such statements was in the committee-room, where they would be carefully examined. He objected to have any member throw suspicion upon a company that had made a deposit with the State. Mr. Fish retorted that if the fight on insurance matters was to begin it had better come on at once. He understood, morever, that the President of the company lived in Kings, and that much of the company's business was done in Kings County. The gentlemen from Kings had no objection to the resolution. Mr. Ogden, of Kings, supplemented Mr. Fish's remarks by declaring that he considered it the proper thing for the popular branch of the Legislature to exercise its power in holding on to the resolution, and he expressed his surprise that the member from Ulster should ask to have it sent to the committee.

Mr. Sloan followed. He, too, was averse to the proposition made by Gen. Sharpe. The resolution was one of pure inquiry, nothing more or less, and it was the proper prerogative of the House to consider it. There was nothing in the resolution that instituted anything wrong about the company, or in any way impugning its good name. For the reason that it merely called for information, he was constrained to vote against reconsideration of the vote by which it was passed. Mr. Strahan wanted to know why the resolution was directed specially against the Knickerbocker Company. Mr. Fish replied that it was because that was the company he was going in to tempt of the House. Mr. Hepburn objected to sending the resolution to the committee because an extended experience in the Assembly told him that the result of sending it to the committee would be to bury it. The gentleman from New-York demanded specific reasons for the inquiry; the gentleman from Ulster was solicitous that no reasons should be given, yet both opposed it. He (Mr. Hepburn) was too tender about this question of life insurance," said he, and he objected to any reconsideration prompted by the fear that somebody was going to be hurt.

This ended the discussion. The roll was called, as Mr. Fish had demanded the yeas and nays, and the motion to reconsider was defeated—yeas 28, nays 83, as follows, (Republicans in roman, Democrats in italics, Greenbackers in SMALL CAPITALS:)

MR. SKINNER'S INSURANCE BILL.

THE INSURANCE DEPARTMENT TO BE ABOLISHED—OUTLINES OF THE ACT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 22.—Mr. Charles R. Skinner, of Jefferson, will introduce a bill in the Assembly to-morrow to abolish the Insurance Department. It does away with the offices of Superintendent and Deputy Superintendent, and transfers all powers, duties, and obligations heretofore conferred upon the Superintendent of the Insurance Department to the Controller. All books, papers, documents, and securities in the possession of the Superintendent of the Insurance Department, or under the control of that officer, or of his subordinates, shall, on Jan. 1, 1880, be transferred to the Controller, and thenceforth remain in his custody. The Attorney-General is directed to report to the Legislature within 60 days after the passage of this act what abridgement or revision of the insurance laws may safely be made, so that supervision of insurance companies may be simplified. The Controller is authorized to appoint, by and with the consent of the Attorney-General, an Attorney and Examiner of Titles, who shall be an attorney-at-law, receive a salary of $4,000 a year and his actual expenses, not exceeding $4 a day, while absent from the city of Albany, in addition to his duties. A General Appraiser of the department is provided for, who is to be paid $3,000 a year and actual expenses, not exceeding $4 a day, while away from the office on duty. The Attorney and Examiner of Titles and the General Appraiser are to perform all the duties now performed by the attorneys and appraisers appointed by the Superintendent of the Insurance Department, and the Controller is prohibited from employing, and the insurance companies from paying, any other person or persons for any examination of titles, appraisal of property, or counsel-fees, and the insurance companies shall not be subjected to any expense whatever for examination or appraisals of property, or to the payment of any money whatever to any attorney employed by the Controller, except in pursuance of the advice of the Attorney of Titles or the General Appraiser, who are to be paid as other employes in the department are paid.

JOHN F. SMYTH ENJOINED.

AN INJUNCTION AGAINST THE INSURANCE SUPERINTENDENT—JUDGE GILBERT'S DECISION.

In the case against Insurance Superintendent Smyth to restrain him from proceeding under an order made by Justice Westbrook, at Kingston, Ulster County, on Dec. 14, last, permitting him to pay out the sum of $130,000, amount of a trust fund deposited with his predecessor by the defunct National Life Insurance Company, Judge Gilbert, in Supreme Court, Kings County, has granted the motion for a permanent injunction to restrain the Superintendent from distributing the money in question pending certain suits now at issue. The following is Judge Gilbert's decision:

Anna Reese against William Smythe, Assistant Superintendent, &c.—Gilbert, J.—No warrant exists that I can discover for the proceeding before Justice Westbrook. The securities in controversy were deposited by the National Life Insurance Company preliminarily to the commencement of business in 1863, pursuant to the statute of 1853, as amended in 1859 and 1862. (4th Edm. Stat., 225, 252.) The provisions of the act of 1867, as amended in 1869, (7 Edm. Stat., 509,) authorizing special deposits as security for registered policies and annuity bonds, therefore do not apply to the case. (The People ex rel. Stoat against Chapman, Capt. 5 Hun, 222.) The seventeenth section of the act of 1853, as amended, authorizes the Attorney-General, and makes it his duty, to institute a summary proceeding in this court for the winding up of companies whose assets are insufficient to reinsure its outstanding risks, and in such a proceeding the court may decree a dissolution of the corporation and a distribution of its effects, including the securities deposited in this court by the Superintendent of Insurance. But the Attorney-General did not institute such a proceeding against this company. It was dissolved in 1875 by a judgment rendered in an action brought against the company by a stockholder and policy-holder therein. I think that it is at least very doubtful whether the Superintendent of insurance is authorized to institute any proceeding for the distribution of the effects in controversy for the reason that he is required by statute to hold such effects as security for policy-holders, and no provision has been made by the Legislature for rendering such security available to the policy-holders, except that contained in the seventeenth section of the act of 1853. The State is the real depos.tory. The Superintendent of Insurance is only an agent of the State. The trust creed by the deposit is not a conventional one, nor has the Superintendent of Insurance been vested with any power or control over the securities, except such as the statute affords. Considering the deposits as having created a trust, it is merely a nominal and passive one. The State is the trustee, and the policy-holders are the cestui que trust. The remedy to enforce the trust and to prevent any breach thereof belongs to the courts. No doubt the trustee may bring an action in a proper case to wind up the trust. Such action, however, must be prosecuted by the Attorney-General (Edm. Stat., 180, sec. 1,) and the policy holders, if within the jurisdiction of the court, and necessary parties thereto, (Lewin on Trusts, 368; Hill de., 543.) To determine the rights of the persons who alone are interested in the distribution of the effects held by the Superintendent without such persons being before the court, either personally or by representation, seems to me to be contrary to the first principles of justice. To do so in a summary proceeding, not authorized by a statute, would be a still greater violation of the rights and interests both of the State and the policy holders.

This action was pending when the proceeding before Judge Westbrook was commenced. I entertain no doubt that the action is well brought. All parties who can have any interest in the securities referred to are before the court. Conflicting claims to any surplus which may remain after the demand of the policy-holders shall have been satisfied are set up by some of the defendants. Certainly no proper adjudication of those conflicting claims could be had in the summary proceeding mentioned. This action ought, therefore, to proceed to a final determination, and all further proceedings under or in pursuance of the order of Judge Westbrook should be enjoined. (Erie Railway Company vs. Ramsey, 45th New-York, page 617.)

Ordered accordingly.

THE MUSEUM OF NATURAL HISTORY.

THE CORPORATION COUNSEL'S OPINION AS TO THE ALLEGED ILLEGAL CONTRACT MADE BY SMITH R. LANE.

An opinion was received yesterday by the Park Commissioners from Corporation Counsel Whitney, relative to the action of Commissioner Lane in connection with the awarding of the contract for the construction of cases for the Museum of Natural History. Commissioner Lane was accused of making the award in an irregular manner, and Commissioner Conover, who was constituted a committee of one to investigate the matter, subsequently submitted a report sharply criticising the action of his colleague, and charging him with having exceeded his power and authority in granting the award to Mr. Schwartzwaelder, whose bid, it was asserted, was not received until after the time officially fixed for the opening of the proposals. The board, after hearing Mr. Conover's report, resolved to confer with the Corporation Counsel, and to ask for his opinion and advice as to the duty of the department in view of all the facts in the case as presented to the board. All the papers and documents, including Mr. Conover's report, were transmitted to Mr. Whitney, who, in reviewing the transaction, says substantially that Mr. Lane, as Treasurer of the department, was on July 1 authorized to issue an order for the construction of cases for the Museum of Natural History; that he sent for estimates to five reputable firms; that three estimates were sent to the officers of the department on July 11; that on the same day he found the estimate of Schwartzwaelder at his law office and that of Strippell & Son at his house. The Corporation Counsel is of the opinion that the report of Commissioner Conover was based on a misapprehension of the law in relation to the letting of contracts. The order for the construction of the cases was in the nature of a contract which should not be made at public letting. The Commissioners directed the Treasurer to procure the cases without the awarding of a contract at public letting, and assuming that the board had such authority, the Treasurer was under no legal obligation to invite different persons to submit bids, nor was he under any legal obligation to accept the lowest bid, or any of the other bids. "It would seem," continues Mr. Whitney, "that the Treasurer might give the order for the work to any person, and as such a price as, in his judgment, was just and reasonable. Is necessarily follows that neither Braunsdorf & Metz, nor any other bidder, had any legal right to the award to do the work in question."

In conclusion, Mr. Whitney recommends the approval of the bill, and its transmission to the Finance Department for payment.

Mr. Lane regards the opinion as a vindication of his course, and a complete answer to the assertions of Mr. Conover. He also believes that it is the duty of the Commissioners to reinvest him with the power of purchasing supplies and materials for the department, which was taken from him recently and conferred upon the President. At yesterday's meeting of the board Mr. Lane offered a resolution calling for the removal of Thomas Franklin, Superintending Engineer of the Riverside-avenue construction, on the ground that the reports of Messrs. Haswell, Worthen, and Bogart, the Board of Engineers appointed to examine the work, had condemned the manner in which Mr. Franklin performed his duties. The resolution was laid on the table on a vote of 8 against 1, Mr. Lane being the only Commissioner voting in favor of the resolution. While conversing with a TIMES reporter yesterday Mr. Lane said that he was in favor of having members of the press present at the meetings of the board, but that a resolution to that effect had been defeated by his colleagues. "They know," added he, "that with the doors closed, they can sit here and insult me with impunity. Why, it is not long ago since Commissioner Conover got up here, snapped his fingers in my face, and called me a ——liar."

A SCHOOL FOR THE INDIANS

THE HAMPTON INSTITUTE.

GEN. ARMSTRONG ARGUING IN FAVOR OF HIGHER EDUCATION FOR THE RED MAN BEFORE THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Gen. S. C. Armstrong, Principal of the Hampton (Va.) Normal and Agricultural Institute, addressed the members of the Chamber of Commerce yesterday afternoon in behalf of subscriptions toward a fund of $18,000, the amount estimated as necessary to build buildings in connection with the institute for the use of Indian boys and girls. Among those present were Rev. Dr. Henry W. Bellows, Prof. Roswell D. Hitchcock, President Draher, of Roanoke College; Hon. William E. Dodge, James M. Brown, R. L. Stuart, ex-Chamberlain George W. Lane, Stewart Brown, and Z. S. Ely, brother of the ex-Mayor. Mr. Dodge presided. Gen. Armstrong said that the Indians are beginning to evince a decided disposition to learn the arts of the whites. There are only 100,000 at present in a state of savagery. The remaining 250,000 are partially civilized, and are anxious to educate their children. There are now in the Hampton Institute 18 Indian boys from Florida, and 40 boys and 9 girls from Dakota. They are pleased with their treatment, and have written for more to come on. They are given a plain general education, and are thoroughly taught agricultural pursuits. The institute has a plant worth $200,000. The Government pays it $167 per year for the education of each Indian. They are not, therefore, charged anything for tuition, but are required to pay $10 per month for their board, either half in money and half in labor, or all in labor. The young Indians are very well with their negro fellow-students, and make good progress in their studies. The Government is virtually committed to the project, but rooms are wanted for 200 more children, and it is to pay for the erection of suitable buildings that the fund asked for is wanted.

Rev. Dr. Bellows was the next speaker. He had visited the institute and recommended Gen. Armstrong highly. The attempt to exterminate the Indians was, he said, a failure. There are as many to-day as there were 250 years ago. The extermination policy had cost numerous lives of white men and large sums of money, as well as our reputation as a civilized nation. He was in favor of trying the educational policy as proposed by Gen. Armstrong—not that of teaching the children to live by their wits, as the public school system does. The speaker thought the Indian race superior to the negro, and he believed they should have equal advantages. Prof. Hitchcock agreed with Dr. Bellows. The policy of extermination had been tried for years, at an annual cost of $13,000,000, and had failed, while the slight attempts that had been made at education had produced the most glorious results. The Indians had quadrupled and quintupled their products during the last 10 years. They ought to be taught to be citizens to their lands individually, and not to hold them in common, as now. Individual ownership was the great civilising force. Neither should treaties be made with them as with foreigners, but they should be taught to look to the Legislature as an integral part of the nation. The meeting then adjourned. Gen. Armstrong addressed a meeting of citizens of Brooklyn last evening, in the lecture-room of the First Presbyterian Church, in Henry-street. He will repeat his address this evening in the lecture-room of the Clinton-Avenue Congregational Church, and at 11 A. M. to-morrow in the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association.

BUILDING A HORSE-CAR DEPOT.

JOHN E. M'INTYRE'S SUIT AGAINST THE SECOND-AVENUE RAILROAD COMPANY.

John E. McIntyre, as Assignee of the firm of McIntyre Brothers & Co., builders and contractors, has begun suit in the Supreme Court against the Second-Avenue Railroad Company to recover $81,326 76, and for certain other relief. The complaint alleges that in September, 1876, McIntyre Brothers & Co. presented to Messrs. Solomon Mehrbach, Joseph Richardson, and Thomas J. McCahill, a Building Committee of the corporation, plans and estimates for a depot and stables which the railroad company had decided to build on the square bounded by Ninety-sixth and Ninety-seventh streets and First and Second avenues.

At the same time they proposed to furnish materials and erect the buildings for $230,000. The committee said they did not wish to spend more than $125,000, and asked the contractors to revise their plans and estimates, without lessening the strength of the projected building, until the estimated cost should be at or near that figure. The contractors did as requested, and finally proposed to do the work for $145,000. The committee suggested that the contractors should do the main work for $125,000, while they themselves should attend to certain minor matters, the cost of which they estimated at $25,000. This suggestion was adopted, and on Oct. 2, 1876, the members of the firm and of the Building Committee met to sign and ratify the contract. One of the Messrs. McIntyre then discovered that the contract presented for signature did not contain the specifications previously agreed upon between the parties. When Mr. Mehrbach's attention was called to this, he is said to have acknowledged that the instrument was not correct, but to have asked that it should be signed and held temporarily, because it would take a long time to prepare the real contract, and if work were not commenced at once upon the buildings, the weather might, in the meantime, become so bad as to prevent beginning it until the Spring. The contract was therefore signed, and work was begun. The complaint alleges that the contractors frequently asked the architect employed by the corporation to prepare the proper contract, but that he put them off with pleas of lack of opportunity; that the officers of the railroad company threw difficulties in the way of the completion of the work; and that finally, on Nov. 3, 1877, they entered the buildings and dismissed the contractors on the ground that they had not properly performed their work. The plaintiff says the contractors put into the buildings additional work to the value of $73,323 76, for which they received no payment, and that they were paid only $117,000 out of the sum of $125,000 originally stipulated. The suit is to have the proper contract drawn and ratified, to have it adjudged that the contractors properly executed that contract up to the time they were ejected from the buildings, and to recover the sum of $81,323 76, with interest from December, 1877. The case was before Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, on a motion to compel the plaintiff to state the various causes of action separately. The motion was denied, with costs.

STORMY WEATHER AT SEA.

The schooner Edith B. Coombs, Capt. Coombs, which arrived from Inagua yesterday, had on board the Captain and crew of the Swedish barkentine Sophie G., which went ashore at the north end of that island Dec. 5. Capt. Lagerstedt, of the barkentine, states that he left Cape Haytien for Havre with a cargo of logwood, coffee, hides, and soccoa, on Dec. 2, and had fair weather until the 4th, at midnight, when a stiff breeze sprang up and the weather became very thick. The vessel was then being carried out of her course by an unknown current, and at 4 o'clock A. M. she went ashore. The ship's boat was immediately launched, and the crew, nine men in all, got into it and rowed to the beach, about a mile and a half distant. That part of the island was uninhabited, but they remained there for five days and saved what they could from the wreck. The surf was so heavy that they were unable to get to the vessel, except on two of these days. After sailing 60 miles, they reached the only part of the island which was inhabited, and took passage in the Edith E. Coombs, which was loading there. They will be sent to their homes by the Swedish Consul. The Sophie G. registered 317 tons, and hailed from Gottenberg. Both the vessel and cargo were insured.

The schooner Bonny Boy, which arrived from Aquin yesterday, had been eight days north of Hatteras; with head gales, during which her jibboom and foretopmast were carried away and sails were lost and split. Jan. 9 while off Cape St. Maria, William E. Northing, a seaman, fell overboard and was drowned. He was 24 years of age, and a native of Boston.

The steam-ship Devonia, of the Anchor Line, which arrived from Glasgow yesterday, had a very stormy passage, during which scarcely anything but head gales and seas were met with, and no sail could be carried. Shortly before midnight on the third day out it was found that one of the blades of the propeller was broken, and the vessel was obliged to make the balance of her voyage at a lower rate of speed. The weather became very cold, and the entire forward part of the Devonia was covered with ice. Two or three of the crew had their hands frost-bitten.

A STOCK GAMBLER RUINED.

J. W. Weston, of No. 17 New-street, an old member of the Stock Exchange, notified the President yesterday of his inability to meet his engagements. He has been dealing extensively in privileges—puts, calls, and spreads—which are not recognized as legitimate transactions on the Exchange, and having leaned too strongly toward the bear side, was caught in the rise. There was great excitement among brokers on the announcement of his suspension, as his paper was very widely distributed, and it was reported that 40,000 shares of stock were involved. Mr. Weston said at first that 20,000 shares would be his figure, and afterward that 10,000 shares would probably cover his engagements. He estimated his liabilities at not more than $15,000, but as much of his paper has from 40 to 50 days to run, and stock values may change greatly in that time, it is impossible to approximate the probable deficiency.

PETER COOPER VICTORIOUS.

In the suit of W. G. Groom to recover $50,000 for libel from Peter Cooper, the jury yesterday, in Brooklyn, brought in a verdict for the defendant. When the case was tried before the jury disagreed. Counsel for Groom moved for a new trial yesterday, and the court reserved its decision.

JUDGMENT AGAINST A BRIDGE COMPANY.

Bailey Hascall sued the Illinois and St. Louis Bridge Company to recover on nine promissory notes, aggregating $383,446 12, and given at various times in 1874 and 1875. The case came to trial yesterday before Judge Shipman and a jury, in the United States Circuit Court, and the jury were directed to find a verdict for the plaintiff for $265,411 92. The company defended the action on the ground that the notes came into Hascall's possession without consideration.

NOTES FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22, 1879.

The subscriptions to the 4 per cent. loan today amounted to $16,508,456.

The receipts from internal revenue to-day were $230,504 76, and from Customs, $605,120 48.

Ex-Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Conant will be the London agent of the syndicate formed yesterday for the sale of 4 per cent. bonds, and the exchange of 4 per cents for 5-20s.

Attorney-General Devens has requested the Solicitor-General to proceed to Alabama, for the purpose of defending the Federal officers in that State who were recently arrested by the Local Court of Selma for neglecting to turn over to that court the ballot-boxes, &c., which were in evidence before the United States Circuit Court.

Mr. Hewitt's Labor Committee this morning heard Mr. Joseph D. Weeks, of Pittsburg, associate editor of the Iron Age, upon the relations between employers and employes. He strongly favored the English system of boards of arbitration, to whom disputes between master and men should be referred for adjustment upon a just and equitable basis.

The Senate committee appointed last session, on motion of Senator Matthews, to investigate allegations concerning his participation in Louisiana affairs, have not yet been furnished the copy of James E. Anderson's testimony before the Potter committee, which the House vote requested to supply by a resolution of the Senate adopted before the holiday recess. No meeting will be called until this testimony is received by the committee.

In view of the uncertainty as to when the Burnside committee bill can be brought before the House for consideration, and the generally conceded fact that it cannot command a majority vote, Representative Hewitt will no longer detain the Army Appropriation bill, but expects to report it to-morrow, with the provisions for reorganization and reduction, which have already been informally agreed upon by that committee, and which at the meeting to-morrow morning will receive final action.

The Committee of Conference on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill, at a meeting this afternoon, reached a final agreement, and will recommend that the bill be enacted in such shape as to conform exactly to the law of last session, with the addition of a clause providing for the Second Secretaries of Legation who were dropped out of the Appropriation bill for the current year. By the adoption of this report the House will recede from all its proposed reductions of consulates and of diplomatic salaries.

The House Committee on Appropriations today concluded the consideration of the Post Office Appropriation bill, and authorized Mr. Blount to report it to the House. A feature of the bill is a proposed division of the amount to be appropriated for the postal car and railway services, about $1,250,000 to be given to the former, and the remainder of the appropriation for the two branches to the latter. The Legislative, Executive, and Judicial bill was nearly completed, the exception being in the proposed legislation with reference to Government surveys. Among the items agreed to, by which reductions are made, was the following: The compensation of the principal Examiners in the Patent Office is reduced from $2,400 to $2,000, the First Assistant Examiner from $1,800 to $1,700, the Examiner in charge of interferences from $2,500 to $2,000, and the Trade-mark Examiner from $2,400 to $2,000.

Mr. Garland, in the paper submitted by him to the Senate to-day as a minority report from the Committee on Public Lands concerning the Rancho Panoche Grande, points out that the controversy between Mr. McGarrahan and the New-Idria Quicksilver Mining Company has continued for years without reaching a conclusion, the Government meanwhile remaining silent as to its claim to the property and the New-Idria Company deriving large benefit from the mine. Unless legislation on the controversy, in one form or another, is likely to remain before Congress or the executive departments or the courts indefinitely unless some early steps be taken to secure a complete settlement of all the conflicting title and equities by a tribunal possessing comprehensive jurisdiction. It is therefore proposed in the bill submitted by Mr. Garland that all parties claiming title to the whole or any part of the said Rancho be authorized within 90 days to bring suit in the Court of Claims for possession of the property against the United States, with a right of appeal to the Supreme Court, and that in the event of a final decision in favor of the United States, as against all other parties, the property shall be placed in the hands of a Receiver, with power to rent it, unless Congress shall by law direct how it shall be finally disposed of for the benefit of the Government.

DR. BUDINGTON'S RESIGNATION ACCEPTED.

The members of the Clinton-Avenue Congregational Church met last evening in the chapel attached to the church for the purpose of considering the resignation of the Pastor, Rev. Dr. William Ives Budington, which was read from the pulpit on Dec. 22. Mr. James Mitchell, Vice-President of the New-York Stock Exchange, was called to the chair. After prayer by A. B. Spelman, Mr. F. B. Candler, Clerk of the church, read Dr. Budington's letter of resignation, which has already been published. Mr. A. D. Warner then read a paper, which he said was an expression of the sentiment of the church in reference to the resignation. It was a long document, and expressed the deep regret of the congregation, conveyed in terms of endearment, at the cause which made necessary Dr. Budington's retirement from the pastorate, and besought him to accept the position of Pastor Emeritus. After the reading had been concluded, Dr. Budington's resignation was formally accepted, and he was appointed Pastor Emeritus. His salary is to be fixed at the annual meeting of the church on recommendation of the Board of Trustees. A committee of three was then appointed to select a committee of seven to name a clergyman to succeed Dr. Budington in the pastorate of the church. During the absence of the committee, Mr. Anthony Comstock presented the church, on behalf of the Young People's Association, with a fine portrait of Dr. Budington, which is to be hung in the lecture-room. The following committee was appointed to recommend a successor to Dr. Budington: A. S. Barnes, George P. Sheldon, S. W. Johnson, H. H. Van Dyke, Samuel C. Warner, James Mitchell, and James H. Thorp.

NEWARK'S INSOLVENT INSTITUTIONS.

The various insolvent savings institutions of Newark are making an effort to adjust their difficulties and pay off a portion of their indebtedness as soon as possible. The Dime Savings Bank expects to pay a second installment of 20 per cent., and also to wipe off some other debts which have been in litigation. The American Trust Company has called a meeting of the stockholders for the 25th inst., to consider the propriety of creating a fund for the payment of the depositors to avoid selling the assets at a sacrifice. The People's Savings Bank is trying to realize something from its assets, but the prospect is not encouraging. Indeed, it is doubted if anything can be saved from the wreck. The Citizens' Insurance and the New-Jersey Mutual Life Insurance Companies are similarly situated. The Chancellor has ordered a sale of the Peoples' securities, and the result is looked forward to with anxiety by the interested parties.

BURGLARS HELD FOR TRIAL.

The saloon of John H. Casey, No. 1 Barclay-street, was entered by burglars on Tuesday night. Detectives Mulry and Flynn, of the Twenty-seventh Precinct, saw a young man named John Barry in front of the premises, acting in a rather suspicious manner, and, taking him into custody, they entered the saloon, and found two of Barry's confederates hidden under the counter. A bag containing seven boxes of cigars was discovered lying on the floor, while $31 in currency which had been taken from the money drawer was found with the burglars. The latter, who gave their names as Edward Malone and John Connors, with Barry, were arraigned before Justice Smith yesterday, in the Tombs Police Court, and were held for trial in default of $2,000 bail each.

A WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS GRANTED.

Henry Hoffman is confined in Ludlow-Street Jail on an unsatisfied execution issued from the Marine Court on a judgment obtained by Nathan Metzger against him for $1,040 29. When it was discovered that he had no property that could be levied upon, an execution was issued against his person. This was returned unsatisfied to the Clerk of the Marine Court in November last. He was arrested and handed over to the Sheriff on Dec. 24. He now demands to be released on the ground that there was no execution against his body in existence when he was arrested. Judge Barrett yesterday granted, on his petition, a writ of habeas corpus directed to Sheriff Reilly, and a writ of certiorari directed to the Clerk of the Marine Court.

BURGLARY ON THE EAST SIDE.

Between the hours of 7 P. M. on the 19th inst. and 8 A. M. on the 20th, the store of Frederick C. Phillips, importer and dealer in Oriental goods, at No. 11 East Fourteenth-street, was entered by burglars, and robbed of goods valued at $1,361. The burglars effected an entrance to the premises by unlocking a rear door with false keys, and no clue to the thieves or the whereabouts of the property has been obtained by the Police.

CHINESE NEW-YEAR'S FESTIVITIES.

HARTFORD, Conn., Jan. 22.—The Chinese new year was celebrated at the head-quarters of the Chinese Educational Commission, in this city, today, and this evening there was a large reception, which was attended by Gov. Andrews and wife, several State officers and members of the Legislature, and over 100 prominent citizens.

STEAMER ARRIVAL.

THE DEMOCRATS HOWLING.

A PATHETIC ADDRESS.

THEY APPEAL TO THE PUBLIC—THEY ASSERT THAT THEY HAVE NOT DELAYED REAPPORTIONMENT, BUT ONLY OPPOSED INJUSTICE TO THEMSELVES.

ALBANY, Jan. 22.—The following address has been issued by the Democratic members of the Legislature; it is signed by every member of both houses:

An Address from the Democratic Members of the One Hundred and Second Legislature to the People of New-York:

The Democratic Senators and members of the Assembly in the Legislature of 1879 avail themselves of the opportunity presented by the election of a United States Senator to present the following state of facts to their immediate constituents and to the people of the State at large. By the fourth and fifth sections of the third article of the State Constitution, it is made the solemn and sworn duty of the Legislature to apportion the State, and both the Senators and members of the Assembly among the several counties according to the number of their respectative inhabitants. This duty is also demanded under the same provision of the Constitution which requires the basis of Senatorial and Assembly representation to follow an enumeration of the inhabitants every 10 years after 1855. The census of 1875 was duly taken and reported to the Legislature on the opening of the session of 1876, and for three years the Democratic members have first asked and then demanded that the Republican Legislatures of 1876, 1877, and 1878, and so far in 1879. We believe that the apportionment required by the Constitution has been willfully neglected in the interest of one man, (a Senator in Congress,) working officially and otherwise for his own re-election—a third-term Senator in favor of a third-term President, quarreling with the Federal Administration, because he cannot control the patronage of the Government; opposed at heart by the whole Administration Party not less than by all Democrats, and yet with no man in caucus, Senate or Assembly, with courage enough to proclaim his best convictions, and therefore supporting a man who possesses his place and power, not so much for the honor of the State and the peace and welfare of the country, as to make himself a Senator and to keep his friends in office. To secure this reelection for a third term, Republican Legislatures have not only refused to obey the supreme law, but have spurned all appeals from great bodies of highly-taxed and long-oppressed citizens. To this end and expressed by unwise divisions in our own ranks in a State again and again proved to be Democratic in its sentiments and choice of State officers, we find that, while the Republican Party has, for the causes stated, been successful in the Legislature and had been concluded, Dr. Budington's resignation was formally accepted, and he was appointed P

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.

—In the February number of this monthly we hear from Mr. D. H. Chamberlain, the lawful Governor of the State of South Carolina, the last word regarding the position of affairs between the white and colored races in the Southern States. No one is in a better position than he to appreciate the situation, and what he has to say will find, even among his bitter partisan enemies in the South more respectful hearing, now that time has shown that negro legislation was not an unmixed evil, and that the white rule produces results far different from what its advocates expected of it. Mr. Chamberlain writes a calm and forcible little review of the larger aspects of the question, without touching often on particulars. He defends the gift of unqualified suffrage to the negro at the close of the war, as being inevitable and logically in accordance with the spirit of the Republic. The corruptions under negro rule between 1869 and 1874 are laid to the door of the whites, who sullenly refused to cooperate with the honest but often abused negro majority, just as the intelligent and wealthy inhabitants of this City, during almost the same period, allowed corrupt men to plunder the Municipality. He contends that in our history no single instance can be pointed out where the evils of bad Government could not have been promptly corrected by the efforts of the educated and property-owning classes. The Southern States, under colored suffrage, were not exceptions to this rule. No class ever had greater advantages for securing a proper share of influence in public affairs that the white race of the South in 1867; no class was ever more open or responsive to the influences of property and education than the colored race of the South. Gov. Chamberlain denies emphatically the clamor against the bad legislation during negro rule, while admitting the corrupt practices. The Constitutions of the reconstructed States would to-day command the almost unqualified approval of competent and impartial judges.

"In the ordinary conduct of the practical affairs of Government, much must be said in approval of the spirit and methods which then prevailed. Elections were free, fair, and honest. Political canvasses were conducted by the colored race without violence or disorder or excessive rancor. The power which they held they put fairly at hazard with each recurring election. They neither cheated nor intimidated nor sought to intimidate their opponents. Their popular assemblages listened with respect and attention to the arguments of their interest political foes on those rare occasions when their foes consented to address them with argument. Public order was maintained. Crime was rare, and was punished. Life and property were as safe as in most of the States. There was a period of official corruption and profligacy in the States in which the colored vote predominated, extending generally from 1869 to 1874. For this fact no apology is explained. It was confined to official life; it was produced and inspired by a few leaders who had, for purposes of plunder, made their way to public places. As in the affairs of State, so in those that prevailed in the City of New-York from 1866 to 1873, official corruption at the South for a time baffled investigation and defied public sentiment."

Gov. Chambe lain maintains that the political supremacy of the white race in at least five of the Southern States is the result of the violent exclusion or fraudulent suppression of the colored vote. No honest or well-informed man, he thinks, will question this. In South Carolina, Mississippi, and Louisiana, the result has been reached by a system of deliberate organized violence in all its forms, crowned by the most daring election frauds. He begins his review with mention of the tendency always shown in the United States to ignore the negro question until circumstances forced recognition. He closes by saying that the same oligarchical power that from 1789 to 1860 grew in hatred of republican principles, has seized the Government again.

A paper relating to a matter of less urgency, but of national importance, is that of Senator Hoar on the conduct of business in Congress. It exposes the excessively complicated system of parliamentary rules in some of its particulars, through which free speech on the part of members and intelligent legislation are obstructed. "An Accountant" exposes "The Mysteries of American Railroad Accounting"—not a very attractive topic, to be sure, but one which exercises a great many minds in this country. Only complete and absolute publicity, both in general and detail, can secure, according to this expert, an upright management of such great corporations.

A Russian Nihilist tells some very disgraceful and extraordinary tales of official corruption at the court of the Czar, and enters at some length into the characters of Nicholas, Alexander II., and of Shouvaloff, the manager of the latter. The latter is accused of continually frightening his master into repressive measures by conjuring up the spectre of assassination, and, what is far worse, of debauching Russians, high and low, by sanctioning immoral exhibitions, encouraging drunkenness and profligacy, while at the same time stamping out all at empts to educate and enlighten the people. "The Empire of the Discontented" is a gloomy picture of Russia, but the Nihilist, as he calls himself, does not despair of his country. If the alternately crazy, weak, or brutal family of the Romanoffs can be removed from control, he thinks the sound elements of Russia will regenerate society. The "Howgate Expedition," that was represented by its commander in the January North American, furnishes a paper from its naturalist, O. T. Sherman, on the scientific work of the trip. William M. Taylor, D. D., has something to say on "Sensationalism in the Pulpit," and the rebel General, Richard Taylor, eulogises George Mason, of Virginia, under the title: "A Statesman of the Colonial Era." Prof. T. F. Crane has a somewhat didactic review of works on mediæval French literature recently published in France.

LITERARY NOTES.

—Rev. S. Hayward is compiling a history of the Town of Gilsum, N. H.

—A practical hand-book to the "History of the Austrian Monarchy" has been begun by Justin Vrásek.

—Prof. Fawcett's book on "Free Trade and Protection" has been translated into German by Herr Passow.

—The branch of literature most cultivated in Belgium during the last year is the history of the nation, especially since 1830.

—The next volume of the "Library of Contemporary Science" will be "Philosophy, Historical and Critical," by André Lefèvre.

—Mr. William Gilbert is preparing for one of the English monthly magazines a series of papers entitled "Legends of the Neckar."

—M. Francisque Michel has in preparation a book on the history of civilization of Scotland, based chiefly on the language of the country.

—There are now in the Boston Public Library 357,958 volumes. In December 104,989 books were taken out by an average of 30,000 people.

—The book on "Pindar," by Rev. F. D. Morice, makes the twenty-eighth volume of Lippincott's "Ancient Classics for English Readers," and closes the series.

—The Worcester, Mass., Public Library in 1878 gave out 132,384 volumes in the circulating, and 30,079 volumes in the reference department. The expenditures for the year were $16,400.

—The late Major Whyte-Melville's last work, given into the hands of his publisher only a few days before his sudden death, "Black but Comely," will be issued immediately by Chapman & Hall, London.

—The latest volume of the "Tales from Blackwood" contains the "Autobiography of a Joint-stock Company, (Limited)," "Bee or Beatrix," the "Night Wanderer of an Afghan Fort," and an "Ayrshire Curling Song."

—The Duke of Argyll's "History of the Eastern Question" has been delayed by the outbreak of the Afghan war. The Duke is keeping it back in order to write a new chapter on this fresh and important phase of the Eastern Question.

—Rev. Joseph Henry Allen's "Hebrew Men and Times, from the Patriarchs to the Messiah," an old book very thoroughly revised, will be reissued by Roberts Brothers during the Winter.

—The Longmans, London, will publish during the month a new tragedy entitled "Brian Born," by J. T. B. The scene of the drama is laid in Ireland at the beginning of the eleventh century, but the work has merely a basis of fact and only touches the skirts of history.

—Mrs. Francis Anne Kemble's "Records of a Girlhood," which is just ready at Henry Holt & Co.'s, contains the reminiscences of the famous days of the English stage and society when she was a girl; the sketches of her life are extended much beyond their earlier form in the Atlantic Monthly.

—"Facts About Champagne and Other Sparkling Wines," very fully illustrated, and comprising historical, topographical, anecdotal, and technical notes upon all the known sparkling wines of Europe and America, by Mr. Henry Vizetelly, British wine juror at the recent Paris Exhibition, will be published at an early day by Ward & Lock, London.

—The Revue des Deux Mondes indulges in the same impartiality as that which distinguishes our own leading organs, the North American and International Reviews. It opens its pages equally to M. Jules Soury's elegantly written but bold declamations against revealed religion or religion of any kind, and to M. Caro's searching criticism of modern free-thinkers.

—The third or concluding volume of Bishop Ellicott's "New Testament Commentary for English Readers" is expected to be ready by Feb. 1. The New-Englander expresses the opinion that "of all the new Testament commentaries for general use, this is the best. It is not shaped to suit any particular party or school. It is the product of enlightened, independent, evangelical scholars."

—A volume of "Sermons" by Bishop Stevens, of Philadelphia, will be published by E. P. Dutton & Co. early in the coming Lent. It will be uniform with the recently published volumes of sermons by Rev. Phillips Brooks and Rev. Morgan Dix, D. D., and will further carry out the publishers' plan of furnishing the reading public with specimens of the best pulpit work done by preachers in the Episcopal Church.

—Flemish literature counts a new prose writer, who promises to take a high rank among authors. He uses the pseudonym of "Wazenaar." His first book, called "A Flemish Boy," is a sort of autobiography, showing lack of experience, yet truly original, and giving successful sketches of Flemish manners. He deals very frankly with the Roman Catholic clergy, who, in the villages of Flanders, join without disguise in the struggles of political parties.

—A new "Dictionary of English Dramatic Literature," as exhaustive as Mr. Collier's, but more critical, to be edited by Mr. Theodore Watts, is talked of in London. It is intended to give ample space to great names, and yet be made complete enough to serve as a book of reference. Several writers who have specially devoted themselves to English dramatic literature—Mr. Swinburne, Mr. Edmund W. Gosse, Mr. J. Knight, and Prof. John Nichol—are expected to contribute articles.

—The most important work on philosophy and religion which Denmark has produced within the last year is Bishop Martensen's "Christian Ethics," which has already been translated into English, and is issued in "Clark's Theological Library." The aim of the book is to effect some sort of reconciliation between the spirit and demands of orthodox Christianity and those of purely secular culture, together with the movements that arise out of it. Naturally enough, the book has not brought about the reconciliation, and in Denmark his conclusions have been fiercely disputed in a controversy which is not yet over.

—Robert Zimmerman in his sketch of German literary movements during the year 1878, says in the Athenæum that "Germany possesses a centre for the book trade, but does not possess a centre for literature. Four-fifths of the books published in Paris and in London are written in those cities, whereas of the thousands of literary works enumerated in the catalogue of the Leipzig book-fair, only the smallest portion are written in the town itself. There are almost as many books written annually in German as in most of the chief European languages taken together. However, the number of well-written works does not stand in any favorable proportion to the total number published. The effect of the want of centralization in German literature is thought to be beneficial to independence of the writers. Mr. Zimmerman thus contrasts French, English, and German writers: "A French author treats his public as if it were his mistress, whom he wishes to please; an English author treats his as his friend, by whom he wishes to be understood; whereas, a German not unfrequently treats his as his wife, toward whom he can sot pretty much as he pleases."

FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

THIRD SESSION—Jan. 22.

SUMMARY.

The Refunding bill recently passed by the House was called up in the Senate and passed without amendment. Mr. Edmunds moved to consider his resolutions regarding the last three constitutional amendments, but, after some debate, the motion was lost, and the consideration of the Naval Appropriation bill resumed. Mr. Blaine addressed the Senate in support of the amendments offered by him yesterday looking to a reduction of naval expenses. He argued that it was useless to maintain so large a Navy when we had no commercial marine to protect, and asked Congress to appropriate a portion of the money spent in the support of the Navy toward building up our commercial interests. Mr. Beck and Mr. Edmunds opposed Mr. Blaine's amendments and they were withdrawn. The bill was then read a third time and passed. Mr. Edmunds again moved to take up his constitutional amendments resolutions, but Mr Thurman moved to adjourn, which was carried.

In the House of Representatives Mr. Stephens introduced a bill defining the duties of the Secretary of the Treasury. The bill appropriating $60,000 to défray the expense of transporting coin and bullion was passed. A Southern war claim bill then came up for consideration, and Mr. Bragg, a Democrat, from Wisconsin, assailed the Southern Democracy, saying that he had heard threats that they would go over to the other side if they were not given all they wanted. He declared if such were the case the sooner they went over the better it would be for the Democratic Party. Mr. Ellis, of Louisiana, denied that any Southern Democrats proposed to desert their party, and said he was willing to vote for a constitutional amendment prohibiting the payment of war claims. Eulogies were delivered by several members on the late Representative Douglas, after which the House adjourned.

SENATE.

THE M'GARRAHAN CLAIM.

Mr. GARLAND, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Public Lands, submitted a minority report, signed by himself, on the claim of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande, Cal., together with a bill placing all the claimants to that rancho in the Court of Claims, with the right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Laid on the table, and ordered that the bill and report be printed.

NEW BILLS.

The following bills were introduced and referred:

By Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois—To prevent and punish the counterfeiting within the United States of notes, bonds, and other securities of foreign Governments. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HERFORD, of West Virginia—Several bills making appropriations for the improvement of the Big Sandy River, New River, Guyandotte River, and the Great Kanawha River, West Va., all of which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THE REFUNDING BILL PASSED.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, called up the House bill to facilitate the refunding of the national debt, reported from the Committee on Finance yesterday. In explanation of the bill, he said it met the unanimous approval of the Committee on Finance. It simply provided that private individuals might exchange their 5 or 6 per cent. bonds with the Treasury at par, and receive interest for three months, the same as national banks and syndicates.

The bill was then read a third time and passed, without amendment.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

Mr. BURNSIDE, of Rhode Island, from the Joint Committee on Army Reorganization, submitted tabular statements in relation to the present and proposed organization of the Army. Ordered to be printed.

BILLS ON THE CALENDAR.

The Senate then proceeded to consider bills on the calendar, and the following were passed:

Senate bill to pay Maj. E. E. Hall, Paymaster United States Army, $3,141 39, the amount of which he was defrauded by the criminal act of his clerk, and for which said clerk had been convicted.

Senate bill to declare certain lands granted to the Pacific Railroad Companies by acts of July 1, 1862, and July 2, 1864, subject to taxation by the States or Territories in which they may be located.

MR. EDMUNDS' RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, moved to postpone the further consideration of the calendar and take up the resolutions submitted by him on the 20th inst., declaring the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States valid.

Mr. BLAINE, of Maine, said the Naval Appropriation bill would come up at 1:30 P. M., as the unfinished business, having been postponed from yesterday, at his request, that he might submit some remarks in regard to the amendments he then submitted. He hoped Senator from Vermont [Mr. Edmunds,] would withdraw his motion.

Mr. THURMAN, of Ohio, said if the Senator from Vermont desired to make a speech on his resolutions, of course there would be a reply from the Democratic side of the chamber. If, on the other hand, the Senator did not desire to speak, those on the Democratic side of the chamber would determine for themselves whether they would reply or not.

Mr. CONKLING, of New-York, said he had heard no reason assigned why the Senator from Maine [Mr. Blaine] should not proceed with his remarks to-day and therefore he would vote against the motion of the Senator from Vermont. It was a question of the Senate, when a Senator had given notice that he desired to address the body, to permit him to do so at the time named by him. It would not be proper to displace the Senator from Maine, especially by a matter not requiring haste.

THE NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion of Mr. EDMUNDS to take up the resolutions was lost, and at 1:30 P. M. the Senate resumed consideration of the Naval Appropriation bill.

Mr. DAWES, of Massachusetts, submitted an amendment providing that if the amount appropriated for any item of pay of the Quartermaster's Department of the Marine Corps for the present fiscal year shall be insufficient, it may be made up from the excess in any other appropriation of the bill, upon the written consent of the Secretary of the Navy. The amendment was discussed, and then laid aside.

Mr. BLAINE then had read the amendments, of which he gave notice yesterday, providing for the appointment of a board of three naval officers to inquire as to the number of officers required for a navy of 7,500 men, and also whether any of the present navy-yards may be dispensed with; providing further, that from and after July 1, 1883, only such a number of graduates of the Naval Academy shall be entitled to appointment as Midshipmen as are required to fill vacancies of that grade existing on the 1st of July in each year, those entitled to appointment to be determined by the Academic board, on the basis of their standing in the graduating class.

Mr. EDMUNDS reserved the right to object to the amendments on the ground that they proposed new legislation. He would not ask to have the point decided now, as he did not want to cut off the remarks of the Senator from Maine. [Mr. Blaine.]

Mr. BLAINE said he desired to say, in advance, that in the remarks he might make he did not intend to criticise any of the operations of the Navy Department, either present or past, and still less by the remotest implication to reflect upon the gallant corps of officers of the Navy. Should he reflect upon any department of the Government it would be upon that for which he had had the honor to be a member for a considerable number of years. At the same time, he would speak his mind freely about the present condition of the Navy, and especially the large number of officers. Congress had limited the number of men in the Navy to 7,500, and for that 7,500 men we had a total of 2,020 officers, or one officer to a little over three men. We had 138 vessels and 38 in commission, while the British Navy, which had 320 steam vessels and a total of 494 vessels, had 4,990 officers, with something over 60,000 men. For the great Navy of Great Britain, the largest and most effective in the world, there were two great navy-yards and two subordinate ones, while we, on six degrees of coast latitude, had seven navy-yards. The one at Pensacola was necessary for Gulf uses, and another was one on the Pacific coast was a necessity. The pay of the officers of our Navy on the active list amounted to over $3,822,000 annually; for those on the retired list, the pay of the same class of petty officers and seamen amounted to only $2,300,000 per annum, showing, of course, the top-heavy condition of the service. From the Naval Academy we were now turning out annually an average of 50 officers. Now, he asked that from and after 1883 the graduates from the Naval Academy should not be entitled to commission, except upon merit and to fill any vacancy which may at the time exist. Was the law now, and every Cadet upon entering the Academy would understand that his entry into the service depends upon his standing at the graduation. He was opposed to make a Navy by graduating Cadets from the Naval Academy. We could not improvise a sailor any more than we could improvise a mountain. He has to grow. Unless there was a commercial marine to build up there would have no navy. There never was a navy which did not grow out of a commercial marine, and in that respect we were sadly deficient. The commerce of the world had entirely changed within the past 20 years. It was not safe to arm our soldiers with bows and arrows as to rebuild the mercantile marine with sailing vessels. We stood to-day furnishing almost as much ocean freight as any two countries of the world and gaining nothing from it, or so little that it only served to point the moral. We paid in one year $85,000,000 gold for freight and he [Mr. Blaine] said to the the Chairman of the Committee on Finances, [Mr. Morrill,] that it would not be a possible thing for this country to maintain specie resumption with that draft upon its resources. He spoke of the resumption of specie payments in 1857, and said we resumed upon freight money, which was laid to the credit of American commerce in Europe. In the last 10 years we had sent and brought between $11,000,000,000 and $12,000,000,000 worth of products, and the freight, with the passengers attached thereto, paid over $1,100,000,000. Out of that the European nations got $900,000,000; yet we continued appropriating for our Navy to protect a commerce which did not exist. He asked that Congress would give to the revival of commerce some part of the sum now being wasted on a Navy. He believed $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 could be taken from the Navy without impairing its efficiency, and this $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 would turn $50,000,000 into our coffers. What advantage was given to a man by issuing to him an American register for a foreign-built ship? Mr. Vanderbilt was now establishing a line of steam-ships to run to Europe in connection with his road. They were foreign vessels, manned by foreign men, and should we give American registers to foreign-built ships, it would establish just such lines.

Mr. BLAINE, continuing, said he was not out of order in discussing the question on this bill, because the Secretary of the Navy had alluded to it in his annual report. He then referred to the legislation of Congress to aid in building railroads, and said from 1846 to 1875 the Congress of the United States had passed 91 acts endowing railroads with land and money to the extent of $500,000,000. In his judgment Congress acted wisely, because it cheapened freights. We had a system of railroads ahead of the whole world, but when we reached the ocean it seemed we no longer took any interest in transportation. From Chicago to Liverpool was one direct line. Take the New-York Central Railroad, put foreigners on it to brakemen, conductors, and engineers, have all its locomotives constructed in England, and it would be no more injurious to the welfare of this country than for that road to turn all our freight over to foreign ships as soon as it reached salt water. From Chicago to Liverpool is 4,000 miles. We operate 1,000 miles and turn the other 3,000 over to foreigners. He said it would be a fine thing to put an American flag on a foreign-built ship and call it an American vessel. He was not surprised that such a proposition as that should come from the South-west, [alluding to Mr. Beck, of Kentucky, who introduced the bill,] but he never expected to see the day when a New-Englander [referring to Mr. Eaton, of Connecticut,] would make such a proposition. The United States steamer Tennessee see had just returned from a three years' cruise, and the cost of that cruise would surprise every member of the Senate. The rarest thing she met in her travels was an American ship, and the only stars and stripes she saw were those at her mast-head.

Mr. BECK, of Kentucky, said he felt some amazement that the Senator from Maine should indulge in such a tirade of abuse against a bill for free ships. The Senator [Mr. Blaine] was a member of the Committee on Appropriations as well as himself. [Mr. Beck,] and that Senator failed to lay before the committee a single grievance of which he complained to-day. He had no right to seek to introduce new legislation upon an appropriation bill. He made the point of order that the amendments of Mr. Blaine could not be considered, as they proposed new legislation.

Mr. Beck then spoke of the bill which he had introduced to grant American registers to foreign-built ships, and said it could not be whistled down the wind. Let our people buy their ships where they could get them cheapest, and compete for the carrying trade of the world. Of all the great ships leaving the port of New-York for ports beyond the Atlantic, not one carried the American flag. We could not build ships, because everything entering into their construction, from the smallest nail to the bunting at the mast-head, was protected by a high tariff. He [Mr. Beck] sought to make the American flag supreme on every sea, but he would vote to cut off protective tariff laws. He would not interfere with the coastwise trade.

Mr. BLAINE—Why not?

Mr. BECK—I am willing to give you that to keep you quiet. Continuing his argument, Mr. Beck said $5,500,000 had been paid for the Fisheries for the benefit of New-England, but he would not object to that. He paid $14,000,000 in 1865, $7,000,000 in internal revenue taxes last year, while Maine paid $79,000; but Kentucky asked nothing.

Mr. BLAINE said the Senator from Kentucky had supported general legislation amendments on appropriation bills, and so had the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Edmunds.]

Mr. EDMUNDS, in reply, said he thought for the last 10 years—he would not be certain as to time, indeed—he had not sought to own even a vessel. As people do who are more prominent in national affairs, and who have larger expectations—[laughter]—he had not voted for any general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. BLAINE inquired if the Senator did not support the posse comitatus clause in the Army Appropriation bill of last session.

Mr. EDMUNDS replied that he was sick in his bed at home when that was passed.

Mr. BLAINE not having formally submitted his amendments, but having only given notice thereof, did not submit them in view of the objections.

The amendment submitted by Mr. HAWES in regard to deficiencies in the Quartermaster's Department of the Marine Corps was withdrawn after some discussion.

The bill was then read a third time and passed.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. BLAINE then introduced a bill to regulate promotions in the Navy. It was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. Its provisions [are the same as the amendments discussed to-day.

THE EDMUNDS RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. EDMUNDS moved to take up the resolutions submitted by him in regard to the constitutional amendments.

Mr. THURMAN moved to adjourn, which motion was agreed to—yeas 24, nays 19, as follows, [Republicans in roman. Democrats in italics, Independents in SMALL CAPITALS:]

Pairs on all political questions were announced as follows: Messrs. Bailey, Butler, Eustis, Garland, McDonald, Merrimon, Randolph, and Coke, with Messrs. Cameron, of Wisconsin; Christiancy, Chaffee, Kirkwood, Matthews, Ingalls, Paddock, and Sargent.

Mr. BOOTH, of California, said he voted to adjourn because the motion of the Senator from Vermont to take up the resolutions displaced the Desert Land bill, which he regarded as important legislation.

The Senate then, at 4:30 P. M., adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

AN EXPLANATION BY THE SPEAKER.

The SPEAKER desired to say, in view of some criticisms made in regard to the mistake in the roll-call yesterday, that a critical examination showed that there was no change in the result of the two roll-calls, and called attention to the fact that the error had been discovered through the caution of the Chair in sending down to the floor to have some of the members insist on the names being read.

A BILL DEFINING THE DUTIES OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, introduced a bill defining and describing the duties of the Secretary of the Treasury in certain cases. Referred. One of its provisions is that when any national bank shall fail to redeem its notes, or shall desire to withdraw them, the Secretary of the Treasury shall sell to the highest bidder the United States bonds deposited to secure the same, for coin or Treasury notes, and issue certificates of deposit for the coin or notes thus received, which he shall deliver in exchange for the notes of the bank of exactly the same denomination and pay over the balance of those certificates to the bank which had deposited and owned the bonds, and these certificates shall be receivable for public dues, and be redeemable in coin or Treasury notes at the United States Treasury.

THE TRANSPORTATION OF COIN.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill appropriating $60,000 to meet the expenses of the transportation of coin and bullion, provided that the appropriation shall be immediately available, and that the charges for transportation of gold coin from San Francisco to New-York shall not exceed ¼ of 1 per cent., and for transportation of silver 1 per cent., with proportionate charges between intermediate points. It also makes an appropriation of $40,000 to meet the miscellaneous expenses of the House.

After a short discussion the bill was passed.

A DEMOCRATIC FAMILY FIGHT.

The SPEAKER proceeded to call the committees for reports.

The pending bill was the one referring to the Court of Claims the claim of Maggie Barron and others, (minors during the war,) for supplies furnished the Union Army.

Mr. BRAGG, of Wisconsin, opposed the bill as making a precedent which would open the doors of the Treasury to an evil which would bring bankruptcy upon the Government. He had always been opposed to the Southern Claims Commission. It was a court which had bred fraud and perjury all over the land. It was a remarkable result that in 19 out of every 20 cases the judgment had been against the Government. Loyalty was a sentiment, and perhaps the gentlemen on his side of the hall who had fought in the Confederate Army might claim that they had been loyal because they had sought to maintain the Government on the principles of the fathers of the Republic, while the Northerners, who had fought to tear down the structure the fathers had left, had been disloyal. [Laughter on the Republican side.] He had been astonished that this claim, which was supposed to be so loyal, should have been supported yesterday by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Hooker.] He felt like saying to him that the mouse said when he saw a dead cat hanging up against the wall. "Ha! ha! my old friend, you are there. Well, you may stay there. I would not trust you though your skin was stuffed with straw." [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN, of Maine—I think the gentleman knows that the gentleman [Mr. Hooker] is out, or else he would be keeping as quiet as the mouse. He [Mr. Bragg] kept quiet when the gentleman was present yesterday, and did not assail him.

Mr. BRAGG—It is not my purpose to assail any one, and when the gentleman says that when I want to assail a man I do it behind his back, and dare not meet him face to face, he mistakes the man he calls to order. He proceeded, referring to the $35,000,000 which it was claimed by Southern members had been illegally collected from captured and abandoned property, and which they claimed belonged to the South, and called on those members to picture the scenes of war, and count the billions of money spent to put down the war, and then strike a balance with the $35,000,000 on the credit side, and all these countless miseries on the debit side. He was willing that the dead past should remain dead, but he was not willing to sit by and allow it to be brought up in one form or another, by one member or another, and from one committee or another, for the purpose of getting money out of the Treasury under the plea of loyalty. He had heard a taunt thrown at the Democracy which he thought it necessary to answer. He had heard it said that, unless the Democrats of the North were more liberal, unless they opened their hands and gave more lavishly, the "solid South," on which they relied, would go over to the other side. He, representing the Democrats of the North, would say that if there was a man who professed to belong to the Democracy of the South simply for the reason that the doors of the Treasury were to be opened to them, the sooner they went over the better for them, and the better for the Democratic Party. When the people of the country felt that they could trust the Treasury and the interests of the Government with the Democratic Party, with no danger of the Democrats of the North selling out body and soul to the Democrats of the South, that party could gather recruits in the Northern States that would fill up its ranks to the maximum, and it would have no need of that class of gentlemen whom it could hold only by giving them all they wanted.

Mr. ELLIS, of Louisiana, agreed that the percentage of loyal persons in the South, as the gentleman understood it, was very small. But the Southern man who had been born there, who had been reared there, and who had been identified with that people, could only have been loyal when he entered the Confederate Army and did his full duty as a soldier. He had come here and voted for a constitutional amendment which should close the books and for ever settle the accounts between them and the Government. The lecture which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bragg] had seen fit to read the Democracy of the South came from a rather bad grace. No Democrat had proposed to desert the Democratic Party. No Southern Democrat had intimated such a proposition.

Several Republican members desired to ask questions, but Mr. Ellis refused to yield, and Mr. ATKINS, of Tennessee, declared that it was a "family fight."

Mr. ELLIS, in conclusion, said that the Southern people were as true to the Democratic Party as the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. Bragg,] and it was to obedience to Democratic teachings as the Southern people had understood them that they had gone into the war.

Before the excitement caused by the discussion had subsided, Mr. CHALMERS, rising to a privileged question, said he understood the remarks made by the gentleman from Wisconsin were aimed directly at him.

The SPEAKER informed him that that was not a question of privilege, but that in due course of time he would have the opportunity of replying.

"Then," said Mr. CHALMERS, "I will bide my time."

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE DOUGLAS.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of resolutions in honor of the memory of the late Beverly B. Douglas, Representative from Virginia. Eulogies were pronounced by Messrs. GOODE, POLLARD, HOOKER, WALKER, SPRINGER, DUNNELL, FRIEDMORE, CLARK, and TUCKER. The resolutions were then adopted, and the House, at 4 o'clock, adjourned—the Mississippi Levee bill (which was to have been taken up this evening) being fixed for consideration next Tuesday night.

NOMINATIONS BY THE PRESIDENT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—The President sent the following nominations of Postmasters to the Senate to-day: George W. McKesig, Cairo, Ill.; Mrs. Mary C. Daniels, Wilson, N. C.; Charles W. Arnold, Albany, Ga.; Charles A. Womble, Tuscumbia, Ala.; James J. McLemore, Lafayette, Ala.; Thomas T. Allington, Florence, Ala.; Mrs. Pauline Wood, Corsicana, Texas.

THE PROPOSED SUSPENSION BRIDGE.

The Park Commissioners yesterday adopted a resolution requesting the Controller to issue bonds to the amount of $5,000, to enable them to prepare for constructing a suspension bridge over the Harlem River, a short distance north of High Bridge. By an act of the Legislature passed in 1871, and known as chapter 534 of the laws of that year, the Commissioners were authorized to build the bridge at a point not more than half a mile north of High Bridge. In their preamble to the resolutions adopted yesterday, the Commissioners say: "The land for the approaches on both sides has long been taken and paid for by the City, and the amount thereof has been assessed on the property-owners. Its construction will immediately connect an extensive system of highways now in actual use, on both sides of the river. The proposed bridge has this special advantage, that the shores which it is to connect are at the proposed place of construction, bold and elevated, so that the bridge will be of a height that will not impede the navigation of the Harlem river. The unprecedentedly low price of labor and the reduced rates of wages render this an especially fitting time for this board to discharge the duty which was so many years since imposed upon it."

TRYING TO GET OUT OF PRISON.

Charles Marsh, a man who was indicted and imprisoned last June for passing counterfeit money, was sentenced to 6 months imprisonment and to pay a fine of $100. He served his time, but has not yet paid the fine. Yesterday he applied to United States Commissioner Shields for his discharge under the law of Congress known as the "Poor Convicts act," claiming that he was now unable to pay the fine. An examination into his pecuniary condition will be made and the facts reported to the United States Circuit Court.

The Signal Service Bureau report indicates for to-day, in this region, increasing cloudiness, and rain or snow, south-east to south-west winds, falling, followed by rising barometer, and a slight rise followed by a slight fall in temperature.

It may have been with a recollection of the order received by the famous Captain of the same name to "give them a little more grapeshot," that Mr. Bragg, Democrat, of Wisconsin, made his speech in the House yesterday against the Barron claim. It was a vigorous statement of the annoyance and distress to which honestly loyal members of the Democratic Party have been subjected by Southern assaults on the Treasury. He declared that these assaults had been fatal obstacles to the progress of the Democratic Party, which could never win the confidence of the people while they continued. The speech was a surprise to the House, and especially to the Democrats, and called out a passionate, but not very successful, reply from Ellis, of Louisiana. But it has done more for Democratic success in 1880 than anything that has happened or is likely to happen this session. It is in the power of Northern Democrats, and of them only, to set at rest the present strong suspicion which attaches to their party of plotting an organized raid on the Treasury.

Senator Blaine made two or three capital points in his speech on the Navy yesterday, although his propensity toward false rhetoric sometimes betrayed him into making statements which are not altogether true. For example, when he endeavors to prove that American commerce in American ships is the only basis upon which specie resumption can be permanently maintained, he makes a random assertion. But when he says that the resumption of 1857 was based on freight-money earned by American ships, he perverts the truth. American products exported, as well as freight-money earned, were the foundations of prosperity upon which we resumed. But Mr. Blaine's exhibit of what he calls "the top-heavy condition" of the naval service was strikingly shown in his comparison of the amounts paid out on account of the pay of officers and men. The pay of the officers of the Navy on the active list is more than $3,822,000 annually, while the pay of petty officers and seamen is only $2,300,000. Congress has limited the number of men in the Navy to 7,500, and for these men there are 2,020 officers, or one officer to a little over three men. The Naval Academy turns out about 50 officers a year. Mr. Blaine thinks it high time to remodel a Navy which was intended to protect a commerce which no longer exists.

Mayor Cooper begins well. He has signalized his first appearance in the Board of Apportionment by provoking one of the most instructive discussions which has been heard in that body for many a day. During the three weeks in which he has been in office, the Mayor has already had presented to him for signature warrants in payment of judgments amounting to upward of $200,000. Most of these are simply on account of claims incurred by departments which have illegally exceeded their appropriations. As the Mayor remarked, "it amounts to this, that, notwithstanding there is a provision in the charter that no expenditures can be incurred in excess of the appropriation, the defect is practically covered by the appropriation for judgments." Mr. Kelly's defense of this vicious system was very characteristic of his loose ideas on questions of law and administrative fidelity. He defended not only the appropriation to meet judgments given for claims illegally incurred, but the equally bad practice of transferring "unexpended" balances for a similar purpose. This latter abuse, it may be remembered, was pretty thoroughly ventilated before the last Legislature in consequence of certain strictures which The Times made upon it, but the preventive action which it demanded was, if we mistake not, defeated, among other reforms, by the Governor's veto. It may be casually remarked that "the era of good feeling" which was supposed to have begun at a celebrated club dinner does not appear to have made itself felt around the City Hall.

Dr. Hayes has introduced in the Assembly a resolution to give practical effect to the demand for retrenchment in this City. He wants the committee of which he is the head to be instructed to report a bill reducing all salaries over $12,000 30 per cent.; over $8,000, 25 per cent.; over $5,000, 20 per cent.; over $3,000, 15 per cent.; over $2,000, 12 per cent., and over $1,200, 10 per cent. The chief objection to such a bill would be that it does not go far enough. It would leave at least two-thirds of the City salary list untouched, and would effect a much smaller saving than the taxpayers are entitled to expect. The great mass of $1,200 salaries distributed among policemen, firemen, and court janitors and attendants, need reduction quite as much as the exorbitant pay of Judges, heads of departments, and clerks. In Brooklyn, patrolmen are paid $1,000 and firemen $900, and Mayor Howell recommends a still lower rate of pay. The class of men from whom the court officers are drawn do not earn over $500 a year in any private employment, and assuming that the policemen and firemen are drawn from the ranks of ordinary mechanics, their pay is at least 50 per cent. greater than they could earn if they were following their respective trades. A general reduction of 20 per cent. on all salaries under $5,000 would do injustice to no one and would be a very sensible relief to the City Treasury.

In discussing the City salary question, the fact should not be forgotten that it is the lower range of salaries alone which has escaped reduction below the inflated prices of the Ring régime. The Charter of 1873 reduced the salaries of nearly every important officer in the City Government by from 33 to 20 per cent. In 1871, the Mayor, Controller, and Corporation Counsel received a salary from both City and County. In the Mayor's case the reduction was but slight, but the Controller was brought down from $15,000 to $10,000, and the Corporation Counsel from $23,500 to $15,000. The Deputy Controller was reduced from $9,000 to $7,000; the single salaried member of the Park Board from $10,000 to $6,500; and instead of a Receiver of Taxes and a Deputy at $8,000 each, there was substituted a Receiver at $7,000. The Commissioner of Public Works had his salary increased from $7,500 to $10,000, but for five Fire Commissioners, costing in all $50,000, the charter of 1873 substituted three at $17,000; five Dock Commissioners at $50,000 were replaced by three at $16,500; five Commissioners of Charities at $50,000 gave place to three at $16,500; four Health Commissioners at $20,000 to two at $11,500, and the Police Department was first reduced from four Commissioners, costing $60,000, to five, at $32,000, and then to four, at $26,000. In the Bureau of Taxes and Assessments similar reductions were made. The Commissioner of Jurors, District Attorney, Surrogate, and Judges have almost alone, among the higher classes of officers, remained untouched.

THE RECENT SENATORIAL ELECTIONS.

The elections to the United States Senate to fill the places of Senators whose terms expire on the 3d of March next are now practically completed. New-Hampshire does not choose a Senator till June next, and Arkansas, Kansas, and Louisiana have not yet completed their elections. With these exceptions, all the Senators have been chosen. Mr. Voorhees has also been elected for the remainder of the term of the late Senator Morton, and Gen. Shields will add to his military laurels the title of Senator from Missouri for 30 days. On looking over the list the general observer will not be struck with any great improvement in the character of the Senate. Of the Democrats, only two, Mr. Gordon, of Georgia, and Mr. Voorhees, of Indiana, have seen service in the Senate, and neither of these is a man of distinguished ability. Both represent some of the worst tendencies of their party—the narrow partisan devotion, the intense attachment to the conception of State rights which prevailed before the war, the intractable and often arrogant spirit toward their opponents which made the task of overthrowing the pro-slavery Democracy so costly to the country. Neither, moreover, has any correct conception of the dominant issues of the hour, while the influence of Mr. Voorhees, not by any means inconsiderable in his party, will always be given to the most extreme and dangerous ideas in regard to finance. To these may be added Mr. Hampton, of South Carolina, and Mr. Pendleton, of Ohio, as the only Democrats who have gained special prominence in national politics. They represent, though in a more astute fashion, much the same principles as Messrs. Gordon and Voorhees. What Mr. Hampton's course in regard to finance may be, we cannot say. It will doubtless, like that of the Georgia Senator, be subordinated to the success of the policy of his section, for which he has a like passionate attachment. He is not likely, however, to occupy as much of the attention of the public in his new sphere as he has in his recent one, which was more contracted, but where he made himself very conspicuous. Mr. Pendleton is far more adroit and able than the Indiana Senator, but his ideas are as hopelessly false, and his devotion to them is equally without reserve or qualification. We may be sure that nothing in the choice of new Democratic Senators tends to reassure the country regarding the financial future. The party does not contribute to the body, in which for a time it will have a majority, a single member of conservative and sound views on this subject. On the contrary, the tendency to quackery and demagogism which has overwhelmed every Democratic Senator of influence, except Mr. Bayard, and which has made so complete a wreck of the reputation of the once independent and powerful senior Senator from Ohio, will only be strengthened by the members just elected.

Of the nine Republicans, seven have already served in the Senate,—Messrs. Hill, of Colorado, and Platt, of Connecticut, being the only ones without experience in that body. It may be said with safety, therefore, that, in the elements of acquired skill and influence, the Republicans have gained, or retained, an advantage over their opponents. None of the Republican Senators are distinguished by special independence of view, unless we except Mr. Carpenter, of Wisconsin, who is rather eccentric than independent, and whose orbit, though it may ultimately prove difficult of calculation, will probably be reasonably regular for the time being. In the struggle over the silver legislation, which is likely to be the first of paramount importance to the business interests of the country which Congress will have to face, Messrs. Jones and Logan will be on the wrong side, while Messrs. Allison and Carpenter must be set down as at best doubtful. Mr. J. S. Morrill, of Vermont, is the only one whose fidelity and sagacity can be counted on with entire certainty. On the whole, the renewals in the Senate have not strengthened the Republicans as a party with reference to the more important duties that are before them.

The situation is one, therefore, that calls for all the more energy and vigilance in the party itself. It is one in which the initiative will not in any marked degree be taken by those whose position should naturally make them leaders. Everything will depend on the soundness and force of opinion within the party itself. Happily, there is reason to hope that this will not be wanting. The education of the Republican Party in the direction of safe finance has not been very rapid, but it has made very satisfactory progress. The party has at every stage in the long conflict with hallucination and error been sufficiently in advance of its opponents to save the country from many threatening ills. It has successfully contended with inflation; it has overthrown the scheme of repudiating the bonds by their "payment" in irredeemable paper, and it has secured the beginning of redemption in gold. It has yet to deal with the intended establishment of a practically exclusive silver currency, and with the substitution of legal tenders for bank-notes. It is unfortunate that in the new battles it may not be vigorously led by the men whom it has placed in power; but its duty is thereby only made the plainer. If it is true to itself, its "leaders" will at least be compelled to accompany, and not to oppose, it in its movements.

A GOOD BEGINNING.

The vote in the Assembly, rejecting Gen. Sharpe's motion for the reconsideration of Mr. Fish's resolution respecting the Knickerbocker Company, is the first promise of the independent action which alone can settle satisfactorily the life insurance question in the Legislature. The resolution adopted on Tuesday was a proper one. A previous call had been made upon the Knickerbocker Company for information as to its affairs, with special reference to its mortgages and other assets. On that occasion the proceeding of the Assembly was justified by current reports in regard both to the condition of the company and the relations of its executive to the head of the Insurance Department. Perhaps as a result of this relationship, the company treated the resolution with contempt. It has withheld the information, which would never have been required in this exceptional form had the department done its duty. Yesterday's vote, then, impliedly censures the department, whose remissness renders direct action necessary, while it leaves no loophole for escape on the part of the Knickerbocker's managers. Literal compliance with Mr. Fish's resolution will give us a glimpse of a state of things which the Superintendent allows to go on unchecked; and the exhibit will help members of the Legislature to judge of the motives and merit of the testimonials which certain companies—the Knickerbocker among them—have furnished in response to the Superintendent's circular.

But the division in the Assembly—83 to 27—conveys more than a rebuke to the department and a warning to the life companies. It is an intimation to the Insurance Committee that the old game by which that body has played into the hands of a corrupt department and mismanaged companies will not be tolerated this session. In the ordinary course of business, the Fish resolution might have been referred to the committee, if only as a matter of courtesy. Experience has shown, however, that the controlling purpose of the committee is either to interpose delays that are fatal to objects proposed, or so to change the nature of measures as to make them worthless. Two years ago, this was the case under the Chairmanship of Mr. Graham. No more honest man could have been appointed, nor one who worked more assiduously. The committee emasculated his bills in the interest of the lobby, and the little life that was left was extinguished in the Senate. Mr. Hepburn, the Chairman last year, could tell an equally disheartening tale. He began his work energetically, with excellent intentions, and with measures which, in the main, deserved support. But the rest of the committee was worse than a dead weight. It dared not resist reform openly, and it fell back on the old tactics. Good bills were mutilated or killed outright. The labors of the Chairman were wasted. The committee did the work of the companies and played into the hands of the department.

The composition of the present committee does not essentially differ from that of its predecessors. Gen. Sharpe has the good intentions of Messrs. Graham and Hepburn; and he has a reputation for force of character which forbids the supposition that he will submit quietly to the dilatory and dishonest tactics which have again and again destroyed confidence in the committee. Personally, he may well feel mortified at the result of his injudicious motion yesterday. If he interpret that result aright, however, he will find in it presumptive proof that a sufficient number of members are resolved to take insurance legislation into their hands, instead of allowing it to be controlled by a committee a majority of whose members are in league with the companies opposed to reform. The committee, in fact, has the full average of badness, and if its pretensions be acquiesced in we must abandon the hope of securing for the policy-holders and the public the protection they are entitled to. Gen. Sharpe will do his duty,—of that we have no doubt. We predict, however, that he will not have long to wait for the discovery that the committee has been appointed with a view to the furtherance of interests inimical to the policy-holders; and should he really desire to remove the evils of the existing system, he will avail himself of the spirit which yesterday voted down his proposition. There is hope for an earnest reformer when he can appeal from an untrustworty committee to the intelligence and independence of the Assembly.

So good a beginning on the part of 83 members seems to indicate that, in spite of the general composition of the committee, this session may witness substantial progress in the direction of amendment on the insurance question. Mr. Fish's resolution is leveled at the Knickerbocker Company. The information it demands will probably illustrate the importance of exacting from all the life companies the minute statements as to assets and expenditures which this journal has insisted upon as essential to safety. A Superintendent who discharged his duty would be in a position to unveil some of the mysteries which the companies' managers guard with suspicious jealousy. The primary mistake, however, is in the law, which does not adequately provide for the exaction of particulars that would enable any intelligent man to judge of a company's management and condition. Having dealt promptly with the Knickerbocker, now let the Assembly take up life insurance generally, and provide for a more thorough reckoning with the companies than is possible under the law as it stands. The information to be wrung from the Knickerbocker should be obtained regularly from all companies.

As regards the Insurance Department, it is satisfactory to know that a bill abolishing it will be introduced into the Assembly by a Republican member. The attempt of the Superintendent to postpone abolition by obtaining testimony from the officials of companies to whom the pretense of supervision affords convenient shelter, is too ludicrous to produce any appreciable impression. Quite enough of these testimonials has been communicated to the press to show how well the department and a certain class of companies understand the value of the service rendered by each to the other. Companies of this sort find Mr. Smyth's accommodating vigilance a convenient thing, and one which they are willing to pay for as well as puff; and he, in turn, parades their praise with a charming unconsciousness of its absurdity. We advise him not to seek a certificate from the victimized policy-holders of companies whose rottenness the department did not detect until insolvency had made it manifest. An investigation properly conducted would convince the Assembly that while mismanaged companies are anxious for the continuance of the department, their helpless policy-holders consider it a delusion and a snare.

A NATIONAL HEALTH BUREAU.

The Congressional committees appointed to inquire into and report upon the proper means of preventing the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases were expected to throw light upon the origin of the yellow fever scourge and to make suggestions for any legislation that might be practicable for the prevention of such visitations in future. But it was hardly supposed that they would undertake the erection of a new Government Bureau for the regulation of the sanitary condition of the whole country. They have, nevertheless, inspired a bill substantially for this purpose, which has been introduced into the Senate by Mr. Matthews and promptly referred to the special committee of that branch having the subject in charge. It is not easy to see how a bureau of this kind, constructed as proposed, can, within the limits of national authority, be of much more use than Mr. Le Duc's ornamental Department of Agriculture, so prolific of reports and garden seeds, but so utterly powerless to do anything useful. The proposed Health Bureau might possibly gather a deal of information more or less instructive, and of statistics more or less comprehensible, and diffuse them broadcast at the public expense. But we are inclined to think that the education of the public mind on sanitary matters can be quite as effectually promoted by other means. Agencies for such a purpose need to work among the people, and a national bureau, with bulky reports that nobody reads, would probably prove a clumsy contrivance for not doing it.

So far as concerns sanitary regulation and the enforcement of measures for promoting the public health, or even preventing the spread of epidemics, Congress has no authority to legislate beyond the province of its power to regulate commerce, and, of course, a national bureau could only operate within the limits of national legislation. The power to regulate commerce has been uniformly held to involve the right to maintain quarantine, for the purpose of preventing the introduction of infectious diseases, and this might perhaps be extended to any necessary interruption of intercourse between States. But, beyond mere quarantine regulation the National Government could not go, even if it were desirable. But it is very questionable whether it is a thing to be desired. Matters affecting the general health of the people, causes of disease and their removal, are in the strictest sense local, and can be most effectually dealt with by local agencies. Progress in sanitary science, and its practical application, has thus far been almost wholly confined to large cities. It begins where conditions most emphatically show its necessity, where local interests demand attention, and where knowledge and skill can be directly brought into requisition for its purposes and supported by a general sense of their need and their utility. From centres of activity and intelligence it spreads with more or less effect, and in several States, including Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut, and a few in the West and South, there has been a sufficient diffusion of knowledge on the subject to lead to the establishment of State Boards of Health. These are of value, owing to the fact that local authorities in the smaller towns seldom have any understanding or appreciation of the subject, and those of the larger cities are powerless to exercise jurisdiction even over their immediate surroundings. States are entirely competent to deal with the matter, and can do it to far better advantage than the nation.

The Quarantine laws might very likely be made more stringent and more widely and effectively operative. It is possible that they could secure a complete exclusion of epidemics of foreign origin, and prevent those that have a foothold in the country from being carried from one State to another. But the conditions which breed pestilence within the country or promote its spread in our cities and towns are beyond national control. They must be dealt with by the communities concerned. The loss and expense incurred through the yellow fever epidemic of last Summer teach us that the whole people have an interest and a very practical concern in the matter, and they are justified in any effort to bring Southern cities and Southern States to a sense of their duty to themselves and to the country. They may promote enlightenment and urge action which shall make New-Orleans and Memphis wholesome and healthy, but they cannot compel them to cleanse and purge their streets and habitations. It is for these and other cities, and the States in which they are located, to provide for their sanitary improvement and to establish regulations to prevent epidemics from springing up and spreading within their jurisdiction. The Federal Government can only protect them against the introduction of such plagues from without by the exercise of its authority over commercial intercourse. For this there is no need of a National Health Bureau, but only for a revision of our quarantine legislation and provision for its vigilant and effective execution, in accordance with the requirements of circumstances. Something might also be effected by international concert of action with those countries from which infection is liable to be brought.

THE RED PRODIGAL'S RETURN.

It is reported that the Cabinet came to no conclusion the other day when it was asked what should be done with Sitting Bull, but referred the question to the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War. There really ought to be no hesitation in this case. The impudent and crafty savage should be sent back to the Queen's dominions without a word of parley. He has elected to stay in Canada, and he derided and despised the embassy sent to him by the Government of the United States. Now he comes back and notifies the Government that he is ready to receive proposals for a final settlement. And it is gravely proposed in Cabinet council that two departments be authorized to perfect some scheme of adjustment. This mild-mannered treatment of the case is a fair example of the generosity, not to say pusillanimity, with which the red men are invariably managed by our paternal Government. It is as if the prodigal son, returning to his father's house, after stoning the old man and advertising him as a liar and a thief, should, "while yet a great way off," camp, and negotiate for the exact number of fatlings to be killed in honor of his consenting to go on and make himself at home.

Sitting Bull was fairly beaten last year, and when he found himself and his band surrounded where there was no chance of escape, unless he fled into Canada, he sent in for terms of surrender. "Of course," he said, "the Great Father is too rich to expect the Indians to give up their poor little ponies and old guns;" but on any other basis they were ready to discuss a proposition to quit fighting. The ponies and guns so disparagingly alluded to, were the fighting material of a band of Sioux who had desolated the border, and had kept the Army on the alert for several months. The cunning Chief, seeing that further resistance was futile, was willing to suspend hostilities, provided he was allowed to keep the instruments necessary to resume war operations when he was ready to begin again. Of course, this offer was declined, and the whole band fled across the border. There was a general expression of satisfaction that we were rid of such a troublesome enemy, and, as we have always been told that the Indians were as happy and contented under Canadian rule as so many "dead-head" boarders at a hotel, we were glad for the persecuted Indians. Poor fellows! They had found peace at last, and they were to become the fortunate objects of a British Indian policy which, in the language of the medical fraternity, "never lost a patient." The Canadian newspapers were particularly severe upon the mismanagement of Indian affairs in this country, which had driven out such a useful and ornamental member of society as Sitting Bull. "Now observe," they seemed to say, "and we will show you how to govern Indians."

Precisely what was the demeanor of Sitting Bull's band we have never heard, but it was not long before the Canadian authorities began to exhibit symptoms of uneasiness. Things were not altogether serene in the region where the Sioux band were encamped to be manipulated by the patent British sedative policy for the pacification of the Indians. The Mounted Police were kept busy, and it was remarked that the Indians from the United States had uncommonly healthy appetites. The Canadian uneasiness increased, and an official communication from the Dominion Government to ours informed us that the band had expressed a desire to return to their paternal acres—acres, be it remarked, which they had owned ever since the discovery of America. The Times took the liberty of saying at that time that this was a most incredible statement, and that it would turn out that the wish was father to the thought with those who had originated it. Nevertheless, a commission was sent to Canada to present to the Sioux the terms of the United States Government. These terms were the same that had been previously offered and declined. The Indians were to give up their "poor little ponies and old guns" as an earnest of their peaceful intentions. To this Sitting Bull returned a scornful and contemptuous reply. He was on British soil, surrounded by British officers, and he could be as insolent as he pleased. The British authorities, it must be admitted, were anxious to get rid of Sitting Bull, and they reminded him, that if he elected to stay longer in Canada, he would become a ward of her Gracious Majesty the Queen of England; and that if he should hereafter cross the boundary line, he would be regarded as an alien enemy in the United States, liable to be pursued by the remonstrances of the British Government. With the braggadocio and bombast of one of Cooper's theatrical Indians, Sitting Bull denounced the Americans as "men with forked tongues"—liars and cheats whom he was glad to be rid of forever. Henceforth, he was one of the children of the Great Mother; he was done with the Great Father at Washington, who was really no better than he should be.

Yet Sitting Bull is back again with all his host. He was told, last Summer, that he must come back as an enemy if he did not accept the terms that were offered him. It was his last chance. It has not yet been developed whether he comes in peace or in war. He is probably a repentant prodigal. He has sighed, in the pastoral simplicity of Canadian forests, for the flesh-pots of the United States Indian Bureau and for the improved fire-arms of the United States Army. He knows that no race of men on the face of the earth are so petted and pampered as the North American Indians. And while discontentedly chewing the husks which the Canadians gave him to eat, he has reflected that the Indian Agents of his Great Father's house have bread enough and to spare, although it may be sometimes moldy and sometimes short in weight. But he has come back, through Canada, just as a great many other prodigals came back, along toward the close of the late civil war. What shall we do with him? He has borne himself intolerably, before now. We cannot afford to quarrel with him. "Give him a cold potato and let him go."

Judge Gilbert has accompanied his decision in the case of certain policy-holders of the defunct National Life Insurance Company against State Superintendent Smyth with some rather strange remarks as to the character of the summary proceedings for the disposal of the assets of the company, which were instituted by that official. He characterizes the ex parte application made to Judge Westbrook as "contrary to the first principles of justice," and the granting of that order comes under his general characterization of the summary proceeding as "a still clearer violation of the rights and interests both of the State and the policy-holders." Judge Gilbert lays down the very sound rule that the State is the real depository of the trust funds held in behalf of insurance policy-holders, the Superintennent being merely the agent of the State. Any action to wind up the trust must be prosecuted by the law officer of the State, acting both for the Trustee and the parties on whose behalf the trust has been accepted. The injunction against the Superintendent, and the opinion accompanying it, are solid contributions toward a more scrupulous enforcement of the laws affecting the business of life insurance.

Edward Payson Weston has set out on his 2,000-mile walk on the public roads of England, having wagered £100 to £500 that he will complete it in 1,000 hours, and also deliver a lecture in each of the principal towns he passes through. As he will not walk on Sunday—there is piety in his pedestrianism, or is it pedestrianism in his piety?—he will have to accomplish something more than fifty miles a day for six days of each week. He may do it, but the fact that he is trying it must shake confidence in him; for he has been chiefly noted for failures. No man we can remember has attempted so much with so unfortunate results. Once in a while he is successful in his undertakings; but his defeat is usually a foregone conclusion. He appears to have plenty of enterprise, energy, and ambition, but his talent for failure is not equaled by any American of the day. He should learn either to achieve more or undertake less. We wish him success; we always like to hear of novelties.

A table of wages and the cost of living, with the price of staple articles of commerce, going back as far as the year 1200, has been published lately. It shows that wages during the thirteenth century were about 50 cents a week. In the next century they advanced some 15 cents, and continued to advance slowly until, in the last century, they had reached $1 87. The average for farm labor at present is $3 80 per week. Wheat in the thirteenth century averaged 71 cents, or eight and a half days' labor, a bushel. Now wheat is worth, wholesale, about $1 46 a bushel, or two and a half days' labor. In six centuries meat has nearly trebled in price; but wages have increased more than seven-fold. Thus it will be perceived that the improvement in pay for labor, while it may better the laborer's condition, does not tend to increase his contentment. Subsistence is surely easier than of old, though the laborer is not satisfied to live as his ancestors lived. It is with him as it is with all of us—his desires have augmented more rapidly than the means to gratify them. Our wants are innumerable, and, to a large extent, artificial. Luxuries, as they were once considered, have grown to be necessities. We think sometimes that we can dispense with necessities, but luxuries are essential not only to our contentment, but to any tolerable degree of well-being.

A French Marshal once defined Algerian warfare as "a succession of tricks," and the inhabitants of the Sahara border have certainly few equals in cunning. On one or two occasions, however, they have found themselves fairly overmatched by the disciplined craft of civilization, as the following story sufficiently shows: Some little time ago a friendly Arab was found murdered near one of the French military posts, and suspicion at once fell upon the sheikh of a neighboring tribe, who was known to be the dead man's mortal enemy. As he was a man of proverbial courage and ferocity, as well as extremely popular with his own tribe, there seemed to be no way of taking him except by armed force, which was thought too hazardous in the disturbed state of the country. A veteran French agent, however, undertook the difficult task, and, riding alone into the Arab camp, saluted the shiekh, with whom he was personally acquainted, and informed him, with a great show of righteous indignation, that a vagabond Arab, from some small tribe which the shiekh held in special contempt, had dared to accuse the latter of stealing a camel from him. If, said he, the shiekh would condescend to accompany him to the fort, the charge might be at once disproved, and the slanderer punished as he deserved. The haughty Arab, stung to the quick by the mere thought of such an insult, hurried off with him, accompanied by only two followers, and, being confronted with his supposed accuser, at once proved an alibi. Just then the Frenchman looked him searchingly in the face, and said, with startling suddenness: "Where were you on such a day, at such a time?" (naming the hour of the murder.) The culprit, thunderstruck at finding himself so unexpectedly entrapped, betrayed his guilt by a few incoherent words, and was instantly arrested and sentenced.

That august body the Diet of the Grand Duchy of Brunswick is, at present, occupied in discussing a law which shall furnish the country with a provisory regency in the case of the reigning Duke dying without having made the necessary arrangements with respect to the succession. The question is urgent, for the Duke is 73 years old, and it cannot be presumed that the heir apparent, the Duke of Cumberland, will be allowed to take the reins without foreign intervention, as he has solemnly protested against the establishment, not only of the North-German Union but, also, of the German Empire; that is, not only against the annexation of Hanover, but also against all those military and commercial conventions which place Brunswick in such an intimate relation to Prussia. What gives the discussion a peculiar zest is the circumstance that none of the true and decisive reasons for the establishment of a regency can be spoken of. The Brunswickers love to remain Brunswickers, an independent nation, with a crown of their own, but, of course, it would not do to say in the face of Emperor William that they hate to become Prussians. They would like very much to have the Duke of Cumberland for their sovereign, because he is the richest man in Europe, and would, no doubt, keep the university, the library, the theatres, parks, palaces, stables, &c., in splendid repair; but, of course, it would not do to tell the Duke that they like him best on account of his money. Worst of all, everybody in Brunswick knows that the Prussian commander in the fortress of Magdeburg has received orders to march into Brunswick and take possession of the country the moment he hears that the reigning Duke has died; but, of course, it would not do to insinuate that Prussia was able to commit such an act.

The black death, which has again appeared in some parts of Russia, has proved very destructive, and caused the greatest alarm. This is the same disease which, in the fourteenth century, desolated the globe, and it gets its name from the black spots, symptomatic of a putrid decomposition, that show themselves at one of its stages on the skin of the sufferer. It is thought to have had its origin in China in 1333, some 15 years before its outbreak in Europe, and it raged for 25 years, while droughts, famines, floods, earthquakes that swallowed towns and mountains, and swarms of locusts spread devastation everywhere. During the same period, Europe had as many abnormal conditions as the East. The order of Nature appeared to be reversed. The seasons were at various times inverted; thunder-storms were frequent in midwinter, and volcanoes, long considered extinct, burst forth afresh. The theory is that the extraordinary activity of the earth, accompanied by decomposition of vast organic masses—myriads of locusts, brutes, and bodies of human beings—produced some change in the atmosphere inimical to life. Some writers say that the impure air was actually visible as it approached with its burden of death. The plague owed its extension almost wholly to infection and contagion. Three years passed from the date of its appearance in Constantinople before it crept by a huge circle to the Russian territories. Statistics were not obtainable then, but it is estimated that in China alone 13,000,000 people died, and in the remainder of the East 24,000,000, while in Europe 25,000,000 souls perished, making a grand and terrible total of 52,000,000. Although there is little danger of the spread of the pest to Western Europe—for many generations it has been confined to the East—it is not strange that the Russians should be startled by the ravages the black death has already made. Persons attacked with it are said to die like flies, and the ignorant and superstitious peasantry are so terrified by it that many are thought to have perished of pure fright. Fortunately, the laws of health and the peculiarities of disease are much better understood now than in centuries gone by.

A large list might be made out of eminent men who have died from not eating luncheon. Pitt ruined himself by long fasts, while immersed in affairs and oblivious of all else, and, to come nearer home, it was in the same manner that President Orton, of the Western Union, did himself incalculable harm. If the machine is not kept well oiled it will inevitably run down. When we see men long past middle life able to cope with those in their prime, we may rest assured that they have not been negligent of their physical needs. Pitt died at 47, Byron, who played tricks with his health, at 36. Palmerston, who began official life nearly as young as Pitt, but played a noble knife and fork, died in harness at 80, and rode 20 miles the year of his death. And as for Bismarck's appetite, his biographer has given us ample information as to its marvelous excellence, and the extraordinary care which, whether in peace or war, the Prince takes to cater for it. No luncheons are omitted there. Some of the hardest worked business men in London largely add to their days by keeping hunters at a point a few miles distant; and taking a "ride to hounds" once or twice a week; and now that we have rapid transit, New-York business men might easily do something of the kind by keeping a saddle-horse in some neighboring village, and getting a ride in the surrounding country every other day. This is far better than pounding perpetually around the Park, and by keeping a horse a week or two in one place and a week or two in another, they would command variety and get acquainted with a large range of the delightful country which surrounds us. Nature is sternly revengeful, and those who will not take trouble to please her may rest assured that they will always have to pay the penalty. That this fact should not, even in the nineteenth century, have been thoroughly realized by man is a strong proof of his being still deeply impregnated with that foolishness which Solomon so constantly harps upon and bewails.

BROADWAY TRAFFIC.

P. T. BARNUM'S PLEA FOR A SURFACE RAILROAD.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I have always been ardently and persistently opposed to a surface railroad on Broadway. When I kept the American Museum, on the present site of the Herald Building, I had several consultations with Mr. A. T. Stewart on this subject, and on one occasion I induced my friend John N. Genin, the hatter, to accompany Mr. Stewart to Albany to oppose in the Legislature such a proposed railroad. But circumstances have materially changed since that time. Omnibuses have become obsolete in all Eastern cities, except New-York, the City of quick transit railroads, which make the small pace of these lumbering vehicles the more objectionable. They blockade Broadway five times more than a double-track surface railroad would. The private carriages which 15 or 20 years ago were driven in great numbers as few down as Canal-street, now seldom appear in that vicinity. From Union-square to the Battery (and especially to Canal-street) a stupor seems to have settled on Broadway, whereas, above Union square, where Broadway is many feet narrower, the surface railroad makes business lively, and buildings command good rents. I am convinced that a surface railroad on Broadway is an absolute necessity to the public generally, and to every property-holder from the Battery to Fourteenth-street. I am gratified to know that my opinion is shared by such Broadway property-owners and merchants as the Goelets, Lorillards, Brooks Brothers, W. & J. Sloane, the carpet men, Baldwin, the clothier, James A. Hearn & Son, John Daniell & Son, and many others between Bleecker and Fourteenth-street, as well as many among the wholesale houses below Canal-street. I own 110 feet on Broadway, on the north-east corner of Houston-street, 200 feet deep to Crosby-street, and I submit that it is of great interest to the City Treasury that millions of dollars' worth of Broadway property, which is now half paralyzed and can pay but small taxes, should be electrified into life and value by what has proved in all large cities, and in other parts of New-York City, the most effectual method, viz., a surface railroad.

REARING BLACK BASS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I see quite frequently statements made in fish reports and in the public prints that black bass cannot be hatched artificially, owing to the adhesive nature of their eggs. I beg to say that black bass can be hatched, but I do not think the puny fish would prosper, after hatching, for it is just then that they need a mother's care. If I was not pretty positive on this point, that maternal care is one of the necessities for hatching black bass, I should have been hatching them long ago. All fish making their nests and casting their eggs in fixed places, the spawners lying over the eggs as it were, fanning them with their tails, are indued with the instinct of caring for their young. If all fish were hatched the same way, there would be no need of hatching any fish artificially. Now, here is something quite remarkable. Fish that are tended by the mother have no yolk-sack, and it is the mother who teaches them how to feed; while fish that require no mother have a yolk sack that will support them when young from 6 to 40 days. By the time the sack is absorbed, they know how to take care of themselves, or have learned how to feed.

SETH GREEN.

Rochester, Monday, Jan. 20, 1879.

THE STRENGTH OF THE ARMY.

Washington, Jan. 22.—The Secretary of War has sent to the House Committee on Military Affairs, by request, a statement showing the actual strength of the regular Army at a stated period in each year from the beginning of the Government to the present time, from which it appears that the strength of the Army, both officers and men, from 1789 to 1794, was about 3,500. From that time to 1812 it varied from 2,600 to 6,600, but in 1813 it was increased to 19,000, in consequence

A DAY'S WORK AT ALBANY.

SUBJECTS WHICH THE ASSEMBLY DISCUSSED.

OPPOSING AN ELEVATED ROAD EAST OF THIRD-AVENUE—SPEAKER ALVORD'S APPOINTMENTS—DR. HAYES' PLAN FOR SECURING ECONOMY IN THIS CITY.

ALBANY, Jan. 22.—Mr. Eidman, in introducing a bill sent to him by his constituents in the Tenth Assembly District, prohibiting the building of any elevated railway east of the Bowery and Third-avenue, explained that he was not committed to the bill. It was sent up from a meeting at which Judge Dinkel was present, and is said to have the approval of many property-owners. Mr. McDonough introduced a bill to prohibit the letting out of convict labor in prisons, and providing that convicts shall not be employed in prisons in branches of manufacture that can interfere with outside labor. The Judiciary Committee reported their first bill, one to authorize the City of New-York to sell a strip of land on the north side of the new Post Office Building. The report was favorable.

Speaker Alvord announced his appointments this morning. At no time since the Legislature met has the Assembly listened more intently to hear the Clerk's voice. The "swearing-train," which left this afternoon with the disappointed place-seekers on board, was an unusually heavy one. Several changes were made in Clerk Johnson's desk. Mr. Butler, last year clerk of Speaker Husted, is retained by Speaker Alvord. M. J. Farrell becomes the Clerk of the Committee on Affairs of Cities, and his appointment is regarded as a thoroughly creditable and deserved one. George P. Nelson, for several years Speaker Husted's clerk, is made Clerk of the Committees on Public Health, Militia and Civil Divisions.

Dr. I. I. Hayes this morning offered a resolution, with several preambles, the purpose of which is to secure an examination by the Committee on the Affairs of Cities, in order to ascertain whether reductions cannot be made in the pay of employes of the City. The resolution presented a scale upon which it was suggested the reductions might be made. The scale provides that salaries of $12,000 and upward shall be reduced 30 per cent.; of more than $8,000 and less than $12,000, 25 per cent.; more than $5,000 and less than $8,000, 20 per cent.; more than $3,000 and less than $5,000, 15 per cent.; more than $2,000 and less than $3,000, 12 per cent.; more than $1,000 and less than $2,000, 10 per cent. These reductions are to be by heads of departments, and the Controller is to pay the amount certified, less the reductions, and all balance percentage of savings shall be certified by the Controller to the Board of Apportionment, which shall deduct from the amount to be raised by taxation the amount so certified by the Controller in the next tax levy. With a view to further economy, provision is to be made, in a bill to be reported, for the consolidation of bureaus of departments in which a like business is done, and for the discharge of unnecessary employes. Mr. Grady rose to debate this resolution, and it went over under the rule.

There was a long debate over Mr. Flynn's resolution calling for information regarding the Manhattan Savings Institution. Mr. Flynn declared that he only desired that the depositors in the bank should be satisfied with its condition. Mr. Strahan and Mr. Grady deprecated any disturbance of the bank, the latter saying that its affairs were being well managed, in the interest of the depositors, by the Trustees. The resolution was finally referred to the Committee on Banks.

Mr. Hepburn, Chairman of the Apportionment Committee, asked for the appointment of a clerk and messenger for that committee. As the committee had been asked to make a report within a limited time, he was anxious to begin work immediately, being in hopes that the task allotted to his committee should be performed. His resolution was referred to the Special Committee on Expenditures of the House.

SENATORS DISCUSSING FINANCE.

MR. M'CARTHY'S OBJECTION TO THE RESUMPTION RESOLUTIONS AND THE DEBATE CAUSED BY IT—SOME OF THE NEW BILLS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 22.—The joint resolution congratulating the country on the resumption of specie payments, the consideration of which was postponed last week at the request of Senator McCarthy, was taken up in the Senate to-day, and gave rise to a long discussion of a political and historical character touching the finances of the country, which would have been more appropriate for the halls of Congress than for the Legislature of this State. Mr. McCarthy's objection to the resolutions as they come from the Assembly was that they characterized the irredeemable currency of the past as a "calamity." He could not consent to stigmatize as a "calamity" that which enabled the country to preserve itself from destruction. It might suit the Democratic Party, which was now, as it was before and during the war, bound hand and foot to the South; but it was not the language to be used by Republicans. He proceeded to eulogize the Republican Administration of the National Government, which, by its wise legislation, had fulfilled the promise of the nation, and brought this irredeemable currency to a par with gold. He quoted from a speech of Senator Raines, made last Winter, in which he sought to throw obstacles in the way of resumption by arguing that it could not safely be brought about without further legislation, and the remonetization of silver.

Mr. Raines replied, charging that the general scope and tenor of his speech last Winter had been misrepresented in the extract read by Mr. McCarthy. He never opposed resumption, but he did think, and still thought, that needless distress and ruin had been brought upon the business interests of the country by the policy of the Republican Party in forcing resumption before the country was prepared for it.

Mr. Pomeroy followed with a speech showing a thorough knowledge of the financial legislation of the last 20 years, and demonstrating the falsity of the charge made by the Democrats against the Republican Party that they had demonetized silver. He said that silver was demonetized by the Democratic Party in Congress long before the war, with the exception of a small amount coined in the shape of the 412-grain dollar, which was not sufficient in quantity, and never had been, to make any appreciable effect upon the circulation. There was not enough of it, in fact, to supply the nurses who sought it for the purpose of hanging it around the necks of the babies of the country, and a man might have thousands of business transactions without ever encountering a dollar of it. And yet all the talk about the Republican Party having demonetized the "dollar of the daddies" had this extent—no more.

Senator St. John made a sensible speech, urging the passage of the resolutions, which, he said, ought to receive the vote of every Senator in the circle without distinction of party.

The resolutions, after being amended to avoid the objection of Mr. McCarthy, were then unanimously adopted.

Among the new bills introduced was one by Senator Goebel requiring applicants for notaries public and Commissioners of Deeds to be examined by County Judges, or in the City of New-York by the Chief-Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, as to their qualifications, and forbidding the appointment of notaries and Commissioners hereafter unless their fitness for their duties is approved by the examiners.

Senator Robertson's bill, enlarging the powers of the Commissioners for procuring an additional supply of water for New-York, was discussed in committee, and ordered to a third reading. Senator Ecclesine opposed several sections of the bill without effect, and finally withdrew further opposition, remarking that he would submit his arguments in opposition to the bill to the Executive after it came into his hands.

Judge Robertson—I presume your efforts in that quarter will be more successful than they were last Winter.

Mr. Ecclesine—I trust so.

The Senate, in executive session, confirmed the nomination of D. D. Wylie as Commissary-General of State.

LATEST NEWS FROM HAYTI.

HAYTI, Jan. 10.—Outbreaks are feared. Business is quiet. Diplomatic intercourse with France has been resumed, the Government having acknowledged the loan made by France to the late Government of President Dominique. The sanction of the Chambers is expected when they convene. Ex-President Geffrard died at Jamaica on Dec. 31.

YALE'S MAGAZINE EDITORS.

NEW-HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 22.—At a meeting of the Junior Class of Yale College to-day the following were elected editors of the Yale Literary Magazine for the coming year: Alfred B. Nichols, New-Haven; William M. Hall, Ashfield, Mass.; Doremus Scudder, Brooklyn, N. Y.; John A. Amundson, Rochester, Minn.; Edward F. Green, Oakland, Cal.

A CHILD BURNED TO DEATH.

Ida Keenan, a child 2 years of age, living at One Hundred and Forty-first-street, near Locust-avenue, while playing around the stove yesterday had her clothes ignited, and was burned so severely that she died in a few minutes.

A BURGLAR ARRESTED.

The residence of Mary Powers, at No. 308 East Forty-fifth street, was entered, Saturday night last, by James Byron, of No. 306 East Forty-fifth-street, and a companion, who stole therefrom a trunk containing $100 worth of clothing. Emboldened by their success, the burglars went back after a second quantity, and were seen by a lodger, whom they told to "never mind, it's all right," and who, upon that assurance, turned over and went to sleep, allowing the thieves to pursue their work unmolested. Next morning the robbery was discovered, and complaint was made to the Police. Last night Detectives McGowan and Tooker, of the Nineteenth Precinct, arrested Byron, and the lodger whom he and his companion had aroused identified him, and he was locked up.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE ENGLISH GLEE CLUB.

The matinée of the English Glee Club at Chickering Hall yesterday was an entertainment that afforded much pleasure to a numerous audience, principally composed of the gentler sex, to which fact it is perhaps due that the applause was not more vigorous. These English Glee Club concerts, which Mr. Aiken and his associates occasionally give, are so good of their kind that it seems ungracious to mention any defects in the performance, and it is indeed but seldom that fault is to found with them. Yesterday's programme was, however, of a sombre hue throughout, the effect being more quieting than enlivening. The absence of Miss Beebe, who is without her peer in the concerted music usually given, and the evident cold of Mr. Woodruff, the first tenor, undoubtedly marred the general enjoyment; but, notwithstanding these drawbacks, the concert was an exceedingly good one, and was worthy of much praise. The male quartets were not up to the high standard of the club, owing to Mr. Woodruff's unfortunate cold, and the mixed-voice songs suffered from the fact that Miss Hubbell, who was Miss Beebe's substitute, was not thoroughly accustomed to singing them with her fellow-artists. However, at any entertainment where a less exacting standard is followed the performance would have been considered a success. A male-voice part-song by Goldbeck, entitled "Heavenly Serenade," was one of the most difficult tasks which the club had to meet, and it seemed a pity that so much labor should be thrown away on such a composition. It is a sickly, sentimental song, full of musical intricacies, but lacking the manliness which a male-voice quartet demands, and which is not inconsistent with delicacy and sentiment and an all-pervading pianissimo. The club were encored in Abt's quartet "Good Night," and responded with Zollner's familiar song, "The Toast," in which Mr. Baird's telling voice was conspicuous in the solos. The other part-songs do not call for special mention, and were only fairly given. It was in the solos that the principal interest of the concert was centred. Miss Finch sang Dudley Buck's "Expectancy" surprisingly well, with the grace and finish of an artist, and only lacked power to make it a perfect performance. She was deservedly encored, and sang Duggan's "Many a Time and Oft." Miss Hubbell's clear soprano voice appeared at the best advantage in S. P. Warren's beautiful song, "I Love my Love." Both the song and the singer were worthy of commendation and the applause which was liberally bestowed. Miss Hubbell, in response to the demands of the audience, sang the "Lilly and Violet," by the same composer.

Mr. Aiken gave a song by Reissiger, "Roland's Rock," in which he was accompanied by Mr. Warren on the organ, and Mr. George Ellard made the principal success of the concert in an "Ave Maria," by Abt, with the accompaniment of a male quartet. Mr. Ellard was in excellent voice, and sang his part beautifully. Mr. Florio contributed Bennett's "Rondo Piacevole," op. 25, to the programme, and played the accompaniments in the graceful and artistic manner his hearers are accustomed to. The next matinée of the series is announced for Feb. 19.

"CARMEN" AT BOOTH'S THEATRE.

The largest audience of the season was present last evening at the second performance of Bizet's "Carmen," with Miss Kellogg in the principal rôle. The opera, on the whole, was very well presented, but, like other representations by Mr. Strakosch's company, it was uneven, and ranged from the sublime to the ridiculous. Miss Kellogg has an excellent conception of the part of Carmen, and acts it with the finish of an accomplished artist. She would sing it better if she had been endowed by nature with a mezzo-soprano voice, with the tone in the lower register which so much of Carmen's music requires. She did the work in a conscientious spirit and merited the applause she received. Mr. Adams was again under a cloud as to his vocal powers, from which he only occasionally emerged, but he acted the part with spirit. Signor Pantaleoni gave the Toreador's song in the second act in a brilliant and effective manner, and roused the enthusiasm of the house, but his subsequent performance was not up to the musical standard which this scena led his hearers to expect. Of the other parts, it may be said that they were generally rendered acceptably. Miss Lancaster being a good Michaela, and receiving the hearty applause of the house. Mr. Behrens allowed the orchestra to play pretty much according to their individual fancies, which fact naturally interfered with the smoothness of the performance. To-night "Il Trovatore" is to be given, with Mme. Ilma de Murska as Leonora.

GENERAL MENTION.

At the Standard Theatre "H. M. S. Pinafore" has proved, as anticipated, a great popular success. The performance, which now runs very smoothly, is witnessed nightly by crowded audiences.

The last performance of "Les Fourchambault," at the Broadway Theatre, will be given this evening. To-morrow night and on Saturday the Lingards will appear in Byron's amusing comedy, "Our Boys."

A combination concert of considerable elaboration, both vocal and instrumental, will be given at Steinway Hall next Tuesday evening. It will need as many as four conductors. The strongest name on the programme is that of Mlle. De Murska.

The third concert of the Chickering Hall symphony series will take place on Saturday evening, and the concert programme will be publicly rehearsed this afternoon. Mrs. J. K. Barton and Mr. Hoffman are the soloists, and the orchestra is under the direction of Mr. Gotthold Carlberg.

The principal members of the new Fifth-Avenue Theatre Company, who are to appear next Saturday evening in "Dr. Clyde," are the following: Messrs. Charles Fisher, G. D. Chaplin, Harry Lee, Owen Fawcett, Frank Hardenberg, Thomas Jefferson, J. G. Peakes, and Misses Ellie Wilton, Laura Don, Minnie Monk, Agnes Elliott, Mrs. Richmond, and Mrs. Hill.

A very attractive benefit performance will be given this afternoon at Niblo's. The beneficiaire is the widow of the unfortunate Police Officer Furness. The performance will comprise an act of "Ben McCullough," an act of "Mother and Son," an act of some favorite comedy, and various other attractions. Several leading members of the Union-Square and Wallack's Theatre companies will take part in this entertainment.

OBITUARY.

JOHN P. M'COWN.

John P. McCown died at Little Rock, Ark., yesterday, of pneumonia. He was born in Tennessee, and was appointed to the Military Academy from that State in 1835. He was graduated, tenth in his class, on July 1, 1840, and between that date and May 17, 1861, served in the Fourth Artillery, rising to the rank of Captain, reaching that position in 1855. He did good service during the Mexican War, being engaged in the battles of Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, and Monterey, the seige of Vera Cruz, the battle of Cerro Gordo, and the assault and capture of the City of Mexico. He afterward served on frontier and garrison duty. He resigned on May 17, 1861, and joined in the rebellion, being appointed a Major-General.

OBITUARY NOTES.

J. B. Sheffield, a large paper manufacturer at Saugerties, died at noon yesterday, at the age of 75 years, of congestion caused by heart difficulty. He leaves a wife and eight children.

Hon. John J. Parry, of Rome, died Tuesday night, at the age of 51 years. He was a prominent contractor, County Treasurer for nine years, and a member of the Assembly in 1873.

A NEW WITNESS FOR MRS. COBB.

NEW-LONDON, Conn., Jan. 22.—Evidence which will affect a new trial, if granted, of Mrs. Cobb, is believed to have been discovered. The Telegram will publish on Thursday the sworn statement of a woman residing in another part of the State, to the effect that while riding with Charles H. Cobb, Jr., one day last Spring he told her under a pledge of secrecy that he was in the habit of taking Fowler's solution of arsenic medicinally. The woman kept silence during the trial, partly through a dread of being a witness and partly through a belief that Mrs. Cobb would be acquitted. If a new trial is granted to Mrs. Cobb, this woman will testify, providing her evidence is declared admissible.

MONTREAL, Quebec, Jan. 22.—The workmen employed in the pottery works at St. John, Quebec, have struck in consequence of a reduction of 15 per cent. in wages.

THE BIGGEST BILLIARD RUN

SLOSSON THE VICTOR.

HE BEATS SEXTON AND PLAYS A SUPERB "NURSING" GAME—ALBERT GARNIER'S EXCITING STRUGGLE WITH THOMAS GALLAGHER—THE FRENCHMAN DEFEATED BY ONLY THIRTEEN POINTS.

The third day of the Brunswick & Balke Championship Tournament was marked yesterday by two of the finest displays of skill at billiards that have probably ever been witnessed in this City. The great hall of Cooper Institute was crowded in the evening with ladies and gentlemen, who attended to witness the game between George F. Slosson and William Sexton, which resulted in a brilliant victory for the young Chicagoan, who made the greatest run on record in this country—441 caroms—by the finest rail "nursing." In the afternoon Albert Garnier and Thomas F. Gallagher engaged in a most interesting contest, that ended in a victory for Gallagher after a very close and exciting struggle. When Garnier and Gallagher strung for lead in the afternoon game, both the white balls rolled back, and laid tight against the top cushion, necessitating a second string for lead, which Garnier won. He made a counting stroke on the ivories, and played them gracefully and well for 42. Gallagher then missed, and the lithe Frenchman played several shots for position, and brought the tiny spheres together on the side rail, where they broke away, and he played some brilliant "massé," "draw," and "cushion" shots, to bring them again under controll, but retired after making 39 caroms. His graceful manipulation of the cue, his brilliant shots, won for him the admiration of the spectators. Gallagher was nervous at the start, but in his sixth inning he got the balls together on the right-side rail, after a number of difficult shots, and one lucky "draw," which was a "double-chance" shot, and began to "nurse" them delicately, playing them skillfully toward the top of the table. They "froze" on the ninety-seventh shot, and he retired after having brought his score one above that of his adversary, who had counted 105. He played several innings thereafter with much skill and judgment, although his runs were impaired by bad luck in "freezing." But his adversary was equally unlucky, the balls resisting his efforts to coax them into position, and causing him to grow nervous after a while. Gallagher kept steadily gaining on him, however, and at the close of the fifteenth inning stood 300 to the Frenchman's 188. Garnier took off his coat and elaborate watch and chains, and strove desperately to gain control over the refractory balls, but, although he made many brilliant shots, Gallagher kept running toward the home stretch steadily, playing a remarkably fine "open-table" game, which he at times varied with delicate "nursing." In his eighteenth inning he played a "nurse" game, in which he displayed brilliant skill and admirable judgment, that netted him 181 points, and he retired amid the plaudits of the spectators, his score being 484 to Garnier's 212. But now came a check to his progress, and Garnier, fired with a resolution to do die with or win, began playing in spite of that brilliant play of which all experts admit he is undisputed master. With odds against him over two to one, he picked up his cue and played a very pretty run of 50, slipping up on a very difficult "rail" carom, and his next inning added a neat 45 to his score, following it in his twenty-third inning with 38, while the spectators looked on with rapt interest. Little by little he was gaining in his up-hill fight, and his sixty-fifth inning played 61 as pretty billiards as could be witnessed in any tournament, his opponent meantime beginning to lose the "nerve" with which he had been playing. Closer and closer he crept to his adversary, and he made a brilliant run of 41 the excitement of the spectators rose to a fever heat, and as, with two splendid runs of 30 and 70, he brought his score up within 13 of his opponent's count of 587, the interest of the spectators reached the highest pitch, and found voice in cheers and applause. Garnier had now but 23 to go to Gallagher's 13. Garnier brought his score up in two innings to 587, and was "kissed" out on a "round-the-table" shot, leaving a most difficult shot to Gallagher, who had four to go. The St. Louis expert made a brilliant counting stroke, and closed the game, beating Garnier 13 points. Though beaten, Garnier's defeat was better than a victory, for his play during the last innings far outshone that of his opponent, who, with the lead he had, ought to have beaten the Frenchman at least 200 points. There is no disputing, however, that the game is a great one for Gallagher to win. Appended is the score:

Gallagher—0, 0, 3, 2, 5, 96, 0, 24, 5, 48, 5, 34, 17, 53, 3, 0, 181, 8, 20, 20, 6, 8, 23, 0, 4, 0, 2, 13, 1, 0, 1, 7, 4—600.

Garnier—12, 39, 2, 21, 1, 0, 2, 17, 2, 11, 12, 15, 13, 10, 4, 5, 15, 4, 10, 50, 45, 38, 1, 69, 1, 41, 7, 30, 70, 6, 2, 1, 0—587.

Winner's average, 17 32-34; loser's, 17 2-34.

Best runs—Gallagher, 181, 96, 68; Garnier, 70, 69, 50.

Umpires—Mr. D. Pulsifer for Gallagher, Mr. Newburger for Garnier.

Referee, Michael Geary; marker, G. H. Ellis.

Time of game—3 hours and 20 minutes.

The contest between William Sexton and George F. Slosson, which had been looked forward to as one of the brilliant features of the tournament, was opened in the evening, with Mr. Geary as referee, and Mr. W. Vance as Sexton's umpire, Slosson acting as his own umpire. The two players chatted together pleasantly, and when, gong being called at 8:25 o'clock, Slosson won the lead, but failed to count, as did Sexton. Slosson then gathered the balls at the bottom of the right side rail in two shots, and then began some very careful and pretty "nursing," netting 34. A number of innings followed before either competitor got into trim, but at length Slosson worked the balls across to the top of the right side rail again, in his sixth inning, and began another "nurse" toward the bottom of the table, playing with much grace and delicacy. The balls "broke" on the sixty-eighth shot, and he retired after scoring 3 more caroms, his score standing 129 to Sexton's 18. Two innings later he began more clock-work "nurse" caroms, and did not cease his brilliant play upon the rail until the balls "froze" on the ninety-seventh shot. He then made a counting stroke from the string, and played several fine position shots, his one hundredth shot being a beautifully-executed three-cushion carom from a difficult position, that yielded him a fine position on the bottom rail, and he resumed his "nursing." He crossed to the right side rail, down which the ivories rolled slowly with a constant clicking, obedient to the gentle tap of the player's French cue. He turned the top corner very skillfully, and with 209, and ended in the spheres down the rail, seeming to exercise a magician's control over their motion. Another corner was turned with equal skill, and down the left side rail the ivories rolled gently or quickly, as the player chose; 225—250—300 were counted, and still the balls obeyed the player's will; 327 are counted, and another corner is turned, and the spheres are clicking along the bottom rail like the pendulum of a clock. Three hundred and fifty are gathered in, and still another corner is turned and the ivories cross to the right side rail and begin again their monotonous "click," "click," "click;" 351—375—400 are counted, and the enthusiastic spectators cheer to the echo, while the young expert rests on his cue to receive the ovation. Four hundred and five—410—415—418, and Sexton's great run at Crescent Hall is exceeded, and both contestants shake hands, Slosson having "nursed" his beaten your great run, Billy." The balls "break" on the next shot, and the expert plays carom after carom, until 13 more are scored, and then, Schaefer's great run of 429 being beaten, the spectators join in one great burst of applause, which becomes deafening as the player retires after making the highest run on record—441—and affording a splendid display of rail nursing in its perfection. He took his seat with a score of 570 to Sexton's 25. Sexton went up to the table laughing as Slosson took his seat, and in the face of immense odds played with undisturbed self-possession, but retired on his twenty-eighth shot. Slosson counted 3, and then essayed a fine carom shot, which the referee decided did not count. Sexton then made 30, and retired on an unfortunate miss, leaving the balls in a fairly good position from which Slosson gathered 10, and then retired on a "foul," made in attempting a "massé." Sexton, who was now beginning to weaken somewhat, made 5, and Slosson gathered in 11 and missed, with but 6 to go. Sexton missed again, giving the Chicagoan a shot from which he easily made the needed 6, and closed the most brilliant game he has ever played, beating the exchampion, who recently vanquished him, 5:3 points. His was greeted by great applause as he and his adversary smiled and shook hands. It is but simple justice to Sexton to say that his low record is due to the fact that Slosson's great run left him no opportunity to exhibit his power at "nursing" and "open-table" play, the balls running very hard for him. Rudolphe played some fancy shots at the close of the game, the score of which was as follows:

Slosson—0, 34, 2, 0, 21, 71, 1, 441, 3, 10, 11, 6—600.
Sexton—0, 0, 4, 13, 1, 7, 0, 27, 30, 5, 0—37.
Winner's average, 50; loser's, 7 10-11.
Best Runs—Slosson, 441, 71; Sexton, 30, 27.
Time of game, 1 hour 11 minutes.

This afternoon Maurice Daly and Thomas Gallagher will play, and in the evening Jacob Schaefer will meet A. P. Rudolphe, whom he has been "discounting" of late.

CUTTING IN PASSENGER RATES.

A RAILROAD WAR IMMINENT BETWEEN THE VANDERBILT AND OTHER WESTERN LINES.

CHICAGO, Jan. 22.—It is reported that the railroads leading out from this city are again at war, and that the rates are being cut from $1 to $3. There has been a nervous feeling regarding this business for some time, and several efforts were made lately to patch up the breach, but without avail. The above cut is not made openly, but there is no doubt that a rebate of the above amount is given to steamship agents, brokers, and others. The Vanderbilt roads are accused of being the aggressors in this instance. The officers of those roads claim that the Erie and Chicago line, which runs over the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago, Atlantic and Great Western, and New-York, Lake Erie and Western Railroads, has been paying commissions to outsiders for some time, and they have at last been compelled to take retaliatory measures to protect their interests. It looks as if the Vanderbilt roads were determined to force a war in order to compel the New-York, Lake Erie and Western, and the Atlantic and Great Western to change their position in regard to the payment of commissions on the sale of tickets.

THE SOCIALISTS' MEETING.

BISMARCK FIERCELY DENOUNCED—A LARGE AND ORDERLY GATHERING.

The Socialists held a meeting last evening in Chickering Hall—"on Fifth-avenue," as one of the speakers exultantly remarked—to protest against the persecution of their brethren in Germany. Every seat was filled, and the walls were lined by persons standing. It was an orderly, well-dressed, and well-fed assemblage. So far as appearances went, no one had much ground for complaint on the score of ill-treatment at the hands of society. The great majority were of the male sex, but here and there a woman in the audience and on the platform served to relieve the monotony. The general characteristics of the faces of the crowd were strongly foreign—very recent importations apparently, with the German and Bohemian element predominating. This fact was emphasized by the much greater enthusiasm manifested when the addresses were in those languages. Citizen John Swinton, of the Sun, occupied the chair; Robert H. Bartholomee, chief organizer of the party in this country and late chief organizer in Berlin, acted as Vice-President.

Mr. Swinton, who was afflicted with a bad memory and required frequent prompting, paid his respects to Bismarck and the enemies of Socialism in the United States in a two-column oration. Mr. Schwab led the applause in every instance, evincing, on several occasions, a lack of discretion that drew upon him the angry glances of the speaker. An apology was made for the absence of Dr. Douai, editor of the Volks Zeitung, who was expected "to make the principal speech of the evening." The Doctor sent, instead, a very long letter, full of scorching denunciation of the common enemy, which was read in dramatic tones by the English Secretary. The Chairman then announced that he had selected Mr. Jonas as a substitute for Dr. Douai. Mr. Jonas, however, was not to be found. Mr. Swinton called upon Mr. Jonas to step forward, but there was no response. Mr. Swinton thereupon became angry, and said that he could not understand why the Germans had deserted the meeting. All the Germans seemed to have decamped. In the absence of German speakers, a series of resolutions reviewed in English and in German. They denounced the policy of Bismarck in regard to Socialism; predicted for it disaster; offer the sympathy of "millions of the American people" to the German Socialists, and provide that copies be sent "to the Federal authorities at Washington for transmission to the Berlin Government; also that copies be sent to the Federal Council of Germany, the German Parliament, and the German Chancellor." When they were put, one man shouted "No," which induced the Chairman to remark that if he were Denis Kearney he would claim that 75,000 people were present, and all but one were on the right side.

Then Mr. Swinton became petulant again. He had, he said, tried to get one of the Germans on the platform to speak, but all had declined. He had tried to get Bismarck in the audience, but he too had refused. He had thought that the Germans were the most voluble nation on earth, but he found it impossible to get any of them to speak. They had crawled out of it. At this point there were cries of "Winter," and a slovenly young man with seedy, ill-fitting clothing, thin unkempt whiskers and hair, a pinched countenance, and eye-glasses, marched up to the platform and astonished the crowd in fluent German. He was announced as George Winter, a cigar-maker. He was followed by one Citizen Henry Drury, a tall person with whiskers, long legs and large feet. Citizen Drury was excessively stagey in his utterance and gestures, and several times just missed falling over backward when emphasizing a particularly telling bit of vituperation. He was, likewise, excessively profuse. The Vice-Chairman wrote a request that he would cut his remarks short, and handed it to him, but it had no effect. Citizen Drury always found something additional to say, and it was not until he had talked over an hour that he took warning from the growing uneasiness of the audience and subsided. Citizen Seniele followed in French, and Citizen Falda, editor of the Delnicke Listy, in Bohemian, and the proceedings wound up with a German address by Citizen Florian Paul, one of the recent exiles from Berlin.

While the sentiments expressed were generally the veriest demagogery, it is worthy of mention that several of the speakers claimed for Socialism that it had been misrepresented. It meant, they said, not murder and robbery, but universal brotherhood, respect to property, respect to capital, respect to authority, respect to religion, and respect to the family relations; and it asks only economy in the administration of the Government, universal education, a chance to earn enough to eat, and liberty. These sentiments were warmly applauded in every instance.

THE MISSING STEAMER HOMER.

FEARS THAT SHE HAS BEEN LOST—THEORIES AS TO HER FATE.

BOSTON, Jan. 22.—It is now believed that the steamer Homer, which cleared from this port Dec. 16, 1878, for Liverpool, and has not since been heard from, is lost. She carried no passengers. Her cargo consisted of 43,000 bushels of wheat, of which 4,000 were in bags, and a full list of miscellaneous freight. She was an iron steamer, of 1,238 tons register, built in October, 1877, at Low Walker on the Tyne. She was double-decked in iron, with iron beams, four bulkheads, and was 285 feet long, 34 feet beam, and 24 feet 5 inches depth of hold. She had two compound engines of 180 horse-power, and was brigantine-rigged. She had no wheel-house aft, and her stern was neither square nor round, but a medium between the two, and ran up and over inward, after it came above the upper deck line. She was painted black. When here she was thoroughly surveyed, and was rated as A1 ✠, the next grade below A1, and she was reported as a good vessel. She was loaded under the immediate supervision of the underwriters, and when she sailed was not so deep as the other English steamers sailing at the same time. She drew 19 feet 4½ inches. She was owned by R. R. Glover, in London, and commanded by Capt. R. S. Walker. She had been in the East India trade, and her last cargo out from London was with ice for Calcutta, returning with linseed, &c.

Capt. Walker was 37 years old, and this was his first voyage as Captain of a steamer across the Atlantic. The day the Homer sailed he told an East Boston ship-master that he should run over pretty well south, as he didn't like the ice and heavy weather of the northerly course, and when told that he might be lost track of in case of accident, he replied that he would not have any trouble, for he knew all about those southern waters. Capt. Walker is the son of a prominent English ship-master, and is spoken of as a good seaman. He is also something of an artist, and had in his cabin several oil-paintings of his own production. The hull of the Homer and a large portion of her cargo were insured in London. The amount placed in Boston is thought to be about $30,000. About the fate of the ship there are two theories. One is that her boilers exploded during the heavy gales that have swept the Atlantic, and that some of her crew may yet appear to tell her story. This theory is based on the report, on Jan. 8, by a Liverpool special, to the effect that the ship Cambria, from Callao, had passed, in latitude 48° north, longitude 19° west, a large steamer on fire, evidently abandoned. The place where this abandoned steamer was reported was about 150 miles south of the true course of the Homer. The Cambria described the steamer as being black, with a square stern. That the Homer's was not a square stern has been stated, but it is said that at a distance it would be readily taken for such. Another theory is that the Homer's machinery having broken down, and Capt. Walker taking a southerly course, as he said he might, is making, or has made, Fayal under sail, and may yet be heard from.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

Just after 10 o'clock last night fire was seen on the upper floors of No. 12 Murray-street, a building that runs through to No. 15 Park-place. The first floor, basement and sub-cellar, of No. 15 Park-place, are occupied by the Gould Pump Manufacturing Company, and the rest of the building is occupied by Tifft & Howard, manufacturers of oil and gas stoves, and general house-furnishing ware, with the office and sales-room at No. 12 Murray-street. The fire broke out about the centre of the third floor, in which were stored a large number of empty boxes, and quickly extended through the fourth and fifth floors to the roof. Its origin is unknown. Two alarms were sounded, bringing enough engines to the scene to enable the firemen to gain control of the fire in a short time and prevent it from extending to the lower floors of the building. The three upper floors were pretty well burned out, and the rest of the building was flooded with water. Tifft & Howard's damage on stock is estimated at about $7,000, and the Gould Pump Manufacturing Company's loss by water will probably reach $2,000. The damage to the building amounts to about $3,000, making a total of $12,000.

A fire at Lisbon, N. Y., Tuesday night, destroyed Robert Scott's building, occupied by J. R. Clark, dealer in general merchandise, and Miss Theresa Armstrong's building, occupied by her as a millinery store. The loss is $6,000; insurance, $400.

The Eccles Cotton Mill, at Ashton, near Preston, England, running 29,000 spindles on full time, was burned yesterday. One hundred and thirty persons are thrown out of employment. The loss is £30,000.

A fire at Beebe, on the Iron Mountain Railroad, yesterday burned Price's saloon, the store-house of Massey & Son, Leahy & Brother, and Brooks & Thompson.

Thomas Johnson's bakery and dwelling, at Kingston, Ontario, were burned early yesterday morning. Mr. Johnson's two little daughters were burned to death.

THE TELLER COMMITTEE'S WORK.

MORE ABOUT THE TISSUE TICKETS IN SOUTH CAROLINA—BALLOT-BOXES STOLEN AND STUFFED BY DEMOCRATS.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Jan. 22.—The Teller committee resumed its investigation this morning. E. M. Pinckney, a colored minister and Republican, testified to the existence of three organizations of "Red Shirts" in Williamsburg County. He also gave an account of the alleged interference with a Republican meeting at White Oak, at which Swails is said to have been captured and taken to Kingstree by Democrats. He gave a long account of the election at Kingstree, stating that the Democrats refused the United States Supervisor admission to the polls, and in the evening seized the ballot-box and stuffed it. He also related his personal experiences, saying that the "Red Shirts" were hunting him, and had dug a grave for him. He described his arrest on the charge of perjury made by Democrats as "kidnapping," and gave a detailed account of his being beaten and threatened. The cross-examination, however, elicited the fact that these latter were the consequences of personal difficulties.

John M. Freeman, colored, Republican Supervisor at the Palmetto Engine-house, testified that the arrest of a Democratic voter by his order, for repeating, resulted in the knocking down and kicking of the witness, but the intervention of the Democrats saved him from more serious injury; when he returned to the polling-place he found that his poll-list was gone; up to that time 915 votes were polled, and about two hours later, when the poll closed, the total vote proved to be over 3,500. The witness saw Democratic tissue ballots stuffed into the box, and saw large numbers in the box when it was opened; he saw a number of persons vote tissue tickets; he knew of no certificates of colored Democrats by Republicans, and thought the ostracism was just the other way. At the close of the examination of this witness the ballot-boxes were opened by the committee, and no ballots were found in the box used at the Palmetto Engine-house and at two other polls. One box was examined, and the whole were then given to a committee of Republicans and Democrats for examination and report as to the number and kind of ballots therein.

A. W. Green, colored, Republican, Deputy Marshal at the Palmetto Engine-house, testified as to the fight in which Freeman was struck. The ballot-box, when opened, was half full of tissue ballots; he stayed at the poll until the count was finished in the morning; he saw full-size Democratic ballots with tissue tickets folded up in them in the box; nearly all the tissue tickets were put in that way; there were more ballots in the box than names on the poll-list, and one of the Democratic clerks was at work throughout the night adding names to the poll-list to make the numbers agree.

R. S. Catheart, white, Democrat, testified that he was at the Palmetto Engine-house nearly all election day; when the fight occurred, Freeman [the Supervisor] was protected by Democrats; Green [a previous witness and a Deputy Marshal] proclaimed himself a Democrat, and was so drunk that the witness put him in a chair to sleep, and found him there still asleep in the morning; a number of colored people voted the Democratic ticket, and the tissue ticket was voted openly; many white Democrats from other wards voted at the Palmetto Engine-house; colored men told the witness that means must be employed to prevent voting secretly, and he gave them tissue tickets.

G. D. Bryan, President of the Democracy of the First Ward, testified that only three tissue tickets were voted in that ward; the white residents of the ward went to Palmetto Engine-house, or Market Hall, in the Third Ward, to vote, in consequence of the crowd at the poll. One colored man brought up 95 colored men to vote with tissue tickets. Other colored men told him their churches would not allow them to vote the Democratic ticket, and they desired to conceal the fact. Intimidation of colored Democrats by negroes at previous elections was common. The witness did not know of colored Democrats being killed for voting such ticket, but he knew of white men killed while protecting colored men; he had heard of cannon being taken to political meetings in 1876, but only for saluting purposes, and he knew that at previous elections the State Militia, composed of negroes, attended Republican meetings with arms; Unaclemedon was a negro company of colored Militia, as reorganized by the Democrats, than can be found in any other city of the Union.

DISCUSSING NATIONAL GUARD MATTERS.

ALBANY, Jan. 22.—The National Guard Association met this afternoon in the Assembly Chamber of the old Capitol building. Col. Amasa J. Parker presiding. Of 75 delegates all were in attendance. The Chair presented a report, in which he referred to several subjects which should demand the attention of the association. Committees were appointed as follows:

To Devise Measures to Secure Better Attendance at Drills—Cols. R. C. Ward, Crager, Eddy, Graves, and Porter.

To Devise Rules and Regulations for Better Practice last Summer—Major Farr, Capt. J. S. Loomis, Major McEwen, and Col. C. P. Bromley.

To Amendments to the Code—Lieut.-Col. Belknap, Col. George D. Scott, Messrs. Williamsons and Lewis Balch, and Capt. E. L. Cole.

To Return Thanks to the Commander-in-Chief for the Reappointment of Gen. Wiley, Chief of Ordnance—Gens. Carey, Brinker, and Varian, Cols. R. C. Ward, G. D. Scott, and Burke, and Capt. Cusack.

On Modification of the Manual in Loading and Firing—Lieut.-Col. Graves, and Capts. Tallman and Burns.

On Uniforms for the Line—Lieut.-Cols. Wilson, Graves, and Eddy, Col. Scott, and Capt.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 22—P. M.

The dealings on the Stock Exchange today exhibited great activity, and were characterized by a very buoyant tone. Prices occasionally showed some reaction, which was evidently due to realizations, for at each decline strong buyers appeared, whose purchases were invariably followed by a marked appreciation in values. The outstanding short interest in the market is still extensive, and appearances justify the belief that anything like a serious attempt to cover must inevitably be followed by a further sharp advance in prices. Indications are not wanting that the market is, to some extent at least, gradually passing out of the control of the professional operators, and that bona fide investors are quietly absorbing some of the assured dividend-paying shares, and others which have a promising future. The improvement on the day's transactions ranged from ½ to 5 ⅜ cent., the latter in Erie preferred, and the advance in nearly the entire list was well maintained in the closing dealings. The most active as well as the strongest stocks were Erie, North-western, St. Paul, C., C., C. and I., Michigan Central, Illinois Central, Western Union, Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph, and the coal shares. The advance in Erie, both common and preferred, was due to large purchases caused by the announcement that within a brief period the New-England branch of the road will be in operation. All the Vanderbilt shares were strong at advancing quotations, and rumors were current that parties possessing the best opportunity for judging the present and prospective value of the properties were large buyers. Among the Granger stocks, North-western was strong throughout, while St. Paul, after a sharp advance in the early dealings, lost some portion of the improvement. The steady upward movement in C., C., C. and I. continued, and the stock was to-day in brisk demand. It is said that a contest for the control of the road is impending, and that the report to be submitted to the Directors at their meeting in February will be of such a favorable character as to justify the resumption of dividends. The coal shares were strong early in the day, but later suffered some reaction. Investment stocks were buoyant, under a brisk inquiry, and recorded higher quotations.

The transactions aggregated 296,730 shares, including 61,230 Erie, 50,654 Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, 49,730 North-western, 45,750 Lake Shore, 23,200 St. Paul, 11,445 Western Union, 9,375 Wabash, 7,000 Michigan Central, 6,760 Ohio and Mississippi, 4,400 Morris and Essex, 4,155 New-Jersey Central, 2,954 Rock Island, 2,657 C., C. and I., 2,650 Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph, 2,100 Delaware and Hudson, 1,960 Pittsburg, 1,845 New-York Central, 1,800 Illinois Central, 1,700 St. Louis, Kansas City and Northern, 1,460 Hannibal and St. Joseph, and 1,050 Canada Southern.

Erie common fell off from 24⅜ to 24⅞, and rose to 25. Erie preferred advanced from 39¾ to 42 for actual business, and closed at 42⅜ bid and 43 asked. Lake Shore advanced from 70 to 71⅛, and reacted to 70½. Michigan Central rose from 79½ to 80⅝, and reacted to 80⅛. Canada Southern advanced from 47¼ to 48. North-western common rose from 58⅜ to 59½, receded to 59, and finally sold at 59⅜. The preferred advanced from 83⅞ to 84½, receded to 84, and at the close recovered to 84½. St. Paul, after selling up from 40⅛ to 40⅞, declined to 40, but finally sold at 40½. The preferred advanced from 80⅜ to 81⅛, reacted to 80⅜, and closed at 81. Delaware, Lackawanna and Western rose from 50⅞ to 51⅛, fell off to 51, advanced to 52⅜, and closed at 51⅝. Morris and Essex rose to 82¾, fell off to 82⅜, rose to 83, and closed at 82⅝. Delaware and Hudson advanced from 43¼ to 44⅛, and reacted to 44. New-Jersey Central rose from 40⅜ to 41, and after selling down to 40½ recovered to 40¾. Wabash advanced from 21⅝ to 22⅞, and closed at 22⅝. Ohio and Mississippi fluctuated between 9⅜ and 9¾. St. Louis, Kansas City and Northern sold at 7¾@7⅞ for the common, and at 32¾@32⅞ for the preferred. Missouri, Kansas and Texas fell off from 6 to 5⅝, and recovered to the former figure. Hannibal and St. Joseph common sold at 14¾@15. C., C., C. and I. advanced 1⅛ per cent., selling at 51⅜ ex dividend. Pacific Mail sold at 12¾@13. Western Union rose from 96¼ to 97⅜, and Atlantic and Pacific from 36 to 37⅝. Among investment shares, Rock Island advanced from 124⅞ to 125⅝, closing at 125½. New-York Central rose from 114⅜ to 115, and reacted to 114⅝. Chicago, Burlington and Quincy sold at 113⅜. Chicago and Alton rose to 84¼; Fort Wayne to 105½; Pittsburg to 91⅞, and Illinois Central to 84. Express shares were firm.

The Money market was without essential change, the supply of capital offering to borrowers on call having been in excess of the demand at 2@3 ⅌ cent. Prime mercantile paper sold at 3½ to 5 ⅌ cent. The following were the rates of exchange on New-York at the undermentioned cities to-day: Savannah, buying par @¼ premium; Charleston weak, ⅛@1-16 discount @ par; New-Orleans, commercial ¼, bank ½; St. Louis, 75 premium; Chicago, steady, 1-16 discount buying, 1-10 premium selling, and Boston 12 cents premium.

The foreign advices reported a strong and buoyant market for American railway shares at London. Illinois Central advanced 1¼ ⅌ cent., to 85¼; Erie 1¼, to 24⅜; preferred 1⅝, to 40; Pennsylvania ¼, to 35¼, and Reading, 1-16 discount buying, 1-10 premium selling, and closed steady at 41. United States 4½s, were steady at 108⅝, and 1867s at 103⅝. United States 10-40s declined ¼, to 109¼, and 5s ⅜, to 107¾. British Consols were firm at 96¼@96⅜ for both money and the account. At Paris, Rentes fell off to 113f. 70c.

The Sterling Exchange market, which on Monday and yesterday was very active, displayed comparative quiet to-day, and the opinion is expressed in some quarters that very little, if any, better rates can now be made. There is no margin of profit for speculative operators, and the market must stand or fall on its own merits. The only change made in rates to-day was an advance in 60-day bills from 4 86½ to $4 86¾, with actual business at $4 85½@$4 85⅝. Demand bills sold at $4 88¼@$4 88½, cables at $4 89½@$4 89⅜, and commercial at $4 83½@$4 84¼.

Government bonds generally were weakened to-day by the announcement that the Treasury had issued an order, quite unexpected, headed by the Rothschilds, to float a portion of the 4 ⅌ cent. loan in Europe. This will, of course, result in a more rapid redemption of the 5-20 bonds and other issues which succeed these, and hence there was a decline in prices of ⅛@⅜ ⅌ cent. United States 5s of 1881 and 10-40s were also adversely affected by the decline at London. The subscriptions to the 4 ⅌ cent. loan at Washington to-day, up to noon, are reported at $16,426,000. Railroad mortgages continue active and on the advance, the improvement in some issues to-day being equal to ¾@1 ⅌ cent. New-York Central coupon Fives, due 1922, Rock Island 6s to 1104, Milwaukee and St. Paul, La Crosse Division, to 109, do. I. and D. Division extension to 99½, do. C. and M. Division to 110, do. Consolidated Sinking Funds to 102⅝, do. I. and M. C., C. and I. C. Firsts sold up to 61½, and do. Seconds to 19⅛, but the former reacted ½, and the latter ¼ ⅌ cent. at the close. Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern Firsts declined 1 ⅌ cent., to 70⅜. Missouri, Kansas and Texas consolidated assented dropped 1 ⅌ cent., to 49, but afterward rallied to 49½. In State bonds, Louisiana Consols rose to 64½, and reacted to 63⅞@64. District of Columbia 3.65s advanced to 81¾.

SHOVING CURLING STONES.

POOR ICE FOR THE SPORT.

THE INTER-STATE CURLING MATCH—NEW-JERSEY PLAYERS GET DISGUSTED AND NEW-YORKERS WIN THE MEDAL—OTHER GAMES AT CENTRAL PARK.

The fourth annual Inter-State Curling Match between New-York and New-Jersey clubs was contested at Central Park yesterday afternoon, and resulted in a decisive victory for the New-Yorkers. Only enough ice was cleared of snow on the curling lake to make room for five rinks. The inter-State contest brought out players for 10 rinks, and half of them, therefore, had to be accommodated on the large lake, from a portion of whose frozen surface in front of the terrace the snow had been scraped. The weather was warm and pleasant, but the ice was in the poorest possible condition for curling. Half the "tees" were in pools of slushy water, while between them the soft ice was soon worn into a series of shallow holes with corresponding hummocks. On good, hard ice curlers have to exercise good judgment to avoid sending the stones beyond the "tee," but yesterday it required any amount of muscle to send a stone from "tee" to "tee," a distance of about 56 yards. The Inter-State Match was therefore quite as much a trial of strength as of skill, and was far from satisfactory to either the winners or losers. The match was called at 1:30 o'clock, with Mr. A. M. Stewart, of the St. Andrew's Club, as umpire, and D. Foulis, of the Caledonian Club, to assist him on the large lake. Time was called at 5:30 o'clock, and as soon as the various scores were added up the umpire announced that the match was won by New-York by a total of 264 points to New-Jersey's 191 points. The match was for the Hamilton silver medal, presented by Mr. John L. Hamilton in 1876. The conditions require that the medal shall be held by the "skip" of the rink making the highest total score on the winning side. In 1876 it was carried off by John E. Smith, of the Paterson Club, New-Jersey. New-Jersey was again the winner in 1877, when Mills Thomson, of the Ivanhoe Club, wore the medal. Last year, James Adie, of the New-York Club, carried off the medal for the first time for his State. The umpire awarded the medal yesterday to Mr. John Templeton, "skip" of Rink No. 1, but the Brooklyn Caledonian Club entered a protest against the decision, and the final award will therefore not be made until the protest is passed upon by the Grand National Curling Club. The dispute was caused by the withdrawal of the New-Jersey contestants from Rinks Nos. 3 and 4 early in the afternoon, they being disgusted with the ice and their own bad luck. The New-York curlers ran these rinks played on until the close of the match, rolling up scores of 328 and 218, respectively. These, they claimed, should be counted in the total score, but Mr. Stewart held otherwise, and hence the protest. The following is the list of players and the scores made at each rink, the scores of Rinks Nos. 3 and 4 being given as they stood when the New-Jersey players withdrew:

In addition to the inter-State match, three other interesting curling matches were played on the two lakes during the forenoon. The members of the New-York Caledonia Club played a "point match" for three prizes, the first of which was won by Charles McKenzie, and the second and third prizes were taken by W. Carmichael and W. Hogg, respectively. The Manhattan Club played the Newark Club for a medal, which the latter won by a score of 18 to 14. The Thistle Club, of Brooklyn, also played for a medal against the Paterson Club, which won it by a single point, the totals standing at 19 and 18.

MONMOUTH PARK ASSOCIATION.

THE STAKE RACES TO BE RUN AT THE JULY MEETING—A NEW EVENT FOR 1880.

Four stake races, to be run at the July meeting of the Monmouth Park Association, are now open, and will close on March 1 next. They are for all ages, and they will, therefore, be very popular with turf men. The first on the list is the Long Branch Handicap Sweepstakes, of $50 each, half forfeit, and only $10 if declared by June 27, with $500 added; the second to receive $150 out of the stakes; one mile and a quarter. The second is the Shrewsbury Handicap Sweepstakes, of $100 each, half forfeit, and only $20 if declared by June 27, with $700 added; the second to receive $150 out of the stakes; the winner of the Long Branch Handicap to carry five pounds extra; one mile and three-quarters. The third is the Monmouth Cup, of $50 each, play or pay, with $1,000 added; the second to receive $300 out of the stakes; the winner of the Westchester Cup this year to carry five pounds extra. two miles and a quarter. The Ocean Stakes is a new race, for all ages, without penalties, which will be a welcome addition to the list, as, with the exception of handicaps, the stakes for all ages are few and far between. The popularity of the famous mile and a quarter sweepstakes at Saratoga should induce the associations in the Eastern Circuit to open more stakes of the same class, for they will be fully appreciated by owners of race-horses. The Ocean Stakes must become popular from the conditions, which are, $50 each, play or pay, with $700 added, while the distance is a mile and an eighth, which will suit the speedy ones. The Champion Stakes for all ages, for the August meeting, is also open, and will close on March 1. The entrance is $200 each, half forfeit, and only $50 if declared by 1st July, with $2,000 added; the second to receive $500 out of the stakes, and the third to save his stake; one mile and a half. This will be a very valuable event, and the name suggests a struggle of some import to turf men.

For the meeting of 1880 a new event, called the Breeders' Stake, has been opened, and is to be run at the August meeting. The conditions are $50 each, $10 forfeit to the racing fund, with $700 added, of which $500 to the owner and $250 to the breeder of the winner; for 2-year olds; those got by stallions or out of mares which have never produced a winner allowed three pounds, if claimed at the time of naming; the engagement to follow the ownership of the horse, without written transfer, and the only liability of the nominator to be the $10 forfeit to the racing fund, which is payable at the time of naming; any surplus over $750 from the forfeits to be divided equally between the breeders of the second and third horses in the race; the distance is to be five furlongs. There appears to be too much verbosity in the conditions of this stake, and it is not likely to become popular with the generality of breeders. The stake is to close April 1. Nominations are to be made to George L. Lorillard, at the rooms of the American Jockey Club.

IN SEARCH OF A MISSING GIRL.

Several years ago, Patrick Guthrie, his wife, a son named James, and a daughter named Prudence came to this country and settled in Jersey City. Two years ago Mrs. Guthrie died, and about a year ago Mr. Guthrie died. James, being 21 years of age, had been supporting himself for some time, and Prudence, being determined not to be a burden to him, sought and obtained a position as a trusted servant in the family of James Smith, of Hackensack. Being a bright girl, she was treated more as a companion than a servant, and was in the habit of accompanying Mr. Smith's family to the Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church. When her brother heard of it, he went to Mr. Smith's house and asked for his sister, and when she entered the room he told her what he had heard, and asked her if it was true. She said it was, when he drew a pistol and threatened that if she did not leave the church and Mr. Smith's house and return home with him he would kill her. Prudence ran up stairs, crying and shrieking, to tell Mrs. Smith of her brother's conduct. Mrs. Smith went down stairs to remonstrate with young Guthrie, when he threatened to kill her also. Finally, Miss Guthrie, rather than have any further trouble, accompanied her brother from the house, since which time she has not been seen. The congregation of the Asbury Church held a meeting on Tuesday night, and it was resolved to raise money to enable Mr. Smith to prosecute the case, and a warrant will be at once obtained for Guthrie's arrest.

THE THEFTS OF JOHN BONNER.

JUDGE VAN VORST ON THE MISMANAGEMENT OF THE BANKERS' AND BROKERS' ASSOCIATION.

Shortly before John Bonner ran away from this City, leaving the Bankers' and Brokers' Association, of which he was President, destitute of the securities upon which its funds had been loaned, Mr. Thomas S. Marlor borrowed from the institution $6,000, depositing as collateral $12,000 worth of Wabash Railway bonds and $5,000 of the stock of the Metropolitan Bank. Upon the appointment of Mr. Robert L. Cutting, Jr., as Receiver of the association, Mr. Marlor offered to repay, with interest, the money loaned to him, and asked for the return of his stock and bonds. Mr. Cutting answered that he could not return the collateral, as it had been rehypothecated by Bonner for loans to himself. Soon afterward Cutting began a suit against Marlor for the $6,000 loaned to him, with interest, claiming that the money was fairly owed to the association, but that the corporation was not responsible for the wrongful act of Bonner in running away with the defendant's stocks and bonds. Judge Van Vorst rendered a decision in the case yesterday in the Special Term of the Supreme Court. In reviewing the testimony, Judge Van Vorst shows that Bonner was permitted to visit the office of the Bankers' and Brokers' Association whenever he chose, and to take from it whatever securities were there. No record of the taking of the collateral was kept in the office of the corporation, but in the books of Bonner's firm was kept a loan account, in which the securities were entered. The nominal manager of the corporation, a Mr. Oley, neither consented nor objected to the removal of the stocks and bonds, but remained passive before Bonner, who was his superior in official position.

In commenting upon these irregularities, which continued for six months, and led to the despoilment of the association, Judge Van Vorst says: "I conclude that a system of management of a banking-house in which such conduct of its affairs was permitted a breach of duty, and grossly negligent toward its dealers and persons having stocks and bonds in its keeping, is not to be tolerated, that the Trustees took any substantial oversight of the affairs of the association, or devised any measures for the safe keeping of its property. They did not hold meetings, as required by the by-laws. If summoned to attend, they did not appear. No periodical examination of the securities appears to have been made by any committee. Ordinary circumspection and safeguards were not interposed for the protection of the property of the association or of its depositors and dealers, and Bonner's license to do as he chose without accountability seemed unlimited. The legitimate outcome of such license was ruin to Bonner and the association, and loss to depositors and stockholders. It is urged in behalf of the association and Bonner, in justification of the confidence and power reposed in him, that he was, up to the time of his failure, a man of good character. But it should not be allowed to any man, however good he may seem to be, to be tempted with power and property in this way. The stock and property of the association are really acquired was the ailment by which his appetite for speculation was fed, and through which his ruin was probably hastened. A banking association, with the powers and privileges of the one under consideration, is under a duty to adopt rules and regulations and so to conduct its business as that property intrusted to its safe keeping should be reasonably protected against misapplication by its servants and agents. An omission to adopt and enforce prudent rules in this regard is a failure of duty toward its dealers, and is blamable negligence."

In conclusion, Judge Van Vorst holds that the Bankers' and Brokers' Association is responsible for the acts of Bonner, and he therefore gives a judgment for the defendant Marlor for the value of his securities above the amount of the loan made to him, which judgment must be satisfied from the assets of the association now held by the plaintiff in his capacity of Receiver.

SUIT AGAINST TALMAGE'S CHURCH.

MR. GELSTON, THE LATE TREASURER, DEMANDS $1,340—WHY HE DID NOT PAY A SUBSCRIPTION.

In March, 1878, a quarrel occurred between the Session and Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, on the one side, and the Trustees of the Tabernacle on the other. The Trustees wished to discharge Mr. George W. Morgan, the organist, while Rev. Mr. Talmage and the Session of the church wished to retain that gentleman's services. Mr. Talmage and the Session triumphed, and the Trustees resigned in a body. Among the Trustees was Mr. William J Gelston, who had filled the position of Treasurer to the church for some time. At the time of his resignation the church owed Mr. Gelston $1,340, which he had advanced out of his own pocket. Some time after the split in the church, which resulted in the resignation of the Trustees, Mr. Gelston commenced suit for the recovery of the amount due him by the Tabernacle. The trial of the suit was begun in the City Court, before Judge Neilson and a jury, yesterday. The court-room was crowded by church people, and Rev. Mr. Talmage occupied a seat at the counsels' table. Messrs. Tenney and Freeman appeared for the Tabernacle, while the plaintiff was represented by Messrs. Pearsall and Barnard. The defendants put in a counter-claim for $1,000, which the plaintiff promised to subscribe toward paying off the debt of the church. Some difficulty was experienced in getting a jury, owing to the rigid questioning on the part of counsel on either side to which the gentleman whose names were drawn on the panel were subjected. Mr. Stephen Brown, a New-York leather merchant, was called, and asked by Mr. Barnard if he attended the Tabernacle, to which Mr. Brown, who is an old gentleman, replied with great fervor, "God forbid!" Mr. Brown was promptly rejected by the defense.

The first witness called after a jury had been secured was the plaintiff. He gave an account of his stewardship while Treasurer of the church, going into many uninteresting details. He admitted having put down his name for $1,000, which he had not paid, toward liquidating the debt of the church. Another witness was examined in behalf of the plaintiff, the testimony of Mr. Gelston, and the plaintiff's case was declared closed. Mr. Freeman, for the defense, moved that judgment for $340 be granted for the plaintiff. The correctness of Mr. Gelston's figures was admitted, but the church claimed that it was entitled to the $1,000 subscribed by him, and that he was entitled to $340, the balance of the amount sued for after $1,000 had been deducted. The motion was opposed by plaintiff and denied by the court. Mr. Freeman then opened for the defense, and claimed to be able to show that the subscriptions to the church were made in good faith. Mr. Gelston maintains that the debt of the church was falsely stated by Dr. Talmage, and that many of the subscriptions were not made in good faith, but only to induce others to subscribe. The untrue statement of the church debt and the lack of good faith on the part of certain subscribers relieved Mr. Gelston, according to that gentleman's claim, from the payment of his subscription.

The trial will be continued to-day, when the defense will examine witnesses to show that the subscriptions obtained by Mr. Kimball, the church debt raiser, were made in good faith.

A SINGULAR OMISSION.

Five carriages halted successively in front of Gen. William F. Smith's mansion in East Forty-first-street, on Tuesday evening, while the banquet he was giving to his friends was in progress in his hospitable parlors. They came to convey some of the guests to their residences, but the lamps in front of each of the coaches were not lit. This was regarded as a remarkable omission under the circumstances. Gen. Smith, as President of the Police Board, earnestly requested the Common Council to pass a law providing that the lamps in carriages shall be lighted at night, and he had an ordinance enacted to meet his views. That five unlighted coaches should remain at dark before the General's residence, in violation of the only law of which he is the author either shows a lack of appreciation of his legislative ability or of the Municipal statute which emanated from his brain.

LIQUOR-DEALERS FINED.

A number of persons, indicted on complaint of the officers of Rev. Dr. Crosby's society for violations of the Excise law, were brought before Judge Gildersleeve, in the General Sessions Court, yesterday. Jacob Blank, proprietor of the saloon No. 100 Third-avenue, and Jacob Camben, his bar-tender, were fined $50 and $5 respectively. Simon Bauer, proprietor of the place No. 305 Bowery, and his bar-tender, Henry Rall, were also fined $50 and $5 respectively. Jacob F. Hass, who keeps a saloon at No. 464 Pearl-street, was also fined $50, and a fine of $5 was imposed upon his bar-maid, Jenny Bertha. Jane Hynard, proprietress of the saloon at No. 11 Bowery, and her bar-maid were respectively fined $22 and $5, and Mary Miller, who dispensed liquors at No. 19 Bowery, was fined $5. The fines were all promptly paid, and the accused liquor-dealers promised not to offend again.

JOHN W. HULL ARRAIGNED.

John W. Hull, the broker, who carried off $30,000 in United States Government bonds from the office of Field & James, No. 16 Broad-street, and who was subsequently brought back from Canada, was arraigned by Assistant District Attorney Lyon, in the Court of General Sessions, yesterday. The prisoner, who is an aged man, pleaded not guilty. His counsel, Mr. Nelson J. Waterbury, asked for a postponement of the trial, and requested that bail be fixed. Judge Gildersleeve fixed bail at $5,000. Hull, who feels his position keenly, says that at one time he was the possessor of $60,000, which he lost in one day by speculating in Wall-street.

THE MAYOR AND THE CONTROLLER.

MR. COOPER PUTS SOME HARD QUESTIONS TO MR. KELLY.

The first meeting of the Board of Apportionment during the present year was held yesterday in the City Hall. At 2 o'clock all the members, consisting of Mayor Cooper, Controller Kelly, Tax Commissioner Wheeler, and Mr. Jordan L. Mott, the President of the Board of Aldermen, were in attendance, the Mayor, the Controller, and Mr. Mott meeting for the first time in their official capacity. After some unimportant business had been transacted, Mayor Cooper took up a copy of the minutes of the board containing the budget for the present year, and then said:

"I would like to ask the board a question as to the appropriation for judgments and claims against the City which I find in the budget. Is there anywhere in the action of the board anything which limits the appropriation to any particular class of claims?"

Controller Kelly—In the case of certain claims, where departments have exceeded their appropriations, the creditors could obtain judgments against the City, and what is the use of incurring the expenses of litigation in addition to the amount claimed, when the claims must be paid?

Mayor Cooper—Then I understand that this appropriation would cover any claim against the City?

Controller Kelly—Yes, it would. Then there is another view of it—that it would apply to those cases where there had been a deficiency in the appropriation.

Mayor Cooper—Then, when a department has expended more than its appropriation, the deficiency can be paid out of the appropriation for judgments and claims?

Controller Kelly—Yes. In the case where they are charged by law with the performance of certain duties, they could not carry on their departments without the money, and so they would have valid claims against the City for the excess of expenditures over the appropriation.

Mayor Cooper—Then I understand you to say that the Board of Estimate and Apportionment has power, in case any department expends more than its appropriation, to pay this excess out of the appropriation for judgments and claims.

Controller Kelly—Yes.

Commissioner Wheeler—I do not so understand it.

Mayor Cooper—Then it amounts to this, that, notwithstanding there is a provision in the charter that no expenditures can be incurred in excess of the appropriation, this defect is practically covered by this appropriation for judgments and claims.

Commissioner Wheeler—Certainly not.

Controller Kelly—The appropriation provides for these expenditures in a general way.

Mayor Cooper—Take the Department of Parks; suppose that it had incurred expenses in excess of its appropriation; then they could be paid out of this appropriation for judgments and claims.

Controller Kelly—The Department of Parks was provided for, and gave notice during the first week of the year that there would be a deficiency, and the board transferred $25,000 to them from the interest fund.

Mayor Cooper—A department can go on then, and incur expenses in excess of its appropriation, and provision can be made in the next budget to cure the defect by providing for it in the appropriation for judgments and claims.

Controller Kelly—If the departments are charged by law with certain duties, they must incur the necessary expenses or they cannot carry on their departments. If there is no money to pay their necessary expenses at the end of the year, the creditors might resort to the courts and get judgments, and there is no use in paying interest and the cost of litigation.

Mayor Cooper—Do you hold, Mr. Controller, that where there is no appropriation for the expenses of a department such expenses can be paid out of the appropriation for judgments and claims? Is there no limitation by the action of the board? Does it apply to any claim?

Commissioner Wheeler—The law says that no department shall exceed its appropriation, and I do not think that this amount in excess could be recovered.

Mayor Cooper—I doubt whether they could recover where there is no appropriation.

Controller Kelly—I think there can be no doubt that, where the Board of Apportionment does not appropriate the amount required by law to be appropriated, the creditors can recover. Where the law provides that a certain thing shall be done, and no appropriation is made, the City would necessarily be liable.

Mayor Cooper—I do not think an official can bind the City where he acts in violation of law. If there is no appropriation for an expenditure, I do not find any law by which it can be paid. An official has no right to incur an expenditure and then ask for an appropriation.

President Mott—Innocent creditors might suffer in such cases. They might probably not be aware that there was no appropriation to meet the expenditure.

Controller Kelly—Where a judgment has been obtained against the City it must be paid. Of course, the judgment must be obtained in accordance with law. I suggest that the whole subject be referred to the Corporation Counsel for his opinion.

Mayor Cooper—Up to this time warrants for judgments and claims have been presented to me amounting from one to two hundred. I would like to know what is the amount of the judgments that are liable to accrue this year.

Controller Kelly—In 1877 we appropriated $300,000; in 1878, $300,000, and for 1879, $450,000. We did this on the knowledge we had of the amount of judgments that had been obtained, and probably would be obtained. I think that the judgments may reach probably four or five hundred at last year, but that after this year they will fall off one-half.

Mayor Cooper—Do you think the appropriation for this year will be sufficient?

Controller Kelly—I cannot say that. A number of judgments came in at the end of the year: among others, in favor of the Police Surgeons for $28,000.

Mayor Cooper—I would like the Controller to state at the next meeting of the board of the judgments obtained against the City before Jan. 1, 1879, and which were not paid at that date.

Controller Kelly—I will furnish you all the information on the subject.

The board then authorized the Controller to issue $50,000 of assessment bonds, $50,000 of Croton water stock, and $110,000 of additional Croton water main stock, in compliance with requisitions from the Department of Public Works, after which it adjourned until Monday next at 2 P. M.

THE LATE JOHN BLAIR SCRIBNER.

A FEELING TRIBUTE TO HIS MEMORY—RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY THE BOOK TRADE.

A meeting of the principal publishers and book-sellers of this City was held at Leavitt's trade sales-room yesterday afternoon to take appropriate action with regard to the death of Mr. J. Blair Scribner. The attendance was very large, nearly every house being represented. Mr. William H. Appleton was chosen to preside, with J. Henry Harper as Secretary. Messrs. A. D. F. Randolph, George Putnam, F. H. Dodd, and R. R. Bowker were appointed a committee to draft suitable resolutions of respect to the memory of Mr. Scribner, which were afterward presented to the meeting and adopted unanimously. These bore testimony to the honesty, ability, high purpose, and honorable ambition in business of Mr. Scribner, and stated the determination of those present to attend his funeral in a body. Mr. A. D. F. Randolph, addressing the meeting, said:

It may be, Mr. Chairman, that as we grow older the occurrence of death seems more frequent and startling. It seems but as yesterday that some of us met here on the departure of George Appleton; only a little longer when we were called together to mourn the death of Fletcher Harper, and within the space of four years have we thus met—twice to speak of those who had reached and enjoyed the full fruitage of manhood, and twice to remember those cut off in the very flower of their years. Four times out of the five we have been summoned by one of our historic names—Harper, Appleton, Scribner—names familiar not to our city only, but to and identified with our literature. To-day, our dead brother is the youngest of us all. I think of him rather as a boy than as a great publisher, for I knew him when he was a boy at his father's knee. I have not yet been quite able to realize that he was the senior of the firm whose liabilities bears his name; have never been able to call him by other than his familiar household name. And yet, while my interest in him may have led me to question the wisdom of his taking the heavy responsibilities he so lately assumed, certainly there was a clear indication of strength and character and force which command remark that one so young in years should be so eager to take on that which some of us who are older would so willingly lay down. I count it to the honor of every one who brings into this work of ours an instinctive love and reverence for it, who presents it with a just and adequate sense of its responsibilities and privileges. In this calling our friend had a notable pride and ambition. It came to him alike by inheritance and pursuit. He was ambitious to perpetuate a name already honorable—to enlarge a structure the foundations of which had been laid by his father's own hand. He entered upon it full of hope, courage and expectation; untouched by the sense of waning, undistanced by the remembrances of long previous years of struggle and toil, which had finally compassed the point of successful venture. To this part of our work he was not called, and the future lay before him with a business already established over and around the age of which was the glamour of his once expectant youth, and the promise of unbounded success. Shall we wonder then, that he had many and comprehensive plans; that he set no limits to his bodily strength, while he left unhampered the enthusiastic determination to ally more closely than ever his inherited name with those of the old and new masters in literature and the arts? But it is a homely, yet an old saying, that "Man proposes, but God disposes." A few days of weariness, a few more of sickness, an enforced absence from the manifold business, and then, in a moment—almost in the twinkling of an eye—there comes the unexpected call, the inevitable event that clouds and changes and saddens all. It is a mystery that we cannot fathom, but it is not the inexorable hand of fate striking blindly here and there, but the hand of God, the hand of an all-wise, all-merciful, all-loving Father, who not only knows the end from the beginning, but who holds all our lives in His hand, and without whose knowledge not even a sparrow falls to the ground. I will not attempt to express the lessons of the hour. To me there is nothing appalling in the presence of death when there is a consciousness of what lies beyond. Yet, from that presence there should ever come a lesson for our life. We still remain, still have our work to do, and if this event shall serve to stimulate and help us to do with our might what our hands find to do, this providence, this mystery, will not have spoken to us in vain.

THE EAST SIDE FIRE-BUGS.

TRIAL OF ISAAC PERLSTEIN ON A CHARGE OF ARSON—STRONG TESTIMONY FOR THE PROSECUTION.

The General Sessions court-room yesterday contained a number of the blue-uniformed members of the Fire Department and Insurance Patrol, who had been summoned to testify in the case of Isaac Perlstein, the alleged "fire-bug." The first witness called by Mr. Rollins was Gustavus Smith, a member of the Insurance Patrol who testified that he was in attendance at the fire, and took charge of the premises after the flames had been extinguished; the place was cleared up, but otherwise remained untouched until the arrival, next morning, of Fire Marshal Sheldon, who made an investigation of the origin of the fire.

Daniel Dempsey, a member of Engine Company No. 9, testified that he knew Bernstein, Perlstein, and Freeman; he had been detailed to watch Perlstein, and had seen him, before the fire took place, about 20 times, sometimes two or three times a day; he knew the other defendants also, and had frequently seen them together; on the night of the fire he saw Bernstein, Freeman, and Perlstein at Siegel's lager-beer saloon, No. 62 East Broadway; they left there about 9:15 P. M., walked up East Broadway to Rutgers-street, and thence to No. 23 Essex-street, next door to which Bernstein's father kept a butcher's shop; Perlstein carried a basket on his arm all the way from the saloon; witness, accompanied by Mr. Perley, of the Fire Marshal's office, remained on the opposite side of the street, and saw Freeman go into a hallway, while Perlstein handed his basket to Bernstein, and after crossing the street and looking cautiously around him, repassed, and followed Freeman into No. 23, while Bernstein, still holding the basket, waited on the corner; shortly afterward Freeman and Perlstein came out of No. 23 together; the former handed Perlstein a demijohn, and both joined Bernstein on the corner; witness and Perley followed the trio, who went through Hester-street to Ludlow, and entered No. 11; Perley went in after them, while witness remained on the opposite side of the street; while awaiting developments witness saw Perlstein reach out through the windows of Levy's apartment and close the blinds; Freeman came out by the alley-way shortly after, and walked up and down the street in front of the premises; Perley also came out, and having told witness to keep a sharp lookout as the men were in the third story, re-entered the building; in about fifteen minutes Perlstein and Bernstein left the building and joined Freeman on the street; all three then walked to the corner of Canal and Ludlow streets, but Bernstein returned and looked up at No. 11. The prisoner and Freeman went back to their headquarters, and No. 62 Broadway, arriving there at about 10 P. M. Witness then went into the nearest engine house, and warned the assistant foreman to be on the look out for an alarm of fire from No. 11 Ludlow-street. The men were shortly hired and up, and everything was put in readiness for the expected alarm. About 10 minutes afterward the alarm sounded, and witness ran after the engine to No. 11 Ludlow-street, where a fire was burning in the room from the window of which he had seen Perlstein put out his head to close the blinds. Witness entered Levy's rooms with the other firemen, and found the place in flames, but the fire was extinguished without delay. After the fire had been put out, witness saw Joseph Levy in company with Bernstein and the prisoner at No. 62 East Broadway. The three men, accompanied by two strangers, went to the residence of the prisoner, at No. 28 Market-street, and remained there about five minutes. Perlstein did not come out again, but Freeman, Bernstein, and the two strangers reappeared, the latter followed one of the strangers to No. 36 Chrystie-street, and lost sight of the others.

Mr. Brooke cross-examined Dempsey at great length as to the improbability of his being able to identify the prisoner in a third story window from across the street, but the witness swore positively that he was able distinctly to recognize Perlstein, it being a bright moonlight night. His testimony in reference to the movements of the prisoner and his alleged confederates on the night of the fire also remained unshaken.

Charles H. Perley, an employe of the Fire Department, testified that on the evening of the fire he tracked Perlstein, Bernstein, and Freeman from No. 62 East Broadway to No. 11 Ludlow-street, and followed them up to Levy's apartments, on the third story; Perlstein knocked at the door, which was entered, and the door was again locked; after about 10 minutes' delay, Freeman came out of the room, went down stairs, and left by the basement; witness re-entered the house, and about five minutes afterward Perlstein and Bernstein came out of Levy's rooms, locked the door, and went down stairs; witness waited for about five minutes, and then saw smoke issuing from the broken fanlight over the door of Levy's rooms; he then broke open the door and found separate fires on the lounge, bureau, table, and bed; the bedclothes were all disarranged, the mattresses being on the top; the bureau drawers were open, and their contents hung out; articles of clothing were scattered all over the room, and a broken lamp lay overturned on the floor; the smell of kerosene-oil was overpowering, and after witness had extinguished the fire he found that the carpet, furniture, and wearing apparel were saturated with that fluid; witness then sounded the alarm, and with the assistance of some citizens succeeded in arresting the progress of the fire; the fires were distinct and separate, and a train had been laid from those in the front room to that in the bedroom; the floor, near the window, where one of the fires had been lit, was much charred, and a pile of cheap calico dresses in the centre of the same room was on fire; he remained in the place until after the arrival of the incurance patrol. Here the witness, Rosen, pointed out on a diagram the positions of the distinct fires discovered in Levy's apartments, and corroborated the testimony of Dempsey in relation to the movements of the prisoner and his alleged confederates after the fire had been extinguished. He was positive that Perlstein was one of the men whom he had seen enter Levy's rooms on the night of the fire.

The witness was subjected to a rigorous cross-examination by Mr. Brooke, after which an adjournment was taken until to-day.

UNLICENSED LIQUOR-DEALERS.

Another spasmodic attempt to enforce the provisions of the Excise law as against unlicensed dealers is imminent. On Monday evening, after a conference with President Morrison, of the Excise Board, Superintendent Walling sent the following order by telegraph to all the Police Captains in the City:

To All:

It is reported that many persons are selling liquors, wines, ale, and beer without licenses. You will take measures to enforce the law against all persons in your precinct who are violating the law in so selling.

G. W. WALLING.

Despite this order, but few of the many liquor-dealers carrying on their business without a license from the Board of Excise have as yet been arrested, but the Police Captains have warned them to procure licenses or they would be arrested. Only five licenses are on record, notwithstanding the fact that there are nearly 2,000 liquor-dealers in this City who are selling liquor in violation of law.

In making a tour of the liquor saloons in his precinct on Tuesday night, Capt. Williams, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, entered the liquor store of Patrick Cuff, No. 402 Fourth-avenue, and inquired whether he had a license. The Captain was referred to what purported to be a license suspended behind the bar. This document, however, proved to be a license issued in 1871, and that expired Aug. 28, 1872. Capt. Williams took possession of this document, and ordered the place closed.

MR. GUMBLETON'S BOOKS OF FEES.

Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, granted the motion on behalf of Mr. J. Adriance Bush, individually, for a writ of peremptory mandamus to compel County Clerk Gumbleton to exhibit his fee-books for inspection by the relator. The decision is as follows:

"After what was said at the close of the argument, it is only necessary to add that in our judgment the previous proceeding is no bar to the present, and for the sufficient reason that the right is clearly continuous. There is nothing to prevent Mr. Bush or any other citizen from examining the books in question every day the County Clerk's office is open, and the denial of the right is in plain disregard of the law. There is nothing in the point that the books are not kept. Mr. Gumbleton makes no such claim, and it is of no consequence what Mr. Bush has been led to believe from the transcript of accounts filed in the Controller's office. The law requires the books to be kept, and, whether the relator believes in their existence or not, Mr. Gumbleton is bound to comply with the law and exhibit them on demand. Motion granted, with costs."

Mr. Gumbleton spent the greater part of the afternoon in consultation with his counsel. It is presumed that he will apply for a stay of proceedings and appeal to the General Term, as he did in the similar proceedings of the Bar Association's committee against him.

THE CHARGES AGAINST THE REGISTER.

Notice of the Governor's decision respecting the answer of Register Loew to the charges made by the Bar Association's Committee on Extortions, was served yesterday on the counsel for the Register. They were unable to hold a consultation yesterday for the purpose of ascertaining what course should be pursued, but will do so in a few days. The Governor's decision gives them the alternative of either standing on the answer as it is, or else of amending this answer on or before Feb. 1. The Governor's conclusion, that the Register's denials are insufficient, is one that is shared in by the lawyers of this City generally. Should Mr. Loew have no better answer to make to the charge of extortion, it is considered that it will go hard with him.

THE CUSTOM-HOUSE FIGHT.

GEN. ARTHUR'S DENIALS OF MR. SHERMAN'S CHARGES.

HIS ANSWER READ BY SENATOR CONKLING TO THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE—THE SUSPENDED COLLECTOR CENSURED FOR OBEYING TREASURY ORDERS—THE REJECTION OF MERRITT'S NOMINATION CONSIDERED CERTAIN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.—At its regular meeting this morning, the Senate Committee on Commerce considered the charges submitted by Secretary Sherman against the recent management of the New-York Custom-house, and Gen. Arthur's answer to them. The answer was read by Senator Conkling himself, and as the reading proceeded was commented upon and discussed in detail by the Senators present. Upward of three hours were consumed in this way, and it was found impossible to agree upon a report this morning. The committee has been called to meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow, however, and there is hardly a doubt that they will be ready with a report early to-morrow afternoon. That it will be adverse to the nomination of Merritt and company there is now no doubt. A prominent Democrat of Senator stated to the TIMES correspondent to-day that Gen. Arthur's answer was so full, specific, and conclusive that all the Republican and nearly all the Democratic Senators who had listened to it were fully determined to vote in favor of sustaining him. The same gentleman stated that, even without Gen. Arthur's answer, the charges of Secretary Sherman were so loose and incoherent as to be practically unworthy of consideration.

In addition to that portion of the answer which was printed in THE TIMES of this morning, it can now be stated that Gen. Arthur's communication is particularly strong in reference to the clause in the Secretary's charges which relates to the employment of Custom-house clerks who, for certain services, received pay from importers. The Secretary specifically charges Gen. Arthur with having kept in his department a number of persons who, from time to time, accepted fees from importers for giving them information in regard to what are known as "commission charges cases;" in other words, for informing such importers of the amounts which had been unduly collected from them by the Customs service, and which they were entitled in receive back from the Government. In answer to this, Gen. Arthur shows, by official communications and by the record, that he was expressly instructed by the Treasury Department to permit clerks to perform for importers the service described. Other charges of a similar character made by the Secretary are refuted in the same way—by a reference to specific orders of his own, instructing the Collector to do exactly the service for which he is now censured.

A close canvass of the Republican Senators, which was made to-day, reveals the fact that not more than five of them will vote for the confirmation of Merritt. The Democrats are divided to some extent, but there is now hardly a doubt that enough of them will vote against Merritt to secure his rejection by a very large majority. Senator Kernan, of New-York, who has been approached by friends of the Administration and repeatedly urged to aid them, continues to remain neutral, and to applications for advice, which he has received from a number of Southern Senators, has replied that he took but little interest in the contest, and believed that each Democratic Senator might vote upon it according to his own inclinations without detriment to the party organization. Gen. Kernit is still actively pushing Merritt's claims, and the Administration, as usual, complacently predicts that it will come out with flying colors. Disinterested persons, who have the very best opportunity for judging, however, unite in expressing the opinion that Mr. Merritt will not receive more than 15 votes.

THE WEST AND THE SOLID SOUTH.

A PET SCHEME SPOILED BY GEN. BRAGG'S DENUNCIATION OF SOUTHERN WAR CLAIMS —THE "FIRE-EATERS" PREPARING TO DEFEND THEIR SO-CALLED HONOR.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.—The breach between Southern and Western Democrats, which occurred in the House yesterday during the discussion on the bill granting to certain minor heirs of an original Southern claimant for damages for property destroyed during the rebellion the right to sue in the Court of Claims, has since been the principal topic of discussion in political circles here. One of the pet schemes, long cherished by the more intelligent leaders of the South, has been to unite in political harmony the South and West, and so, for a time at least, place the East under the control of those two sections. To this end numerous conventions have been held in the Mississippi Valley and in all the cotton States, and White League orators have talked themselves hoarse in regard to the natural bond between the great West and the great South. In view of these facts it is perhaps not to be wondered at that the bitter family feud which occurred in the Democratic camp yesterday has given great uneasiness to the Southern leaders most interested. Gen. Bragg, the brave little Democratic soldier from Wisconsin, who was brave enough to denounce Southern claims as frauds and to defy the solid South, has been unsparingly denounced as a traitor to his party and to his section by Mr. Chalmers, of Fort Pillow, and other "fire-eaters" of the same sort, have prepared exceedingly sharp speeches in reply. These they intended to deliver to-day, and it is believed that in the debate which would certainly have followed, a number of independent and conscientious Democrats from the West would have joined Mr. Foster and Gen. Bragg in denouncing the unjust claims of the South and in properly rebuking the arrogance of the Representatives from that section. To prevent the fight which it was known must follow, the leading Democrats in the House and Senate met in an informal caucus last evening, and determined to do everything in their power to prevent a renewal of the discussion. In this they were, for the time, at least, successful. Chalmers, and one or two others from the South, who believed that the honor of their people, and all that sort of thing, had been assailed by Gen. Bragg, made an attempt to bring the bill up, but they were defeated by their own party friends. It is understood, however, that, in direct opposition to the advice of their associates, they will to-morrow make another effort in the same direction.

MR. GOODE'S EDUCATIONAL SCHEME.

THE BILL DEBATED IN THE HOUSE—WESTERN AND SOUTHERN DEMOCRATS AGAIN EXCHANGE COMPLIMENTS—A COLORED CONGRESSMAN'S ELOQUENT SPEECH.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.—The House wasted a good deal of valuable time to-day in listening to a number of set speeches in reference to the bill from the Committee on Education and Labor, which provides, in substance, for the distribution of the proceeds of the sales of public lands between the States and Territories for the education of the people. Many of the Southern members spoke in favor of the measure, while the Western men were generally opposed to it. Mr. Mills, of Texas, one of the most independent Democrats in the House, opposed the bill, and characterized it as a sham. Mr. Keifer, of Ohio, asked Mr. Goode, of Virginia, who had charge of the measure, if the Southern States would not discriminate against the blacks in the distribution of the fund, and if he would admit an amendment forbidding such discrimination. Mr. Goode replied he would admit such an amendment if it did not provide for mixed schools. Mr. Cain, the colored member from South Carolina, made the most notable speech of the day, greatly annoying the Southern members by quoting statistics to show that the number of illiterate colored persons in the South was smaller in proportion to the population than the number of ignorant whites in that section. He created a shout of laughter by declaring that education was needed everywhere, but especially in South Carolina and Louisiana, and that most of all was greater enlightenment needed in Mississippi, the State where the white gentlemen governed according to their own peculiar plan. At the close of his remarks, which were listened to with deserved attention, the eloquent colored Congressman was the recepient of many warm congratulations from his Republican colleagues.

REPUDIATION IN LOUISIANA.

THE DEMOCRATIC LEADERS DETERMINE TO REPUDIATE A LARGE PART OF THE STATE'S OBLIGATIONS AND REDUCE THE INTEREST ON THE RECENTLY-FUNDED CONSOLS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.—From letters received from New-Orleans this morning, by one of the most widely-known capitalists in Washington, it appears that the Democratic leaders who control the Legislature of Louisiana have substantially determined to reduce the State debt by repudiating all that portion of the outstanding consols which are in excess of the debt as it existed before the war. This they will do on the plea that the indebtedness contracted since the war is chargeable to "Radicals and carpet-baggers," and is, therefore, not legitimate or worthy of consideration. It is also proposed to reduce the interest on the recently-funded consols from 7 to 5 per cent. Just how audacious this proposal is will be better understood when it is stated that the old bonds of the State, which have been funded in the new 7 per cent. consols, were many of them bearing 8 per cent. interest, and it was part of the consideration of the contract, when the holders of these 8 per cent. bonds—most of them foreigners—consented to scale them 40 cents on the dollar of their face value and fund them in the new 7 per cent. consols, that the interest appropriation should, by constitutional amendment, be made perpetual till principal and interest were extinguished. Such constitutional amendments were adopted embodying this proviso, and the validity of the contract thus entered into has been more than once ratified by acts of the Legislature, approved and promulgated by Gov. Nicholls himself. For instance, Act No. 58, approved by Nicholls March 12, 1877, is entitled, "An act to enforce effectually the constitutional amendments proposed Jan. 24, 1874, ratified at the general election held on the 2d of November, 1874, relative to the State debt and the funding thereof."

The matter of reducing the debt materially by excluding all bonds not of ante-bellum origin will present several startling difficulties. For example, the Democratic post-bellum Legislature of 1868-9 authorized two $1,000,000 and also a $3,000,000 issue of levee bonds. These bonds were largely taken up abroad, principally in Holland, at 70 and 80 cents on the dollar in gold, and the proceeds were put into the levees of the State. Nearly $4,000,000 of the bonds issued by the Warmoth carpet-bag Legislature were for obligations authorized by that Democratic post-bellum Legislature. The larger part of the bonds issued by Warmoth in accordance with acts passed by his own Legislature were questioned in the courts by Kellogg, and declared null and void by decision of the court of last resort. Kellogg himself issued no bonds except $650,000 of railroad bonds, authorized by acts passed before his term of office. In short, all talk of reducing the rate of interest on the constitutionally guaranteed debt of Louisiana, or of picking out from the mass of new consols particular bonds as representing alleged carpet-bag rascalities, has only one purpose, thinly veiled, and that is repudiation.

CONGRESSIONAL TOPICS.

A NOVEL POSTAL SUGGESTION — SENATOR HOWE'S DEFEAT ATTRIBUTED TO ADMINISTRATION INFLUENCE — PROPOSED RETIREMENT OF SENATOR CHRISTIANCY AND THE ELECTION OF ZACH. CHANDLER.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.—The committee of Congress which has under consideration the question of the classification of mail matter is daily in receipt of letters from all parts of the country making suggestions. One correspondent, who has evidently made a deep study of the Postal laws, suggests, among other things, the following: "The poor send letters, the postage should be 1 cent; the speculator sends circulators, and can afford to pay 2 cents. A man doesn't take a paper if he is not able to pay for it. Let him pay 1 cent each. Magazines and other literary matter are taken by the rich, make them pay 2 cents."

James H. Sloss, who was to-day nominated to be United States Marshal for the Northern District of Alabama, served two terms in Congress from Alabama, and was one of the most influential and competent Representatives that that section had in the House. He has, ever since his retirement from the House, been active in politics, and has wielded considerable influence in his State. It is believed that his nomination will meet with the approval of a majority of the Senate.

Friends of Senator Howe now in Washington claim that his defeat was brought about by the direct interference of agents of the Administration. During the French arms controversy, Senator Howe was exceedingly bitter in his antagonism to Secretary Schurz, who was then a member of the upper house, and he has recently been regarded as the leader of the anti-Administration party in the Senate, and made the first pronounced speech in opposition to Mr. Hayes' policy which was listened to in that body. For these reasons, it is known that both Secretary Schurz and the President have been strongly opposed to him, although no one claims that the Secretary of the Interior did anything to prejudice the result in Wisconsin, it is stated with much positiveness that, with the advice of members of the Administration and by the aid of E. W. Keyes, the Postmaster at Madison, who threw all his influence for ex-Senator Carpenter, Mr. Howe was defeated. Of course, it is not claimed that Senator-elect Carpenter is the choice of the Administration, but it is stated that the successful candidate was selected as being eligible and in every way preferable to Senator Howe.

For some time past it has been a matter of comment in Washington that Senator Christiancy, of Michigan, has been willing to retire from the Senate if some place more suitable to his tastes were offered him. This desire has been perhaps intensified by what is believed to be the popular clamor in Michigan, especially since the late election, for the return of Zach Chandler to the Senate. It has also been a current rumor that the Republican leaders of Michigan have been for some time casting about to find some place which Mr. Christiancy would be willing to accept instead of the Senatorship. His term of service in that body expires in 1881, and it is generally conceded that he cannot be re-elected. It is known that he would much prefer a Judicial position, and when Justice Hunt was stricken with paralysis his friends were confident that if he was retired Mr. Christiancy would get his place. But for some reason not explained that idea has been abandoned, and it is now stated here that he would be glad to accept the mission to Brazil, and that the President would be equally glad to tender it to him. This statement, however, may be taken with the grain of allowance that it is being circulated by a number of Michigan politicians who are now in Washington, and who are known to be anxious to have Mr. Chandler returned to the Senate.

THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

DR. LINDERMAN SAID TO BE DYING.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.—Dr. Linderman, Director of the Mint, is dying. At 12:30 o'clock this morning he was still alive, but after a consultation his physicians informed him and his family that he could not survive many days, and that he might die before daylight. He expressed himself as being resigned, and cheerfully took part in the religious services which were held in his room. Last Summer, during his vacation at the Isles of Shoals, Dr. Linderman contracted a severe cold, from which he has been suffering ever since. He has also been afflicted with a serious affection of the kidneys, and has recently grown so feeble that he has only been able to speak in a whisper. Recent newspaper attacks, and reflections upon his official record which were made by Congressman Glover, caused him much uneasiness, and are believed to have had much to do with his present condition. He is 50 years of age, and until recently has enjoyed the most robust health. His death will be sincerely regretted by a large circle of friends in Washington and elsewhere.

THE APPROPRIATION BILLS.

PROVISIONS OF THE ARMY AND POST OFFICE BILLS AS REPORTED TO THE HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.—The Army Appropriation bill was reported to the House by Representative Hewitt to-day. The total amount appropriated by it is $26,747,300. The total estimates amounted to $29,084,500. The appropriation for the support of the Army during the year 1879 was $25,778,187. The committee, at their session this afternoon, concluded to strike out a number of the provisions informally agreed upon in their draft of the bill, and, as reported to the House, the new legislation recommended for enactment in the bill is as follows: Each member of the next two graduating classes of the Military Academy may elect to receive $750 and mileage to his place of residence, the acceptance of which shall render him ineligible to appointment in the Army until two years after his graduation. The existing limitation of the retired list is to be repealed, and every officer who has been 30 years in service, upon his own application, be placed upon it; and on or before Jan. 1, 1880, every officer who shall have rendered 40 years' service, or who shall be 62 years of age, shall be retired; but the President may extend the limit of service 65 years in any case where, in his judgment, the officer possesses peculiar fitness for his position. It is also provided that the Secretary of War shall cause reports to be made showing what officers may, in the opinion of their superior officers, be unfit for the efficient performance of military duty, and if any such officer shall not appear before the Examining Board, he shall be retired; but in case of such application, he shall be retired or continued in service according to the recommendation of the Retiring Board, as passed by the Board.

The principal items of the Post Office Appropriation bill, reported to the House from the Committee on Appropriations to-day, are as follows: For compensation of Postmasters, $7,350,000; for clerks in Post Offices, $3,460,000; for payment of letter-carriers, $1,900,000; for mail transportation on star routes, $5,690,633; for transportation by railroads, $8,715,310; for transportation by steam-boat routes, $750,000; for transportation by postal-cars, $1,250,000; for compensation to railway postal clerks, $1,350,000; route agents, $1,075,000; for transportation of foreign mails, $250,000. It is provided that if the revenue of the department shall be insufficient to meet the appropriations made by this act, then the sum of $4,291,319, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be appropriated to supply deficiencies in the revenue of the Post Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1880. The sum appropriated by the bill is $34,960,343. The total estimates upon which the bill is based were $36,571,900. The appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1879, were $33,256,373.

A MORMON PETITION.

TWO DAUGHTERS OF BRIGHAM YOUNG ASK CONGRESS TO REPEAL THE ANTI-POLYGAMY LAW.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.—The memorial of Emeline B. Wells and Seina Young Williams, daughters of the late Brigham Young, presented to the House by the Speaker to-day, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, asks for the repeal of the Anti-Polygamy law of 1862, and for legislation to protect the women and children of Utah Territory. They say that previous to the decision by the Supreme Court of the United States that the law of 1862 was constitutional, the Mormon women generally implicitly believed it to be right to live under their present civilization they have a peaceful, prosperous, and healthful condition of society. Their children are owned and supported by their fathers, and equally recognized as heirs to their father's estates, and women are protected from the temptation to infanticide and kindred crimes; that the enforcement of the law of 1862 would imprison their husbands, despoil and destroy their homes, render their children illegitimate before the world, and leave themselves and many thousands of women desolate and unprotected; that this example, set by the United States, would encourage mobs to assault and afflict them as in times past when they were driven from State to State, far out beyond the pale of this Republic; that after President Fillmore, "by the advice and consent of the Senate," appointed Brigham Young, a practical polygamist, Governor of Utah, they had good reason to believe that the Government would continue to protect them in their religious faith and its practice; and that harsh measures toward the Mormons, such as destruction of families and homes, would be a cruel agency to drive many to desperation, while just and humane treatment would foster and strengthen their love and affection for the Government, thereby securing a more peaceful issue of affairs now pending. In conclusion, the petitioners ask: "That in any future legislation concerning the marriage relation in any Territory under its jurisdiction, it will consider the rights, the hearts, the characters of the women to be affected by such legislation, and that it will consider the permanent care and welfare of children as the sure foundation of the State."

NOTES FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Jan 23, 1879.

The subscriptions to the 4 per cent. loan since yesterday's report have amounted to $9,089,600.

The following-named national banks were to-day designated as depositories of public moneys to receive deposits on account of subscriptions to the 4 per cent. funded loan: Dover Plains National Bank, at Dover Plains, N. Y.; National Iron Bank, at Falls Village, Conn.; Hocking Valley National Bank, at Lancaster, Ohio.

The Secretary of the Treasury has addressed a communication to the Committee on Commerce of the Senate and the Committee of Ways and Means of the House, requesting that the petition to Congress of A. T. Stewart & Co., of New-York, that an investigation be made into the aid-glove cases be granted, and that the investigation be made as soon as practicable.

The joint commission on the transfer of the Indian Bureau, which was to have met to-day, postponed their session on account of the absence from the city of Senator Ogleaby, and the illness of Judge Boone, who has an attack of rheumatism. A meeting will be held on Saturday, and, in all probability, the question of transfer, so far as the commission is concerned, will at that time be disposed of.

The receipts from internal revenue to-day were $316,132 38, and from Customs $448,929 14.

The Census bill reported in the Senate to-day by Mr. Morrill, in behalf of the Committee on the Census, is substantially the bill introduced in the House by Mr. Cox, of New-York, with the exception that it provides for the appointment of Supervisors by the Secretary of the Interior, and appropriates $250,000 for preliminary expenses instead of $3,000,000 for the expenses of the entire census. It also contains a clause giving the Superintendent of the Census authority to employ special agents to enumerate the Indians not taxed, with such information as to their condition as may be obtainable. The clause which provides for obtaining statistics of corporations is substantially retained.

Representative Finley, of Ohio, has submitted to the House Committee on Public Expenditures his report with reference to the investigation of the Government Printing Office, which has been in progress for some time. After charging general extravagance in the management of the department, Mr. Finley recommends the abolition of the printing office, and that the printing of the Government be let out by contract to the lowest bidder. The report proposes that only the Congressional Record, and bills offered in either House of Congress, be printed in Washington. It is understood that there are only one or two members of the committee who will give the report their support, on the ground that in the event of its adoption all the printing would necessarily go out of the city, and hence great distress would follow among those now engaged in that office.

THE LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

EUROPE'S EASTERN PROBLEMS.

THE BRITISH ADVANCE IN AFGHANISTAN ORDERED TO BE STOPPED—RUSSIA TRYING TO REGAIN A DIRECT INFLUENCE OVER TURKISH AFFAIRS—WHO SHALL RULE BULGARIA?

EDINBURGH, Jan. 23.—The Scotsman's London correspondent hears on the highest authority that the Government, because of anxiety to avoid a mishap in Afghanistan during the February snows, sent dispatches to India on Tuesday suggesting that the advance from Kandahar and Jalalabad had better be stopped, and also inquiring in regard to the feasibility of holding Kandahar through the Winter.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 22.—This evening Safvet Pasha, the new Ambassador to Paris, has started for his post. It is believed that he was the central figure of an intrigue for the overthrow of Grand Visier Kheireddin Pasha. His departure, therefore, is a victory for the latter. It is believed that several further conferences will be necessary before the definitive treaty between Russia and Turkey can be signed. The Russian wording makes it of superior authority to the treaty of Berlin, thus placing Turkey under the direct influence of Russia. The Turks reject this formula.

TIRNOVA, Jan. 23.—While the name of Prince Alexander, of Battenberg, is in the mouths of the younger and noiser members of the Bulgarian Assembly of Notables, which is to elect a ruler for Bulgaria, the older leaders favor Prince Henri of Reuss, formerly German Ambassador to Constantinople, as being a man of greater age and experience, and better fitted to guide the Principality in the earliest and most critical stages of its existence.

LONDON, Jan. 24.—The Standard's Vienna correspondent telegraphs as follows: "Rustchuk advices report that a motion will be passed in the Bulgarian Assembly to postpone the election of a Prince to rule over the Province until Bulgaria and Roumelia have been invited."

GERMANY'S AFFAIRS OF STATE.

ACTION OF THE PRUSSIAN DIET IN OPPOSITION TO THE PARLIAMENTARY DISCIPLINE BILL—INCOME AND CLASS TAXES IN THE EMPIRE.

BERLIN, Jan. 23.—The lower house of the Prussian Diet to-day discussed a motion introduced by Deputy Heereman, an Ultramontane, calling upon the Prussian Ministry to instruct its representatives in the Federal Council to oppose the Parliamentary Discipline bill. A motion made by the Conservatives to pass to the order of the day was rejected by a vote of 299 to 62. Herr Heereman's motion was also rejected, but one of similar tendency, introduced by the National Liberals and Progressists, was adopted, to the effect that existing guarantees of liberty of speech and the independent standing of regulations relative to parliamentary business and discipline, constitute the essential basis of both the Prussian and Imperial Constitutions, and that, relative to the bill now before the Federal Council, the protection of constitutional rights can safely be left to the Reichstag itself. During the debate Count Stolberg-Wernegerode, the Representative of the Imperial Chancellor, declared that the Diet was incompetent to interfere in a matter which was before the Federal Council. The Government, therefore, declined to make any statement concerning the contents of the bill or the attitude they intended to assume in regard thereto.

At Tuesday's sitting of the Prussian Budget Committee the Minister of Finance declared in his own name, though not on behalf of the Ministry of State, that until a new source of revenue from indirect taxation was created in Germany, and until it was ascertained what portion of the surplus could be transferred to the individual States, it would be useless to discuss the question of income and class taxes, as any reform of the present system of taxation would be impossible. As soon as the matriculatory contribution of Prussia to the Empire decreased, owing to the imposition of new imperial taxes, or any surplus in the imperial revenue arising from new sources of income fell to the share of Prussia, the class and income taxes should be remitted to that amount for the year in question.

The German Army estimates show an increase of 80,000 men.

FRENCH POLITICS.

COMPLETE AMNESTY TO BE URGED BY THE RADICALS—M. DU BORT'S RESIGNATION —PROPOSED SESSION OF THE CHAMBER IN PARIS.

PARIS, Jan. 23.—It is asserted that the Radicals will introduce motions in favor of complete amnesty to-morrow, and will introduce bills relative to freedom of the press and the right of public meeting in a short time.

Rentes rose in price to-day upon a rumor that an interpellation would be addressed to M. Léon Say, Minister of Finance, in the Chamber of Deputies, in regard to the re-conversion of the 5 per cent. rentes, and that he would reply that he considered such conversion inopportune in the present circumstances, and impossible for a long time to come.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 23.—M. Say presented the budget for 1880 in the Chamber of Deputies this afternoon.

In the Chamber of Deputies to-day, M. Laroche-Goubert proposed that the Chamber meet in Paris until the weather becomes milder. The question was left undecided. It is asserted that M. Grévy, President of the Chamber, is not in favor of the proposition.

LONDON, Jan. 23.—The Pall Mall Gazette says: "M. Teisserenc du Bort's resignation of the Ministry of Agriculture and Commerce may be regarded as proof that French public opinion disapproves of the reactionary Customs policy foreshadowed by his denunciation of the treaties of commerce. We may now reasonably hope for a liberal and economic policy on the part of France.

LONDON, Jan. 24.—A Paris dispatch to the Times says: "The motion made by Deputy Laroche-Joubert, yesterday, that the Chamber meet in Paris, was dropped as unconstitutional."

Articles in the République Française show M. Gambetta's continued hostility to the Cabinet.

The Standard's correspondent at Paris says there are indications that Gambetta will support the motion for a general amnesty, whereby he would sustain a Parliamentary defeat, but regain all his outside popularity.

WHAT A SEA CAPTAIN SAW.

A SHIP ON FIRE WITH A STEAMER ALONGSIDE —A WARNING NOT TO SAY ANYTHING ABOUT THE MATTER.

LONDON, Jan. 23.—The Captain of a ship recently arrived at Queenstown writes to Lloyds that he saw, 50 miles west of Fastnet, on the 16th inst., a steamer alongside of a burning wreck. The steamer ordered him to keep on his course and say nothing about the affair, under the penalty of being also burned. The steamer had not the appearance of being a merchantman or man-of-war. She had 150 or 200 men on board, apparently English.

SEVERE WEATHER IN EUROPE.

COLD AND SUFFERING IN GREAT BRITAIN— VIOLENT SNOW-STORMS IN RUSSIA.

LONDON, Jan. 23.—Severe cold weather prevails, and much suffering and destitution are reported in all parts of Great Britain.

Violent snow-storms have occurred during the past three days in Ukraine, blocking the Kharkov and Azov, and Poltava and Soomy, and other railways. Seven thousand workmen are engaged in clearing the lines of communication between Moscow and Sebastopol, which are greatly impeded.

Lloyds' dispatch from Antwerp, dated yesterday, says: "The ice in the Roads and the river has considerably increased since yesterday. A boat coming in was capsized, and eight men were drowned."

A dispatch to Lloyds from Heligoland, dated to-day, says: "The Elbe is blocked with ice, and steamers are unable to force an entrance."

MADRID, Jan. 23.—The Spanish Vice-Consul at Puerto Plata, San Domingo, has been dismissed for sanctioning the arrest of two insurgent Generals who had taken refuge on board a Spanish steamer, and were afterward shot. The Spanish Government has demanded satisfaction from San Domingo for outraging the protection of its flag.

ROME, Jan. 23.—The Vatican will shortly take steps to re-establish relations with the Mexican Government. Should the negotiations prove unsuccessful, the wants of the Mexican Church will be supplied in the best manner possible without the intervention of the Government. The question of the possibility and expediency of rendering the Catholic Church in England directly dependent upon the Pope, instead of upon the Congregation Propaganda Fide, is still under consideration.

In the Senate to-day, the Minister of Worship, in the course of debate said that since the accession of Pope Leo, who spoke in calm, elevated language, certain concessions had become easier. The Government would pursue a policy of moderation and endeavor to smooth the difficulties relative to the appointments to Sees in the royal patronage, while upholding the rights of the Crown.

SLAUGHTERING THE CHEYENNES.

THE INDIANS DETERMINED TO DIE RATHER THAN SURRENDER — DETAILS OF THE FIGHTING.

FORT ROBINSON, Neb., Jan. 23.—Couriers arrived this morning confirming the news, received late last night, of the battle between Capt. Wessells' command, consisting of four companies of the Third Cavalry, and the escaped Cheyennes, yesterday morning. Trails were discovered leading in the direction of the large range of hills about 18 miles north-west of Bluff Station, a distance of 46 miles from this post, and were followed by Capt. Wessells until he was within three miles of the hills, where he halted and formed skirmish lines. All four companies were deployed as skirmishers, Company F, Lieut. Baxter, moving from the south to the north-east side, Company H, Capt. Wessells, directly opposite. Company E, Capt. Lawson, closed in at the mouth of the ravine, where the Indians had intrenched themselves, and Company A moved directly down the ravine, hemming them in on all sides, leaving no possible avenue of escape.

The Indians had placed themselves in a deep wash-out, keeping under cover. As soon as the skirmishers were within 150 yards of the Indian stronghold, the latter opened fire, killing Sergt. Taggart and Privates Brown and Nelson, of Company A, and dangerously, if not fatally, wounding Private Delaise, of Company H. Notwithstanding the dreadful volley poured into the troops, they steadily advanced, and when within 25 yards of the savages' position, fire was opened on all sides with terrible effect. At this moment Capt. Wessells, leading his company and fully cheering them forward, received a slight scalp wound from a pistol in the hands of one of the Cheyennes, rendering him completely insensible. Lieut. Chase, of Company A, seeing the commanding officer fall, rushed forward instantly, seized Capt. Wessells and carried him beyond the range of the enemy's fire. Then, dashing at the head of his own company, he led the men to the very edge of the washout, where they fought the enemy with unabated fury. Meanwhile, Capt. Wessells, having regained consciousness, again came to the front, and seeing the ground strewn with the dead bodies of the savages, implored his men to cease firing, in view to getting the remaining Cheyennes to surrender, but the latter stubbornly refused, and rushed at the troops with formidable hunting knives, having expended all their ammunition. They seemed determined not to surrender, but before they had advanced many paces a volley was fired by the troops, killing most of them. Companies F and E were in best positions to accomplish much, and Col. Lewis, with B and D Companies, remained on the opposite bluff from where Capt. Wessells started, and, not knowing the position of Wessells' command, arrived too late for action.

At the cessation of the firing the dead bodies of 23 Indians were found in rifle-pits occupied by them. This number included 17 warriors, four squaws, and two papooses. Nine remained, of whom one warrior and five squaws were more or less wounded, and three squaws were unhurt. Of the troops engaged the three already mentioned were killed, and Capt. Wessells and one private of his company wounded. The latter cannot live. Ambulances left here at an early hour this morning to bring in the dead and wounded, and are now moving back slowly. They are expected here with the troops to-morrow afternoon.

RENO AT THE CUSTER MASSACRE.

THE TESTIMONY YESTERDAY—WHITTAKER PROPOSES TO TAKE THE CASE BEFORE THE SENATE.

CHICAGO, Jan. 23.—From the evidence of Lieut. Varnum in the Reno inquiry to-day, it was gathered that Gen. Custer must have kept himself informed and known that Reno's men were standing on the defensive. It was the witness' idea at the time that Custer had either been outnumbered like Reno or had gone down the river to join Terry, who was coming up.

Dr. R. H. Porter, who was Acting Assistant Surgeon under Custer, and was with Reno's battalion, was next put on the stand. From his testimony it seems that he also understood that Custer was expected to support Reno. The Adjutant had told Reno that Custer was coming along when Benteen was seen approaching after Reno had got to the hill. The men supposed at first that it was Custer coming to their relief.

Frederick Whittaker, of Mount Vernon, N. Y., who makes the charges of cowardice against Major Reno, which are now being investigated, arrived here last night to give his testimony. He says he has come to Chicago "solely in the hope of securing justice for the memory of Gen. Custer, by bringing to light the whole truth about the battle of the Little Big Horn, and the campaign in which the General met his death. Since I have been here I have become satisfied that the scope of the present inquiry and the orders by which the court is limited are too narrow to insure the revelation of all the facts bearing on the question of who is responsible for the Custer disaster. I have, therefore, made application for a further and fuller investigation in the highest tribunal of the country—the Senate of the United States—and private letters from Washington assure me that this application will, in all probability, soon be granted." Mr. Whittaker has heretofore publicly charged Capt. Benteen with a disobedience of orders on that day, in that he did not move more quickly to Custer's support as ordered. He now says he is satisfied that Benteen is wholly blameless for the disaster of the Little Big Horn. He makes this correction in justice to the living and the dead.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Jan. 23.—In the United States Circuit Court to-day, Judge Settle sentenced the Brevard County Canvassing Board, convicted of making a false return of the election, Lee, the County Clerk, was sentenced to three years, and Wright and Johns, Sheriff and Justice, respectively, to one year each in the Albany Penitentiary. Lee is also a State Senator from Brevard County. All other election cases have been continued to the May term of court.

SOUTH CAROLINA'S RULERS.

TESTIMONY OF WHITE AND COLORED REPUBLICANS AS TO INTIMIDATION AND BALLOT-BOX STUFFING.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Jan. 23.—The first witness before the Teller committee to-day was C. C. Hayne, a colored Republican, who testified to the beating of Freeman, the stuffing of ballot-boxes at the Palmetto Engine-house, and the rejection of colored voters in the Eighth Ward.

J. J. Young, a colored Republican, who was Supervisor at the Thirty-two Mile House poll, testified that when the ballot-box was opened an excess of 341 ballots was found, all of which were Democratic tissue tickets; the surplus votes were drawn out, and all but five were Republican votes. The witness saw only two tissue tickets voted. He testified that tissue tickets had been used by the Republicans at primary elections in Charleston years ago.

Samuel Lee, a colored Republican, from Sumter, testified that early in the canvass, at a precinct meeting at Swimming Pens, he was given notice that no organization of the Republican Party would be allowed there; the witness persisted, and 20 armed white men threatened to shoot him, and then rode off. He described the interference of the Democrats with the Republican Convention at Sumter, when a there was a disturbance, but nobody was hurt. He next described the Rafting Creek meeting, where the Democrats insisted on being heard, and told him that if he did not call the meeting to order he would be taken back to Sumter; he was knocked down, taken in a buggy to Sumter, and told that if he would not promise not to call another Republican meeting in the county he would be killed. At the Hampton meeting he was ill-treated for asking Gov. Hampton a question, but Hampton rescued him. The meeting on Oct. 12 was described at length, the witness claiming that the Democrats had cannon to intimidate the negroes, and that one of the guns was loaded with ten-penny nails; the election was quiet, but there were 215 names more on the Democratic poll-list than there were on the list kept by the witness. These votes, he claimed, were tissue tickets which had been voted in the large Democratic ballots in the extra names on the list he was told were taken from the Auditor's books. On cross-examination the witness testified that he was a candidate for Congress in opposition to the regular Republican ticket in 1874, and during the canvass had charged the Republicans with fraud, corruption, and intimidating the negroes; he admitted that he was not present at the meeting of Oct. 12, and that loaded anvils were often fired off to make a noise at political meetings; he knew that it had been proposed to hold a joint meeting on Oct. 12.

J. H. Stewart, colored, a school-teacher, was called, and corroborated the testimony of Lee as to the Rafting Creek meeting, the meeting on Oct. 12 and the fraudulent voting at the election with tissue tickets. On cross-examination he admitted that both he and Lee had made speeches at Rafting Creek without interruption, and that it was known before Oct. 12 that a Democratic meeting was to be held at Sumter on that day; the Democratic meeting was held at the depot, some distance from the Republican meeting; he heard no shots fired during the day; he heard that leading Democrats did their best to prevent a difficulty.

T. J. Coghlan, white, Republican, age 76, was called. He spoke at the Republican meeting on Oct. 12; he never recognized Hampton as Governor, and considered him an imbecile; after the meeting he called the Republicans together at the Court-house to keep them out of trouble; the Democrats threatened to kill him; some "Red Shirts" approached him and he drew his pistol and bade them keep off. The witness corroborated the testimony of Lee and Stewart as to the election.

At 4 P. M. the invitation of Collector Baldwin the Teller committee this afternoon visited the points of interest in Charleston Harbor on the revenue cutter Moccasin. The members disembarked at Fort Sumter, and attentively examined the plan and site of the national jettes now in process of construction, with which it was evident they were favorably impressed.

PENNSYLVANIA ADMINISTRATION.

A COMPLIMENT TO EX-GOV. HOYT—A WILD THEORY AS TO THE CAUSE OF THE DELAY IN APPOINTING THE NEW CABINET.

HARRISBURG, Jan. 23.—Gov. Hoyt to-day appointed ex-Gov. Hartranft to be Major-General of the National Guard. Upon the official announcement of the appointment in the Senate, that body went into executive session, and unanimously confirmed it. This is an unusual compliment, and must be gratifying to the distinguished soldier thus honored, as, under the rule, executive appointments must lie over, and a single objection would have prevented the suspension of the rule. Speaker Long to-day announced the standing committees of the House. Those of the Senate were announced yesterday, so that both branches are fully organized for the serious business of the session.

Gov. Hoyt has not yet announced the names of his Secretary of State and Att dicted him in everything he said; I was called by Mr. Gibson.

Q.—Before you were examined, did Mr. Stenger—Witness (interrupting)—No, Sir, Mr. Stenger, never.

Q.—Please hear the question; did Mr. Stenger ask if what Dula was saying was true? A.—No, Sir; nobody did; of course, I knew it was true, although I contradicted it; I never knew anything of this business before I went on the stand; when I had been examined $450 was handed to me in a scrap of paper; I took it then, but returned it afterward to Mr. Gibson and Mr. Weber; I told them I was going to expose them, and Mr. Weber tried to "fix me" to go before the committee at Atlantic City, but I refused.

Q.—Your affidavit says that you were instructed by Mr. Stenger to report "not found" when you had any subpœnas to serve upon Republicans without A.—It was not Mr. Stenger, but Mr. Maddox; it is a mistake, and I altered it as soon as I saw it in the newspapers.

The witness then stated how, when acting as Sergeant-at-Arms of the committee, he had returned 12 or 13 subpœnas, with the report, "not found;" he did so on instructions from Mr. Maddox; in all these cases they were witnesses who were Republicans, or whom he was unable to "fix up" to testify as Maddox desired.

The witness was next examined with regard to the telegrams sent in his name to Carter and Gibson. Weber, he said, told him that Gibson and Maddox had promised him $10,000 in cash, and guaranteed that his alleged defalcation as Treasurer of the West Feliciana School Board should be squared. The telegrams in witness' name were signed by him for Weber, who promised to hold himself responsible for everything that occurred.

Q.—And yet you were going to expose him all over the country? A.—Yes; he knew what I could say before the committee, and thought that by getting me to write these telegrams he would get my silence; I do not know that they were satisfied about my making the statement that Gibson had bought me, but I know that neither Weber nor Maddox nor Gibson would dare to make an enemy of me; why, I could get $50 or $60 from them at any time; they kept me all the time and paid my board bills.

Q.—After signing these telegrams for Weber, asking for money, did you never send any similar requests for yourself? A.—No; I did not want anything; I had returned them $450 before that.

Q.—Were all the telegrams placed in the envelope with your affidavit? A.—All except one, which was from Gibson; he telegraphed that he was sure not to be forced into buying testimony by threats or blackmailing; this was in answer to a telegram from Weber calling him a thief and a scoundrel, and stating that he ought to be put in the Penitentiary.

Q.—Now, when did it strike you that you had been doing wrong by giving such evidence as that laid by you before this committee? A.—When Gov. Cox was examining me; he gave me a pretty close examination, and if he had kept on a bit longer he would have found it all out; that satisfied me that I should not do so on the stand any more.

Q.—Do you suppose you have been able to give perfectly satisfactory answers to Gov. Cox, you would not have come to that opinion? A.—Yes, Sir, I should; I saw that when on the stand it is very easy to tell the truth, but not very easy to stick to a lie.

Q.—Then Gov. Cox's testimony is true? A.—No, I think I kept even with him; you would not go on the stand and let anybody get the best of you, would you? [Laughter.] I think if a man goes on the stand to testify to anything, why, if he goes in he lying, he must lie right through; otherwise he should let it alone.

Q.—Now, if you wanted to expose this lying, why did you not write about it to somebody—to John Sherman, or anybody—instead of spending a month at New-Orleans trying to persuade Mr. Morris Marks to take your statement? A.—Well, Sir, I don't know; I say nothing but what is the truth; if I have done anything that is not straight, I should like it to be shown up; I have got as clear a conscience as any man around this table. [Laughter.]

Q.—Now, you began by telling Maddox and Carter that you had perjured yourself for them, and would not do it any more, and they discharged you. A.—I was discharged, but cannot say that was the reason.

Q.—And after that they paid you $25 to $50 to keep you still? A.—Yes, they did; they did not think that I would expose them after all.

Q.—You received $450 to swear to a lie, and thereupon you do the swearing but return the money. Then you tell them you are going to expose them. What do you get for that? A.—Nothing, Sir.

Q.—You do it for conscience sake. When you came here did you enter into negotiations with anybody as to being paid? A.—No, Sir; I have never thought of such a thing; I do not remember ever being in a gentleman's room and saying I was out of money; that the Republicans were playing with me, and that I was not to be played with unless something was done for me; that if they did not help me I should contradict my affidavit. No, Sir. The boot was on the other leg. Somebody came to me; that was Mr. Maddox; I have not received a cent since I came here, and have not complained about it.

Mr. Potter then cross-examined him upon the evidence tendered by the witness at New-Orleans, taking the questions almost seriatim as they stood, and requesting the witness to point out those which were untrue. A great part of his former evidence was declared by St. Martin to be entirely false, and given on instigation of Gibson and Maddox. This part of the examination was not concluded when Gen. Butler suggested that the examination should be adjourned. The remainder of the sitting was passed in secret session.

MANSLAUGHTER IN THE FOURTH DEGREE.

On the evening of Dec. 18 Frederick Feist and Philip Schlopp, both butchers, met in Schroder's beer-saloon, No. 133 Division-street, and drank pretty freely. Schlopp became annoyed at Feist's neglect in not asking him to join him in a drink, and asked if he was not to be treated. Feist made no reply, but finished his drink and left the place, returning to his work in the provision store at Nos. 135 and 137 Division-street. Thither he was followed by Schlopp, who, in his drunken rage, sought satisfaction for the insult which he supposed had been offered him. While Feist was engaged in scraping brands from a provision-barrel, Schlopp stole behind him and pushed him over. Feist recovered himself swiftly, and warned his assailant to desist. Schlopp declined to take the friendly advice, but staggered toward Feist as if about to strike him. Thereupon Feist struck him on the head with the sharp scraper which he held in his hand, felling him to the ground and inflicting a wound from the effects of which Schlopp subsequently died in the New-York Hospital. Feist was arrested, and was placed on trial for homicide by Assistant District Attorney Lyon, in General Sessions, yesterday. The jury found the guilty of manslaughter in the fourth degree, with a recommendation to mercy, and Judge Gildersleeve, in view of the palliating circumstances in the case, imposed the mitigated penalty of one year in the Penitentiary.

PROF. NEWBERRY ON GOLD AND SILVER.

Prof. J. S. Newberry, of the School of Mines of Columbia College, delivered last evening, in Steinway Hall, the fifth lecture of the present course before the Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen. He took for his subject "Gold and Silver in the Past and Future," and pointed out the gold and silver districts of this continent upon a large canvas map. The Professor reviewed the history of gold and silver from time to time, and brought it down to the present, and gave much information regarding the various means of discovering the precious metals, and where they are found. He believed that gold and silver would not decrease, for new fields will undoubtedly be discovered in Africa which will replace those of this country when the latter have been worked out. After his lecture, Prof. Newberry gave some interesting magic-lantern views of gold mining in California. It was announced that the next lecture of the course will be delivered Feb. 6 in the same hall by William Allen Butler, who will speak on "Our Great Metropolis; its Growth, Mismanagement, and Needs." Tickets can be obtained from members of the society without charge.

CHARGED WITH FALSE PRETENSES.

Detectives Keirns and Ferris, of the Central Office, yesterday arrested William A. Ellis, who is charged with having swindled a leather firm in Texas out of $4,000 worth of hides by fraudulent representations. He obtained, it is alleged, by means of a forged order, the goods from Hollis & Abbot, commission merchants, of No. 110 Pearl-street, agents for the owners of the hides, who live in Dallas, Texas. The arrest was made on a dispatch from the Sheriff of Dallas, Texas, received by Superintendent Walling several days ago, which stated that Ellis had been indicted by the Grand Jury for false pretenses. Ellis was brought to the Central Office, where he was locked up. He sent for a lawyer, and was allowed to have a long interview with him. During the afternoon he was arraigned at the Tombs Police Court and remanded until to-morrow.

ASSAULT ON THE HIGH SEAS.

Antonio N. I. Perez and John Shaw were fellow-passengers on the steam-ship City of Rio de Janeiro, on the voyage from Brazil to this port, in December last. On Dec. 19 the steamer was lying in the harbor of St. Thomas, and Perez and Shaw concluded to visit the town while the ship was coaling and taking in cargo. They quarreled while ashore in respect to the payment of the fare of the negro boatman who took them from the ship to the jetty. On their return to the ship the quarrel was renewed, and Shaw says that Perez thrust an umbrella into his eye, causing serious injury to that organ, and likely to impair the other eye through sympathy. Yesterday Perez was arrested on a charge of assault on the high seas. He was taken before United States Commissioner Shields, who held him to bail in the sum of $500 to appear for examination.

MARINE NOTES.

Capt. Russell, of the schooner R. L. Russell, which arrived from Jacksonville yesterday, reports that at 9 o'clock Tuesday evening last he struck what was supposed to be a sunken wreck. He was then sailing in 10 fathoms of water, between Cape May and Cape Henlopen, but, although his vessel struck heavily, she was not materially injured.

The ship L. L. Sturgess, which arrived from London yesterday, passed the schooner Ada L. off Hatteras on Jan. 17. That vessel had lost her main boom, but was making the best of her way to the southward.

MURDER IN THE FOURTH WARD.

Harry Madden, a sailor, was instantly killed at 12 o'clock last night in the drinking-saloon No. 12 Oliver-street, by John Smith, the keeper of the place. Madden was quarreling just before he was killed. Smith was locked up in the Fourth Precinct Station-house.

A GLANCE OVER EUROPE.

THE BURNING QUESTIONS OF THE DAY.

BELOW THE SURFACE OF AFGHAN AFFAIRS—A FEW ERRORS CORRECTED—THE LITTLE TROUBLE IN TUNIS—VARIOUS VIEWS OF THE FRENCH SITUATION—AGITATIONS IN ITALY.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Wednesday, Jan. 8, 1879.

My letters must of necessity be pieces of patch-work, as there is no coherence, even indirectly, between any of the questions now agitating the European world, whose barometer is the Stock Exchanges and the Paris Bourse. First in order comes Afghanistan, but as it is probable that this Old World will be henceforth indebted to American enterprise for all light upon the mysterious doings north of the Hindu Kush, I shall do little more than call attention to the fact of having ventured three months ago to express opinions of the situation absolutely identical with those ascribed by the Herald's correspondent to the Governor of Tashkend. The British press is indignant that Gen. Kaufman should presume even to hint at the possibility of a repulse of the Anglo-Indian forces, but forgets that, although it spends a vast deal of money on its reporters, these gentlemen may be prevented, either by staff regulations or by reasons of policy, in other words, by a natural desire to be on good terms at head-quarters, from telling the truth when this truth is not flattering to the national vanity; and that, among the strong contingent of literary Mamelukes, there is not one who is capable of appreciating the value, or even of describing intelligently, any military operation. The idea that important information might possibly be gleaned elsewhere than within the British lines was scouted by those who asserted that "all the fighting would be along the British front," not reflecting that to have a "British front" at all, there must be a corresponding "Afghan front," behind which events of extreme gravity might pass. Then, too, there was a false idea about Russia's unwillingness to allow communications to be forwarded through her channels, entirely ignoring the complaisance shown in Bulgaria, where long chronicles of Russian defeats, with all the ill-natured commentaries and prognostics of philo-Turkish reporters were never interfered with until one individual violated his pledge and brought down suspicion upon the entire clan. Nobody cares at St. Petersburg whether Afghanistan be or be not speedily conquered by the English, and Russia is not likely to raise a hand in favor of the fugitive Shere Ali, if so be that he is a fugitive. She has attained her object, which was simply the creation of a state of affairs such that, without spending a ruble or firing a shot, she has made it impossible for England to detach a single regiment of her Anglo-Indian Army to take part in any future conflict on European soil.

John Bull is slow in his awakening from his dreams, but, when he does find out a deception, he gives full vent to his wrath, first against those who caused, and then against those who have kept him in ignorance of, his disasters or his failures. Just now he can only nurse himself into the belief of victory upon the faith of official dispatches of the nature of that native officer's report announcing the utter collapse of Afghan resistance and the decomposition of the Afghan forces. But Yakoob Khan's arrival at Jalalabad was also officially proclaimed some weeks ago, although, since then, this distinguished foreigner has never been seen, either there or at any other British outpost. Official, too, were Lord Lytton's telegrams, reproduced in the Blue Book, when Gen. Abramoff was confounded with the Russian Envoy to Kabul, a mistake afterward corrected by the Viceroy, upon representations made from St. Petersburg. In short, the Anglo-Indian Government can get no direct information, and it is forced to rely upon "intelligent contrabands," who feel that, if they want to keep their employment and be well paid for it, they must try to please their employers by always bringing in good news and glad tidings of great joy to those who are heartily sick of the whole business. The Tashkend dispatch and some private information, which, if not obtained at the fountain head, is not altogether unworthy of credence, lead me to consider Major Gholam's communication as unusually inaccurate. The Ameer has not, it seems, been driven from his capital by any revolution, as was pretended, but has gone to Russia to solicit her protection, after releasing Yakoob Khan, for whose sequestration there no longer exists any pretext since the death of Shere Ali's favorite son, to whom he desired to leave the Afghan sceptre. And in the matter of the treasure said to be carried away, in one part of the dispatch, and to be still in Kabul, in another, the Viceroy's agent is contradictory, while he is altogether at sea about its value, which is known to be of 7 crons, not of 70 lacs, of rupees, just 10 times as great as has been officially stated, or, in our money, about $35,000,000; quite enough, if judiciously expended, to buy up every native soldier in the British ranks. However, it is quite unnecessary for me to continue to write about these Asiatic affairs, about which Americans, if at all interested therein, will be posted far better than any one here, until they have entirely passed into the domain of ancient history.

The Bey of Tunis manifests an intention to eat humble pie, and offers to send one of his Aides-de-Camp to Paris with explanations, but is informed that this satisfaction is insufficient, nothing being considered acceptable except excuses to the French Consul-General, the dismissal of three functionaries implicated in the trespass on M. De Sancy's property, and an international examination of the questions on which the Tunisian authorities and the aforesaid Sancy are at variance. The note to this effect communicated by M. Waddington is threatening, but, although two or three ironclads are anchored in the Tunisian harbor, or rather because they are anchored there, no powder will be burned on this occasion. This is not the first time that the Sancy concession has given trouble. It was originally granted to a kind of joint-stock company composed of the present titulary, Lieut. Bonaparte Wyse, a brother of the notorious Mme. De Solms, and one of our own countrywomen, Mrs. Lorillard Ronalds—whose success in the official world of 1867 was so brilliant. The first fruits of the enterprise—the establishment of a stud for crossing English and African breeds of horses—were very encouraging, but the partners quarreled on a question of administration, only settled in 1874 by a decision of the Supreme Court of Aix, which has jurisdiction in all cases arising from dispute between Frenchmen in the Barbary States and the Levant. Mrs. Ronalds and Count De Sancy were then confirmed in their rights for a term of 99 years, and, although columns have been written on the subject of the present aggressive interference, no one has even attempted to assign its cause.

Far more interesting is the question of the lately-decided Senatorial elections, about which the British press is disposed to be congratulatory, and the German press to be ominously silent. That across the channel people should be satisfied with a result in consequence of which there is not even a candidate in the country is quite natural, but there is much disappointment because the German colossus elects to be reticent until the foreign policy of the new régime and its possible influence upon German institutions shall have been developed. Only the Gazette de l'Allemagne du Nord deigns to express an opinion, adding to this what may be called by him who can and will read between the lines, a word of caution and advice. The French Republic is informed that it has reached its apogee, and that it may succeed in maintaining its position, provided its directing principles remain in conformity with the reserve and moderation lately professed by M. Gambetta, and that it bear in mind how much the consolidation of republican institutions owes to foreign benevolence. "Let us hope," continues the Berlin journal, "that this splendid victory won by the Republicans will not make them forget that the Empire did not keep its promises of peace, also set forth in its initial programme, and that the constant agitation concerning Alsace and Lorraine is beginning to retract attention at the imperial court, where the arrogant tone of certain articles in the Moniteur is not viewed with satisfaction." Of the commentaries of French journalism little can be said; all the so-called Liberal organs are fearful or triumphant, according to their coloring—the Journal des Débats, the Temps, and the République Française continuing to recommend only dignified exultation, while the Rappel and others of the same stamp are disposed to be insolently threatening to the vanquished, foreshadowing such general ostracism and such sweeping political reforms that descent upon people, if timorous, will commence to set their houses in order, so as to be able to take up their residence in foreign parts at 24 hours' notice. The Conservative papers differ widely in their utterances, and although these have no real influence on the masses, with whom alone now lies the solution of the coming "difficulties," it may be interesting to note that the Français, the Gazette de France, and the Patrie consider the 5th January as the "inauguration of an era of social disorder and anarchy," while the Soleil, the Liberté, the Constitutionnel, and the Moniteur content themselves with the reflection that the chosen candidates are not Extremists; that, perhaps, after all, life and property may not be in any imminent peril, and that, in any case, nothing can be done but watch and wait, until their adversaries, by mistakes and excesses, shall lose the confidence of the nation. This may, perchance, be a weary business, particularly as all parties, when in power, so write upon electors that an adverse vote is not readily obtained, and if the Republic ever should come to grief, its destroyers will be only the Republicans. The uncertainty of what will come afterward, if the Republic should fall, is her great safeguard, and may consolidate her institutions into a definite vitality, should her supporters not abuse their victory. Still, to consider the 10,000 votes polled on Sunday as a true gauge of the sympathies of 10,000,000 electors is going too far, when we remember that, since the imperial plebiscites, the nation has never been consulted as to its preferences for any particular form of government.

From letters received from Italy, I am inclined to think that the agitation in favor of the provincie irredenti is again showing symptoms of eruption, and may yet cause trouble with the Austrians, where not only is there no tenderness felt for their turbulent neighbors, but where now and then is heard a hint that, if one of the two powers has a claim to rectify its frontiers, it is rather the Austrian Empire than the Italian Monarchy. Yet this is only a kind of argument ad nationem, a defense by an offensive demonstration, as—with the prospect of another Bosnian campaign in the Spring, and the probabilities of a collocation with Russia in case there is less distant future—the impecunious Hapsburgs will not seek a quarrel, even with so insignificant an enemy as Italy. The danger, if there be any danger, is in the Peninsula, where the Right, under the leadership of King Humbert, may think it good policy to take the initiative of a revenge which has long been the darling project of the Garibaldi school of patriots. To fight for the Trent and the Tyrol would be a splendid safety-valve for the revolutionary element, but it might be risky, as it would entail a similar movement concerning Nice and Savoy, for which the Cabinets here has been in no hurry to whistle, alternately ever since their annexation to France. The treaty of Berlin is responsible for this outbreak in favor of Italia irredenta; the occupation of Bosnia and the Herzegovina was displeasing to the Italians, who were temporarily calmed by the assurances of their statesmen that it had only been assented to on certain conditions, and are now indignant because the only compensation offered them is a promise to give guarantees that Italian interests shall not suffer in the Mediterranean nor in the Ægean, whereas, unfortunately, according to the opinion of the Italians, the question of Salonica cannot be settled without their consent. They are disposed to sell this at as high a price as possible. It is, however, understood that England is not kindly disposed to Italy, in any solution of this kind, as an increase of Austrian influence in the old Turkish Provinces might interfere with her own supremacy in the East, where she proposes to keep a positive monopoly in everything commercial, political, and financial. And so we say whether the Oriental-Roumelia difficulty is or is not shortly to be settled. One day the telegraph informs us that the Russians are rapidly evacuating their positions, and on the morrow we learn that they will not budge until Podgoritza be given up to the Montenegrins. As to Turkey, no one knows, and no one cares except Mr. Waddington, who suggested that the frontiers ever be rectified, as no one has the slightest sympathy for either the Greeks or their Mussulman neighbors, but every one wishes that the Areopagus of Berlin were not so much like the Imperial Chambers at the time of the Diet of Westphalia, whose decisions, although supreme, could never find executors.

I think this exhausts my budget of "burning questions," as the press calls them, and that there is nothing left to tell except the renewed adjournment of the lottery drawing, now more or less fixed for the 26th of January, when it is supposed some more sufficiently familiar with the wheels and cylinders, with which the Minister and consorts play every morning for an hour or two, perhaps to see if fraud be possible. Tickets, as I prophesied, have declined in value, and yesterday overstocked speculators sold below par.

FAST TIME IN SAVANNAH.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Jan. 23.—The second day's meeting of the club was very largely attended, and the time in all the races was remarkably fast. The time made in the second heat of the first race is the best on record over this track. The first race—Bonaventure Stake, for 4-year olds, mile heats, entrance $25, $200 added by the club—had three starters. The first heat was won by Bergamot, Speculation second, Captain Erhard third. Time—1:48¾. The second heat was won by Bergamot—with Erhard second and Speculation third—in 1:45¼. The second race, a mile dash, was a fast one. Four started, Egypt winning by a neck—Lucia, Bell second, Governor Hampton third, Leroy fourth. Time—1:46¼. The third race, mile heats, with five entries, but only four started, Bill Dillon being withdrawn on account of not being in condition to run. The first heat was won by Little Reb, with Jim Bell a good second, Hattie F. third, Rappahannock fourth. Time—1:47. In the second heat, a splendid start was had and faster time made than in the first heat, Little Reb coming in first, Jim Bell second, Rappahannock third, Hattie F. fourth. Time—1:46¾. The races will close on Saturday.

MRS. OOBB'S NEW WITNESS.

WILLIMANTIC, Conn., Jan. 23.—Mrs. Albert T. Baker, of this place, to-day stated to a representative of the New-London Telegram that, in the last of February or first of March, 1878, Charles H. Cobb, Jr., confidentially told her that he was in the habit of taking an arsenical preparation which a friend, who was a druggist, had prescribed for him. He added that Kate, his wife, did not know he was taking it; if she did know it, it would worry her to death. The friend referred to is believed to be Wesley Bishop, who was formerly a drug clerk. Mr. Fisher, of counsel for Mrs. Cobb, received a similar statement from Mrs. Baker, and will make it one of the means for securing a new trial.

FATAL ACCIDENT TO A CORRESPONDENT.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 23.—Horace L. Hyde, brother of William Hyde, managing editor of the St. Louis Republican, was run over by a railroad train on the Missouri Pacific Road, near Bonnet's Mill, this morning and instantly killed. Mr. Hyde was a well-known newspaper reporter, and has been connected with most of the journals of this city at different times during several years past. He was the only regular newspaper correspondent with the Yellow Fever Relief Commission on the steamer Chambers, down the Mississippi River, last Summer.

BURIAL OF GEORGE S. HILLARD.

BOSTON, Jan. 23.—The funeral of Hon. George S. Hillard took place from the Church of Our Saviour, (Episcopal,) at Longwood, at 1 o'clock this afternoon. There was a large attendance of friends and relatives. The pall-bearers were Judge Lowell, Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, Dr. Henry J. Bowditch, Hon. Peleg W. Chandler, Hon. Henry W. Paine, Hon. Leverett Saltonstall, Hon. Amos A. Lawrence, and J. Henry Hill, of Worcester. The remains were carried to Mount Auburn.

BAYARD TAYLOR'S BEQUESTS.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 23.—The will of the late Bayard Taylor has just been admitted to probate in Chester County. He names John J. Pinkerton and Charles B. Lamborn as Executors. He bequeaths the sword of Schiller, presented to him by William Makepeace Thackeray, to be deposited in Schiller's house in Germany among the other relics of the poet. He leaves his unpublished writings to his wife and George H. Boker, President of the Union League of this city.

FINANCES OF MASSACHUSETTS.

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 23.—The Auditor has made his annual report on the State finances. The total estimated expenditures are $4,315,650; estimated revenues, $3,999,257 79; estimated deficit, $316,392 21. This is the smallest deficit reported since 1861. The outstanding loans represent $20,495,464 in sterling and $12,525,000 in bonds. The funded debt is as follows: Jan. 1, 1876, $33,220,464; Jan. 1, 1879, $33,020,464; decrease in 1878, $200,000.

FORT MCKENNEY, Jan. 23.—Private Ringer, Company D, Ninth Infantry, was shot and killed by a drunken soldier of the same company on Jan. 16.

THE MID-AIR RAILROADS.

RAPID TRANSIT ON THE EAST SIDE.

COMPLAINTS AND GRIEVANCES AGAINST THE NEW-YORK ELEVATED ROAD—A RESOLUTION IN FAVOR OF THE SECOND-AVENUE LINE.

A meeting of the People's Association of the Twenty-first Assembly District was held last evening in Parepa Hall, Eighty-sixth-street and Third-avenue, for the purpose of receiving the report of the committee appointed at the meeting held two weeks ago to wait upon the officers of the New-York Elevated Railroad Company, in reference to the grievances and complaints of citizens as to its management. H. C. Robinson, Chairman of the committee, read a long report, in which he said that the committee had waited upon the officers of the road and suggested to them the importance of regularity in running trains, and that a large portion of the crowding at the stations arose from its absence; also, the enlargement of the platforms of the cars, the placing of a man to open the rear gate of all trains as they came to the stations, and the feasibility of having passengers enter at the head of the car and leave at the rear, thereby shortening the time consumed in egress and ingress. The committee say they dwelt strongly on the relief to be obtained by transferring the Grand Central passengers at Forty-second-street, thus making the Forty-second-street trains through trains, and the necessity of having heavier engines, so that the steep grades could be overcome more rapidly, and the starting from the stations quickened. They also suggested the desirability of five-cent fares for a longer time morning and evening, together with the absolute necessity for more frequent trains. The Superintendent and Vice-President, they say, went over their suggestions carefully, and in reply said that the irregularity of trains was owing to insufficient terminal facilities, and the width of the platforms is limited by the width of the doors. They admitted the advantages of stronger engines, and said that their new ones would be 2,000 pounds heavier than those now in use. They have carefully considered the subject of running short trains to Forty-second-street, and decided that it was not feasible to do so. They had, however, consented to accept the box system of collecting tickets, to put a third ear on the Forty-second-street train, and give through passengers an opportunity to transfer at Thirty-fourth-street, thus increasing the carrying capacity of every third train one-third, and to that extent relieve the pressure. The subject of intermediate trains from Eighty-fourth, Fifty-ninth, and Forty-second streets was under consideration, and a plan was being elaborated to test the advantages of such a system. The trains will, the officers say, be put upon the road as soon as possible.

In conclusion, the committee say that, while they are willing that the company shall be liberally remunerated for their outlay, they demand that in their love of gain they shall not maintain a policy of economy which would deny to the public that accommodation and convenience which the Legislature intended to give. They therefore demand, first, that regularity of trains must be established, even if a Superintendent shall be necessary at each end of the line; second, that Forty-second-street train must be enlarged and made available for through passengers, even if it be necessary to discontinue the use of the street to the Grand Central Depot; third, more trains during the hours of low fares; and, fourth, as the New-York Elevated Road cannot carry all the passengers on the East Side, the speedy completion of the Metropolitan Road on Second-avenue.

An animated discussion followed the reading of the report. Mr. Andrew Powell urged the importance of 5-cent fares day and night, from the Battery to Harlem, and Mr. H. C. Robinson contended that the question of fares was of minor importance. What is most wanted is a Superintendent who can start trains enough to carry all the passengers who want to ride. At present, when persons get on the platform at Eighty-fourth-street, they did not know whether they were destined to wait for a train five minutes or half an hour. He did not believe there was another railroad between here and San Francisco that would suffer such irregularity in the running of trains as the New-York Elevated had done. In his opinion, the demand should be for regular trains, clean, warm cars, and politic, obliging employees.

After further discussion, the report was adopted unanimously, after which Mr. Robinson introduced a preamble and series of resolutions, asking the Legislature not to pass the bill introduced into the Legislature by Assemblyman Eidman, of the Twenty-first District of this City, prohibiting the construction of an elevated railroad east of Third-avenue. Another long discussion followed, which was opened by Mr. Miller, who thought property ought not to be taken without compensation. Mr. H. P. Allen contended that the question of compensation for damages was one which could not be computed, and that if such a principle was attempted it would prevent all public improvements in the future. Besides, property was not taken. Mr. H. P. Brooks and Mr. H. C. Robinson followed in the same strain, after which the resolutions were adopted. Mr. Powell then stated a committee appointed to wait upon the officers of the New-York Elevated Road and ask an extension of half an hour or an hour, night and morning, for 5-cent fares. Instead of putting the question, however, the Chairman declared the meeting adjourned.

A BLOCKADE ON THIRD-AVENUE.

As engine No. 63 on the New-York Elevated Railway was on its way down Third-avenue yesterday morning, shortly before 11 o'clock, one of the valves of the cylinder on the right side of the locomotive gave way. The train, consisting of three cars, was then approaching the Fourteenth-street station, and ran by its own momentum to the station and was stopped to take on and let off passengers. The engineer then started the engine again, and for a few minutes there was a fearful twisting of the train, as the machinery of but one side of the locomotive was in working order. The absurd experiment of trying to run a train with 50 passengers on board with a broken engine, was then abandoned. The next train following came up, and the next foolish experiment was to compel this last engine to push the forward train with the broken engine and pull its own train, but this also was found impracticable, owing to the lightness of the locomotive. Some 20 minutes were thus lost, and then attempts were made to repair the broken engine on the track. Meantime the down track, nearly as far back as Forty-second-street, was occupied by trains which had run up but were unable to proceed. When the engineer in charge of engine No. 68 announced that it would take at least 20 minutes longer to fix the valve so that the train could be moved, many of the passengers, who had engagements on time down town, were obliged to descend to the station and take the Third-avenue horse cars to continue their journey. It was upward of half an hour before the train could be moved, and meantime there were hundreds of passengers on the trains that were imbedded between stations who could not get to the street from the track, and were obliged to wait over until the whole line was moved. Passengers who desired to go further down town, on leaving the Fourteenth-street station, asked for the return of their fares and offered to surrender their tickets, but the company's agent refused to return the fares on any tickets not purchased at that station.

THE NINTH-AVENUE ROAD.

The General Term of the Supreme Court was occupied yesterday by an action in which both sides were appellants. It was the suit of Frederick P. James against James A. Cowing and the New-York Elevated Railroad Company for the recovery of $22,500, the face value of 45 first mortgage bonds of the defunct West Side Elevated Patent Railway Company. Mr. Cowing, the plaintiff says, was the Trustee of the mortgage, which was for $1,000,000. There was also a small second mortgage on the property of the railway company. The corporation in a third time became involved in debt, and negotiated a third mortgage for $250,000 with John F. Tracy, David Dows, E. W. Dunham, William S. Woodward, and William L. Scott. Cowing also became Trustee of this mortgage, which, the complaint alleges, was taken up by persons with whom he was in collusion. It was foreclosed, and the road was sold to the newly-formed New-York Elevated Railroad Company for $230,000, or $20,000 less than the mortgage, and subject to the prior mortgages. Subsequently the first mortgage, in which the plaintiff, James, was interested, was sold, and the road was bought in on account of the mortgage bondholders, by the defendant Cowing, for $750,000. Shortly afterward, it is alleged, Cowing, without proper authority, sold out the entire interest of these bondholders for $100,000 to the New-York Elevated Railroad Company. From the results of this sale each bondholder was entitled to receive about $49 for each $500 bond. The plaintiff refused to accept such a dividend, and brought suit against Cowing and the New-York Elevated Railroad Company, claiming that there had been collusion between them, as was indicated by the fact that Cowing became Secretary and Treasurer of the defendant corporation. James also claimed that Cowing was responsible, because it was his duty to have held the property bought in under the foreclosure of the first mortgage to await the formation of a new company by the bondholders; that he was not authorized to sell the property, and that his action in selling amounted to a wrongful conversion of it.

The case was tried in 1876, before Judge Larremore, at Special Term. Judgment was then given against Cowing for $22,500, but the company was relieved from liability. An appeal was taken by Cowing first, and then by James, who objects to having the New-York Elevated Railway relieved from liability. Decision was reserved.

A QUIET DAY AT TRENTON.

TRENTON, Jan. 23.—The Assembly sat for a short time this morning, and then adjourned for the week. The Senate finished its labors yesterday. The only matter of any interest brought to the notice of the House was a bill for the abolition of shoe-making in the State Prison. The committee heard argument on Wednesday evening, and yesterday reported the bill for further action by the House. It will be on the House calendar next Tuesday, and will probably provoke a warm discussion. It is understood yesterday that the repeal of what is known as the Students' bill is a movement toward wiping from the statute books one of the smallest of the partisan acts of the last Legislature. The bill was specially designed to disfranchise the students in the colleges at New-Brunswick and Princeton, because they voted the Republican ticket. The repeal was passed by a vote of 37 to 21.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

Thomas Jasper & Co.'s elevator at Quincy, Ill., was burned Wednesday night. The loss is estimated at $12,000, on which there is no insurance. The fire is supposed to have been of incendiary origin.

The Irvine Mill, in St. Paul, Minn., having two runs of stone, was burned yesterday morning. The loss is about $10,000 on the mill and $1,500 on wheat. Insurance on all the property, $6,900.

A fire at St. Joseph, Mich., last night, destroyed Wells & Co.'s store-house and a large stock of baskets. The loss is estimated at $6,000; insured for $4,500.

Emerson & Stevens' scythe manufactory at West Waterville, Me., was burned last night. The loss is $20,000; insurance, $10,000.

POPULATION OF FRANCE.

It appears from the French population tables drawn up from the returns of the census of December, 1876, that the foreigners resident in France numbered 801,700 persons, thus forming 2.17 per cent. of the total population. In 1851 the proportion was 1.06 per cent., and in 1861, 1.33 per cent. Of these 801,700 foreigners, 374,500 were Belgians, 66,500 Germans, 165,000 Italians, 62,500 Spaniards, 50,000 Swiss, and 30,000 English. The most striking fact shown by the tables is the relatively great number of adults in France and the small number of children. Whereas in England children under 15 years of age form about 36 per cent. of the population, and persons of above 15 years 63 per cent., in France the former number only 29 per cent. and the latter 71 per cent. The figures are as follows: Under 15 years, 10,008,900; from 15 to 60, 22,527,000; and over 60, 4,361,000. As regards the occupations of the French people, 18,968,000, or 53 per cent., are engaged in agriculture; 9,274,000, or 26 per cent., in manufacturing and similar industries; 3,837,000, or 14 per cent., in trade; 1,231,000, or 4 per cent., in liberal professions; 2,150,000 being of no occupation. Of the agricultural population, 10,620,000 cultivate their own property; 5,708,000 are farmers, (fermiers,) and 2,639,000 are laborers and gardeners. Of those engaged in other industries, 3,133,000 are devoted to manufacturing. The numbers of those engaged in the liberal professions are as follows: Public worship, 267,500; public instruction, 222,600; law, 148,900; medicine, 141,800; art and science, 90,600.

WEST VIRGINIA DENYING CERTIFICATES.

WHEELING, West Va., Jan. 23.—The following resolution passed the West Virginia Senate today, and will doubtless pass the House:

Whereas, There have been put upon the market so-called West Virginia certificates, purporting to represent the indebtedness of this State to the Commonwealth of Virginia, therefore be it

Resolved, By the Legislature of West Virginia, that no such certificates have been issued by authority of this State, nor is the State in any manner liable for payment thereof, nor does it in any wise recognize such certificates.

The explanation of this action is that in 1871 Virginia compromised with her creditors by assuming two-thirds of her then existing indebtedness, and for the remainder issued these certificates, which were to become payable after she had a settlement with West Virginia, which settlement she has never had. The States differ radically as to the proper basis of settlement, West Virginia contending that she owes little or nothing, and Virginia claiming that she owes the amount of these certificates, about $15,000,000.

SITTING BULL'S DESIRE FOR PEACE.

CHICAGO, Jan. 23.—Gen. Sheridan, a day or two ago, received a dispatch from Gen. Terry in regard to Sitting Bull, and embodying a report sent in by Col. Wood, post commandant at Fort Bennett. Col. Wood reported having held an interview with two Indians, Black Wolf and Fox, who had been dispatched as emissaries from the camp of the Indians. These two messengers said there was a very large encampment of Sioux on the American side of the line, on Mo Moon Creek. Which is four day's ride from Fort Peck. Black Wolf and Fox report that a large council of Indians was held there the day before their departure, at which it was decided to send runners to the different agencies to ascertain if peace could be concluded. They returned. The messengers represent that Sitting Bull is especially outspoken in favor of peace. Gen. Sheridan expects fuller particulars in a few day.

MONTREAL STOCK MARKET EXCITED.

MONTREAL, Quebec, Jan. 23.—A panic took place in the stock market here to-day. Bank of Montreal and Consolidated Bank stock fell 6 and 7 per cent. respectively from yesterday's prices. The decline in the latter stock was caused by the reported failure of one of the Directors of the local Board of Toronto. The feverish state of the market was reported. The financial troubles in England cause the depression. The panic in the Bank of Montreal stock, it is said, was caused by a rumor of complications or anticipated failure in one of the maritime provinces. Other stocks were less or more affected, but the authorities of the banks principally affected assert that there is no reason for a decline in their stocks.

ARKANSAS TASTE IN PORTRAITS.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 23.—In the Senate, to-day, a resolution to remove the portraits of Grant and Lincoln, and substitute therefor those of Jackson and Lee, was defeated by a vote of 18 to 9. Two ballots for United States Senator were taken the day before, and resulting as follows: Walker, 44; Johnson, 35; Bell, 19; Baxter, 17; scattering, 8. Necessary to a choice, 62.

FIGHTING ABOUT A MURDERER.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Jan. 23.—Advices from Frenchburg reports that trouble is feared between the friends of Barnes, who is imprisoned for the murder of a man named Stevens, and the Sheriff's posse. In the event that a release is attempted a fight will occur. The Governor has been appealed to.

THE ARLINGTON SUIT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.—At Alexandria, Va., to-day, the taking of evidence in the Arlington case was continued in the United States Circuit Court. The testimony referred to the sale of the estate under the direct tax law; the occupancy of the premises by United States forces and negroes, and to the Tax Commission.

BENEFIT OF A SECOND TRIAL.

MILWAUKEE, Jan. 23.—The jury this afternoon in the case of Russell Wheeler, indicted for the murder of Thomas Henderer, returned a verdict of acquittal, on the ground of justifiable homicide. This was his second trial. On the

FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

THIRD SESSION—Jan. 23.

SUMMARY.

In the Senate, Mr. Burnside reported, without amendment, the bill appropriating $250,000 for the education of the blind, and it was placed on the calendar. The Conference Committee on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill made a report, which was adopted, and the bill passed. Mr. Edmunds withdrew his motion, made yesterday, to take up his resolutions regarding the validity of the last three constitutional amendments, and the consideration of the bill amending the patent laws was resumed. After several amendments had been acted upon, the bill was passed. The Army Appropriation bill was then taken up, so that it might be the unfinished business on Friday. The bill appropriating $60,000 for transporting coin and bullion, with several amendments for paying miscellaneous expenses, was passed, and the Senate then went into executive session, and soon after adjourned.

In the House, the conference report on the Consular and Diplomatic bill was agreed to. Mr. Cox reported the Census bill, and Mr. Blount the Post Office Appropriation bill. The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the bill applying the proceeds of the public lands to the education of the people. Mr. Goode advocated and explained the bill. It was vigorously opposed by several Democrats, while some Republicans spoke in its favor. After a sharp debate, the committee rose without taking action, and Mr. Hewitt reported the Army Appropriation bill. The House then took a recess till 7:30 P. M. At the evening session the bill classifying mail matter was discussed, but no action was taken.

SENATE.

NAVAL LEGISLATION.

Mr. Sargent, of California, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, the House bill to abolish the volunteer Navy of the United States. Placed on the calendar.

He also reported, from the same committee, the Senate bill appropriating money for the payment of bounty to the officers and men of Flag-officer Farragut's fleet, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It was so ordered.

NEW BILLS.

The following bills were introduced and referred:

By Mr. Matthews, of Ohio—A bill to incorporate the American Ocean Cable and Telegraph Land Wire Association, of Philadelphia, the right of way and privilege to lay, land, and operate submarine telegraph cables on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States, and to establish telegraphic communication between the United States, Europe, and Asia. Referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. Allison, of Iowa, (by request)—Granting the right of way and depot grounds to the Sioux City and Pembina Railroad Company through the public lands of the United States, from Beloit, Iowa, to the Missouri River, in the Territory of Dakota, at or near the mouth of White River. Referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

THE INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. Windom, of Minnesota, the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the Indian Appropriation bill, and a committee of conference was ordered. Messrs. Windom, Allison, and Hamlin were appointed conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE EDUCATION OF THE BLIND.

Mr. Buensides, of Rhode Island, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported, without amendment, the House bill to promote the education of the blind. Placed on the calendar. It appropriates $50,000 as a perpetual fund for the purpose of aiding the education of the blind in the United States, through the American Printing-house for the Blind. The Secretary of the Treasury is to hold the fund in trust, invest it in the bonds of the United States bonds, and pay over the interest to the institution named, to be expended in making embossed books for the blind and tangible apparatus for their instruction. No part of the income from the bonds shall be expended in the erection or leasing of buildings.

THE TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. Morrill, of Vermont, from the Special Committee on the Census, reported a bill to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses. Placed on the calendar. Mr. Morrill gave notice that he would call it up for consideration on Tuesday next after the morning hour.

THE CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. Windom, of Minnesota, from the Conference Committee on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill, submitted a report, and in explanation thereof said the bill as it passed the House appropriated $1,045,735. The Senate added $82,100, making a total of $1,127,835. The amendments of the Senate were all agreed to in conference with amendments striking out from the bill the following items: For Charges d'Affaires ad interim and diplomatic officers abroad, $20,000; and for diplomatic and consular officers, $40,000, to be used in the discretion of the President, $20,000; leaving the total amount appropriated by the bill as agreed to, $1,087,835, an increase over the bill for the present fiscal year of $10,200. The increase is made up of the following additions: Four additional Secretaries of Legations at Great Britain, France, and Germany, $2,000 each—$6,000; for a clerk to the Legation at Spain, $1,200; for revising and editing consular regulations, $2,000.

The report was agreed to and the bill passed.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE DOUGLASS.

The resolutions of the House announcing the death of Hon. Beverly Douglass were received by the Senate, and Mr. Johnston, of Virginia, announced that he would call them up at an early day.

THE PROPOSED TERRITORY OF PEMBINA.

Mr. Saunders, of Nebraska, gave notice that on Wednesday next he would call up the bill to establish the Territory of Pembina.

ANOTHER WAR CLAIM.

The Senate then proceeded to consider bills on the calendar, and discussed at some length the bill for the relief of Warren Mitchell, which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to pay him $125,692 22, being the proceeds of cotton taken from Mitchell at Savannah, Ga., which proceeds were ordered to be paid into the Treasury. No vote having been reached at 1:30 P. M., it was laid aside.

MR. EDMUNDS' RESOLUTIONS.

The Senate then resumed consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill to amend the Patent laws, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. Edmunds, submitted yesterday, to lay aside the Patent bill and take up the resolutions submitted by him on the 7th inst., declaring the validity of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution.

Mr. Edmunds said he found by the vote of last night that a majority of the Senate was adverse to considering his resolutions, and it was useless to waste the time of the Senate; therefore he withdrew his motion to take them up.

THE PATENT BILL.

The Senate then proceeded to consider the bill to amend the Patent laws.

Mr. Windom submitted an amendment that "in any suit brought in any court now having jurisdiction in patent cases for an alleged infringement of any patented article, where it shall appear that the defendant purchased the same in good faith from the manufacturer thereof, or from a person or firm engaged in the sale of such articles, application therefor, and supplied the same for and to his own use and not for sale, nor for making a product for sale, if the plaintiff shall recover a judgment for merely nominal damages, the court shall adjudge that he pay all the costs of the suit, and that the plaintiff shall not recover the sum of $20 or over, the court shall adjudge him to pay his own costs, unless it shall also appear that the defendant at the time of such purchase, manufacture, or practical application had knowledge or actual notice of the existence of such patent.

Mr. Wadleigh, of New-Hampshire, submitted an amendment to that of Mr. Windom, as follows:

"Provided that nothing contained in this section shall apply to articles manufactured outside of the United States."

Agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. Windom, as amended by Mr. Wadleigh, was then agreed to.

The bill was then read a third time and passed.

THE ARMY REORGANIZATION BILL.

Mr. Burnside moved to take up the bill reported from the joint select committee to reorganize the Army, and said if the bill should be taken up to-day he would consent to its being laid aside informally, that it might come up as the unfinished business to-morrow.

The motion of Mr. Burnside was agreed to without a division, and the Army bill was laid aside, with the understanding that it would come up as the unfinished business to-morrow.

THE RELIEF OF WARREN MITCHELL.

The Senate then proceeded to consider bills on the calendar.

Mr. McCreery, of Kentucky, moved to postpone the pending and the order of business, and take up the bill for the relief of Warren Mitchell. Agreed to—yeas 25, nays 22.

MISCELLANEOUS EXPENSES.

Pending discussion on the Mitchell bill, Mr. Windom moved to lay aside the bill informally, and take up the House bill appropriating $60,000 to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the provisions of section 254 of the Revised Statutes in regard to the expenses of transporting coin and bullion, and $40,000 for miscellaneous expenses of the House. The amendments of the committee appropriating $10,000 to be applied to defraying expenses in such investigations or inquiries as have been or may be ordered by the Senate during the Forty-fifth Congress; $232 67 for the Army Reorganization Commission, and $953 60 for the committee to inquire into the expediency of transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department, were agreed to. The bill was then read a third time and passed.

The Senate, at 3:40 P. M., on motion of Mr. Edmunds, went into executive session, and when the doors were reopened, at 3:50 P. M., adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

JUDICIARY REPORT.

On motion of Mr. Knott, of Kentucky, a session was ordered for to-morrow night, for the consideration of reports from the Judiciary Committee.

THE CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. Singleton, of Mississippi, submitted the report of the Conference Committee on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill. He stated that the bill was exactly the same as the law passed last session, with the exception that the present bill retained the Second Secretary of Legation at Paris, Berlin, and London. The report was agreed to.

THE CENSUS BILL.

Mr. Cox, of New-York, Chairman of the Committee on the Census, reported a bill for taking the Federal census. Ordered to be printed and recommitted.

Mr. Ryan, of Kansas, from the same committee, submitted the views of the minority. Ordered to be printed and recommitted.

THE POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. Blount, of Georgia, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the Post Office Appropriation bill. Referred to the Committee of the Whole, and made the special order for Saturday next.

THE EDUCATION OF THE PEOPLE.

Mr. Goode, of Virginia, moved to go into Committee of the Whole on the bill applying the proceeds of the public lands to the education of the people. Agreed to—yeas 126, nays 106. The affirmative vote was cast by the Democrats, and the negative by the Republicans, who desired to have a morning hour in order that the debate begun yesterday by Mr. Bragg, of Wisconsin, and Mr. Ellis, of Louisiana, should be continued.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. Hooker, of Mississippi, in the chair,) on the bill to apply the proceeds of the sales of the public lands to the education of the people. It provides that the net proceeds of the sales shall be forever set apart for the education of the people, and apportioned to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia upon the basis of the population of such States between the ages of 5 and 21, provided that after five years one-half, and after 10 years the whole, of said net proceeds shall be set apart as an educational fund, which shall be invested in United States bonds bearing not less than 4 per cent. interest, the interest on such fund only to be applied as above. Jeremiah M. Wilson, Haviland, Ill.; Samuel Lyon, Earlsville, Ill.; Seneca D. Chapin, White Hall, Ill.; John B. Miller, Anna, Ill.; F. H. Bates, Rimhurst, Ill.; William M. Oraddick, Knoxville, Iowa; S. A. Moore, Centreville, Iowa; Thomas Emery, Lemara, Iowa; O. P. R. Williamson, Grand Island, Neb.; Warren P. Hunt, Lewiston, Idaho; E. S. Nettleton, South Pueblo, Col.; H. Lueders, Lake City, Col.; D. B. Bradley, El Moro, Col.; A. T. Fleetwood, Sioux Falls, Dakota Territory; E. A. Grant, Fargo, Dakota Territory; John J. Sykes, Grass Valley, Cal.

Mr. Goode explained the provisions of the bill, saying there were millions of millions of acres of public lands, but remembering how much of it had been squandered by grants to railroad companies, it was evident that the time must come when there would no longer be any public domain to bring revenue to the Government.

Mr. Frye, of Maine, inquired if there was anything in the bill which would compel the fund to be applied in the Southern States to the education of the colored race.

Mr. Goode replied that there was no disposition in any Southern State to discriminate in any way between white and colored children.

Mr. Keifer, of Ohio, inquired if Mr. Goode would admit of an amendment forbidding any such discrimination.

Mr. Goode replied that he would, unless the gentleman wanted to establish mixed schools. He was willing to make it as plain as human language could make it that this fund was to be dedicated to the free education of all children, both white and colored, but he would oppose every proposition to establish mixed schools, because that would be alike ruinous to the white and the colored race.

Mr. Blackburn, of Kentucky, opposed the bill. Public education must be fostered and built up by the States, otherwise the General Government might give and give, but there would be no prosperous public school system. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Goode] counted upon obtaining millions for this fund. He [Mr. Dunnell] would undertake to say that in 10 years thousands instead of millions would cover all the returns from this application. The receipts from that source were rapidly lessening, and at the end of five years there would be substantially nothing left to go into the school fund, and the amount distributed up to that time would be a mere laughter and applause.

Mr. Patterson, of Colorado, agreed with Mr. Dunnell that the proceeds from the sale of lands was rapidly decreasing. If it was the intention that a State could never have the opportunity of constructing great works for the improvement of the arid lands within its boundaries, a hundred years from to-day the same vast extent of desert domain would be met with in going from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, a monument to the ignorance, the want of foresight, and the lack of humanity of the American Congress.

Mr. Townsend, of New-York, opposed the bill. He had been educated in the good old-fashioned school of Democracy that believed that the business of education belonged to the State, and that every State had a right to do as it pleased, as it minded to. [Laughter.] It passed all human patience to stand by and see a calm, adroit, and oily proposition to rob the loyal States out of their interest in the public lands. They were to be tricked and rigged out of their interest. He was not ready for that and it did not put him in a good humor. [Laughter.]

Mr. Loring, of Massachusetts, congratulated himself on being able to advocate a measure in the interest of education and in entire accordance with the policy of the country from the day the Pilgrim Fathers landed up to the present time.

Mr. Monroe, of Ohio, said he had voted to go into committee on this bill and against taking up the war claims because he was in favor of this bill and was opposed to the war claims. While he admitted that the first responsibility as to schools rested with the several States, he still contended that the General Government had some responsibility in the matter and should do something in the way of aiding education.

The time fixed for general debate having expired, the House proceeded to consider the bill by sections for amendment.

Mr. Reagan, of Texas, moved to amend the proviso in the first section, which provides that it shall not limit or affect the right of any State to grant the public domain or interfere with granting bounty lands, by adding the words: "Or grants in aid of public improvements." He explained and advocated the amendment, indicating that it might be necessary to grant lands for a competing railroad across the continent.

Mr. Harrison, of Illinois, opposed the amendment, declaring that one of the doctrines of the Democratic Party was not to approve of any such improvement of that kind, either in money or in lands.

Mr. Keifer, of Ohio, congratulated the Democratic Party on having reached a principle laid down for it by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Harrison.] One of the last acts of the last Democratic President (and he trusted that he would be forever the last) (laughter) had been to veto a grant of land to an agrarian in principle. The Homestead law had been passed by a Republican Congress, and been signed by Abraham Lincoln, a Republican President. Under that law there had been 384,848 homestead entries, covering an area exceeding that of Scotland, England, and Wales. That had been the policy of the Republican Party in respect to the public lands, and it had been carried out in spite of the policy of the Democratic Party of old. He now congratulated the Democratic Party on having been educated by the Republican Party up to the point of being in favor of homesteads. (Laughter and applause.)

Mr. Eden, of Illinois, offered as a substitute for Mr. Reagan's amendment, an amendment providing that all public lands which have been granted by Congress to aid in the construction of railroad and telegraph lines, which have not been completed and which have lapsed by reason of failure to complete such railroad and telegraph lines within the time limited, are hereby declared forfeited to the United States.

Mr. Cain, of South Carolina, spoke in favor of the bill. The education of his race was very important. A nation should raise its citizens above superstition and crime. He proceeded to quote statistics to show that the number of illiterate colored persons in the South was much smaller than that of white persons. Education was necessary all over the nation, especially in Louisiana, Mississippi, and South Carolina.

Mr. Wright, of Pennsylvania, declared his belief that not only did every inch of the public domain belong to the people, but also that famine should be provided for before the erection of school-houses. The attention of Congress should be fixed upon a single point, and that was the relief of the suffering millions. [Applause in the galleries.] He would not agree that a dollar should be taken from the National Treasury for any purpose however, long as there were hungry men, women, and children thronging the streets. "Our penitentiaries," he continued, "aye, Sir, our mad-houses, are full. In the State of Pennsylvania to-day there are 5,000 persons confined in lunatic asylums. [Significant laughter.] What took them there but starvation? Want and starvation fill our penitentiaries and our alms-houses, and yet you talk about taking money from the National Treasury to build up institutions of learning. You may laugh about the lunatics in Pennsylvania if you please, but perhaps if a few of you were there [meaning in lunatic asylums] you would be in better places than you are in here." [Laughter.]

Mr. White, of Pennsylvania—What part of the State are these lunatics in?

A member—In the Kiskiminitas section. [Laughter.]

The committee rose without acting on the amendment.

THE ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. Hewitt, of New-York, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the Army Appropriation bill, and said he would call it up for consideration after the Post Office Appropriation bill was disposed of.

CANADIAN RECIPROCITY.

Mr. Cox, of New-York, introduced a bill to regulate commerce between the United States and Canada, and to provide for reciprocal navigation. Referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The House then, at 4:30, took a recess until 7:30.

EVENING SESSION.

THE MAIL CLASSIFICATION BILL.

At 7:30 the House (Mr. Carlisle, of Kentucky, in the Chair) took up for consideration the bill for the classification of mail matter, and to regulate rates of postage thereon.

Mr. Waddell, of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Roads explained the provisions of the bill. It divided mail matter into four classes—first, written matter; second, periodical publications, under registration; third, miscellaneous printed matter; and fourth, merchandise; and made the rates of postage uniform on all periodicals, whether daily, weekly, monthly, or quarterly. The bill was satisfactory to the publishers of the country.

Mr. Ramer, of Rhode Island, moved to reduce postage on letters weighing half an ounce to 2 cents, and argued in advocacy of the reduction. Rejected.

Mr. Blount, of Georgia, moved to strike out of the sixth section, regulating registration, a clause allowing the proprietor of a publication, which is refused registration to apply to the District Court for a mandamus to compel the Postmaster to grant such registration. Rejected.

Mr. Spriggs, of Illinois, moved to strike out the whole section on the ground that it was establishing a censorship over the press.

Mr. Blount replied that the Postmaster-General had the same proprietor now; that there was no censorship in it, but merely a question of administration.

Mr. Waddell, of North Carolina, Chairman of the committee, remarked that the bill had the approval of all the legitimate publishers of the country, but it was being "talked to death by chin-music," and he therefore moved the previous question.

The motion was agreed to, and the House, at 10 P. M., adjourned

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

THE EAST SIDE ROAD AGAIN.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The letter of "J. C. F." in defense of the New-York Elevated Railroad, printed in yesterday's Times, is scarcely such a statement in rebuttal of those of his illustrious predecessors as will tend to change public opinion in favor of that much-abused structure. "J. C. F." seems to forget that the privileges and franchises enjoyed by that corporation, in which he takes so much interest, differ materially from the purchased and independent shop and stock in trade of the money-getting merchant. These privileges and franchises are the gift of the people through their legislative representatives, and for the powers granted a return is due, which the people have a right to demand as a condition precedent. This corporation must be a good deal more than a dividend-making concern in order to retain the powers and rights already conferred, or they may be legally transferred to some more competent and responsible successor. The "gold-leaf and extravagance of a rival corporation" are enviously referred to by "J. C. F.," but some of both were anticipated, and might reasonably be expected, by those who find it more convenient to patronize the vehicles of the New-York Elevated Railroad Company, which are no improvement upon, and are no more comfortable than, the long-complained-of Third-avenue street car. The seats are measured off in most contemptible dimensions, and may be supposed to bear some relative proportion to the breadth of intellect of this parsimonious corporation's executive management. The cars are uninviting generally, and thus far have not been kept in a cleanly condition, a matter which in Summer should be looked after by the Board of Health.

As for heat, that is a matter of preference; the company might at least put one or two judiciously-warmed cars on each train for those who prefer them. With the thermometer at zero, a person with a few shares of the company's stock in his pocket (even watered stock) is about the only one who can make up his mind that these crowded cars are both comfortable and healthful. Proper ventilation is not an impossibility, even with some heat. If what we are to have in the way of conveniently-run trains is not to be measured by what we have had, why all right; but the terminal facilities should have been thought of before, by a company which has been running trains up Greenwich-street and Ninth-avenue for several years, and which has appropriated to its own use as much of the public Battery Park as it deemed necessary for side tracks and switches. As the writer has not been a complainant heretofore, it may be of interest to mention that taking a company's rapid transit ticket at Sixty-seventh-street, a few days ago, for which was paid 10 cents, to carry him to Hanover-square, 12 minutes were quietly passed waiting for a southward-bound train, which, when taken, was found to go no further than Franklin-square. Getting off again at Twenty-third-street, 20 minutes of waiting were added to the other 12, several trains coming along in the meantime, none of which had been carried out in spite of the policy of the Democratic Party of old. He now congratulated the Democratic Party on having been educated by the Republican Party up to the point of being in favor of homesteads. (Laughter and applause.)

Mr. Eden, of Illinois, offered as a substitute for Mr. Reagan's amendment, an amendment providing that all public lands which have been granted by Congress to aid in the construction of railroad and telegraph lines, which have not been completed and which have lapsed by reason of failure to complete such railroad and telegraph lines within the time limited, are hereby declared forfeited to the United States.

The Signal Service Bureau report indicates for this region to-day, partly cloudy weather, winds shifting to easterly and southerly, and during the day rising temperature and falling barometer.

The Potter committee resolved yesterday to receive from Gen. Butler all the cipher dispatches in his possession, to make a complete inventory of them, to have them photo-lithographed for the use of the committee, and deciphered according to "the best knowledge, skill, and ability" of an expert to be chosen by the committee. It was also resolved to give Mr. Tilden the opportunity demanded for him by Mr. Hewitt of facing his accuser before a competent tribunal, and to allow Mr. Tilden to be represented by counsel, "in the same manner and under the same limitations as a person arraigned under the resolution authorizing this committee." S. H. St. Martin, late Deputy Marshal of Donaldsonville, La., was permitted to testify concerning his celebrated affidavit, and gave the committee some valuable information about the theory and practice of lying, by which he was so much relieved that he informed his examiners that he had as clear a conscience as any man around the table.

The discussion in the Chamber of Commerce yesterday as to the proper method of ascertaining the value on which duties on imports should be assessed was spirited and able. The special committee, of which Mr. Jackson S. Schultz is Chairman, reported in favor of duties, principally ad valorem, and of assessing these duties on the "home value," that is, the wholesale price at auction for cash. No formal bill was submitted, but the committee reported the general principle, the Chairman explained it, and suggestions were asked from merchants and importers as to the details of its application. The speech of Mr. Schultz will be found extremely interesting. It is certain that the vexations and injuries to business arising from our present methods are extremely embarrassing and even oppressive, and it is quite proper that suggestions for their improvement should come from such a body as the Chamber of Commerce. The proposed system would unquestionably require a better organized and more skillful civil service than we now possess for its successful application; but that is a recommendation rather than otherwise. It would be disgraceful if we should adhere to a bad system on the confessed ground that we could not furnish a good enough service to administer a better one.

Mr. Skinner, of Jefferson, promises to be one of the most active and fearless reformers of the present Assembly. His well-directed attack upon the waste of public money on the petty officers of the House was a highly creditable example of conscientious regard for public interests, while the bill for the abolition of the Insurance Department shows his possession of the right sort of independence. His proposed constitutional amendment for the institution of biennial legislative sessions will tend still further to elevate him in the estimation of the people, who, in this as in other States, are heartily sick of too much law-making. The kind of reception which such an amendment would meet with at the polls is hardly doubtful, and now that it has been thus early brought before the Legislature, it is to be hoped that its author will lose no opportunity of pressing it on the possibly unwilling attention of his colleagues.

The rivalry in pointing the way to retrenchment in the cost of Municipal administration in New-York is being actively sustained in the Assembly. Mr. Brooks' resolution as to the exorbitant cost of the inferior courts of the City has been supplemented by Mr. Varnum's resolution relating to the extravagance of the entire Judiciary system. Dr. Hayes' resolution proposing a graduated reduction of salaries above $1,200 has been put in a more comprehensive shape by Mr. Strahan's announced intention to introduce at an early day "a bill to enable and compel the authorities of the City of New-York to practice greater economy in the matter of expenditures for all departments, boards, courts, and commissions." It is to be hoped that the bill will be forthcoming at a very early day, and that its character will be as thorough as the announcement in regard to it would lead us to expect. If Mr. Strahan can show the people of this City, as he readily may, how $2,000,000 a year can be saved on the tax-levy, he will be regarded as a public benefactor.

Tax-payers will not be so much interested in that part of the report of the State Capitol Commissioners which gives the cost of the work as far as it is done, as in that portion which shows how much it will cost to finish the building. Nevertheless, it is upon the basis of the money lately expended that we are to calculate how much more will be needed. The building, as a whole, has cost too much. To be sure, it is not such a monument of extravagance and dishonesty as our own Court-house, nor is it so difficult to figure up the amount expended upon it as it is in the case of the Capitol at Washington. Last year, the State Commissioners estimated that the building, finished according to their plans, could be built and furnished for $5,198,625. They now report that the finished portion, which contains two of the three great rooms, one-half the heating apparatus, five of the seven elevators, one-half of the plumbing, all of the drainage and water-supply, &c., has cost, with materials on hand, $1,274,227. Therefore, they argue that they have kept the work within the bounds of their estimate; and they say that the additional sum of $4,200,000 will complete and furnish the building. This seems a great deal of money. But, since we have nearly finished the work, and nobody doubts the honesty and ability of the present Commissioners, it seems that there is nothing left for us but to go on to the end.

THE EDMUNDS RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. Edmunds' withdrawal of his resolutions will not disappoint the country nor entail serious loss upon the Republican cause. Having discovered that the prevailing sense of the party was adverse to their consideration, only one course was open to him. Unsophisticated minds will probably think that, on a subject so delicate and yet so important, the proper plan would have been to ascertain the judgment of Republican Senators before taking the step now hastily abandoned. It is hardly wise or seemly on the part of an individual, however eminent, to force upon a party, as a basis of policy, his own views on a question about which Republicans honestly differ; and he has no right to complain if, as a result of his injudicious action, he be obliged to "eat the leek" with more publicity than is pleasant to a sensitive nature. Mr. Edmunds blundered, and he now pays the penalty.

The time may not be distant when it will be the duty of the Republican Party to revise and enlarge its policy with regard to the questions growing out of the political condition of the freedmen and the measures required to protect the ballot in the Southern States. When this time comes, something more practical will be needed than the recital of a series of abstractions by which Mr. Edmunds proposed to test the judgment of the Senate. There might be a unanimous declaration respecting the validity of the constitutional amendments without in any degree bettering the prospect for their enforcement in States controlled by the Southern Democrats. Meanwhile, however, it must be admitted that neither in nor out of Congress is Republican opinion educated up to the point at which a demand for further legislation is likely to become imperative. Mr. Edmunds assumed that this point had been reached. His proposal that the Judiciary Committee should be instructed to report a bill for the protection of rights acquired under the amendments, presupposed a condition of Republican opinion which does not exist. As to certain material facts connected with the Southern elections there is, among Republicans, little or no difference of opinion. But there are wide differences as to the means to be employed for the prevention of the frauds and outrages which in at least two States rendered the elections worse than a mockery.

Indeed, the merit of Mr. Blaine's motion for an inquiry arose out of its adaptation to this condition of affairs. The Vermont Senator took it for granted that everything is ripe for further legislation. The Maine Senator more correctly interpreted Northern sentiment when he assumed certain alleged facts as a reason for investigating thoroughly the circumstances connected with the Southern elections in question. Even on this safe ground party action was not easily obtained. Unworthy personal jealousies, doubtless, had much to do with the indifference encountered by Mr. Blaine, and with the lack of earnestness which delayed the organization of the committee. But it must also be admitted that the disinclination to reopen the Southern question in any shape exists among Republicans to an extent which so clear-headed a man as Mr. Edmunds should not have overlooked. How far this feeling will yield to the results of the investigation now going on in Louisiana we shall know in due season. The fragments of testimony that have been received add little to our knowledge, though confirming general impressions previously received; and of the tone and sagacity of the committee we cannot form an opinion. For political purposes, the treatment of facts is as important as the facts themselves, as the melancholy fate of Mr. Boutwell's Mississippi report proves. And it is certain that in the present temper of the Republican Party, only the judicious handling of conclusive evidence will reconcile the party to a revival of the Southern controversy, or contribute to the growth of a demand for fresh legislation directed against the Democracy in the Southern States.

Indirectly, Mr. Edmunds' resolutions have aided in the crystallization of opinion on the controverted points of this question. Doubts may be entertained with reference to facts, and with reference to the expediency of making them the groundwork of a party programme. But when principles are at stake, doubt disappears; expediency is overshadowed by duty. Now, the sole redeeming effect of Mr. Edmunds' effort is seen in the broad line which it has brought to light as between the Republican and Democratic Parties. The vague phrases employed by the Democratic Senators to hide their position, touching the constitutional amendments, are dropped when they come to the principles which underlie the relations of States to the Federal power, and determine the nature of the authority which regulates the exercise of the franchise and guards the freedom and integrity of elections. Without robbing the States of an atom of the power conferred on them by the Constitution, Republicans will not yield the vital principle of the Union, or surrender the safeguards of rights acquired as consequences of the war. So far as these matters are concerned, the Republican policy can undergo no change. It is not dependent on Mr. Blaine's inquiry or Mr. Edmunds' resolutions. The Democratic position is now equally well defined. Pretenses hitherto employed to mitigate the odiousness of principles that culminated in rebellion, are at last discarded. Compelled in some specific way to meet the Edmunds resolutions, the Democratic Senators have promulgated, as their party's policy, an undiluted version of the old State rights doctrine. With the resolutions presented by Mr. Morgan on record, their party cannot escape the responsibility involved in its revival of nullification, and its bold reassertion of the Southern pretensions which led to the war.

THE PENSION ARREARS BILL.

The diversity in the estimates made by experts, or those who should be experts, of the amount of money which the pension arrearage law will take from the Treasury is extraordinary. But the same diversity occurred when the measure was acted upon last year, and the year before, and nobody has since thought it worth while, apparently, to make more accurate calculations. The Congressmen who had charge of the bill in the two houses fixed the probable amount called for at about $18,000,000. It is said that Pension Office authorities raise that to $33,000,000 at present, with enough more in the future to carry the total above $50,000,000. Mr. Sherman's estimate is reported to be about $100,000,000. Three years ago the Pension Commissioner computed the arrearage at about $13,500,000; but it has increased greatly since.

The existing law on the subject is section 15 of the act of 1873; and it declares that all pensions granted for death, wounds, or disease received in the service since March 4, 1861, shall begin at the date of the death or of the discharge from the service, "or from the termination of the right of the party having prior title to such pension"—provided that the application for the pension was, or shall be, filed with the Commissioner within five years after the right thereto accrued; otherwise, the pension is to begin at the date of filing the last evidence necessary to establish it. The bill now passed by both houses of Congress simply removes this five years' limitation clause or proviso.

So much for what the bill is. One of the best arguments in its favor was that in some cases soldiers who received disabilities in the service held back, through a commendable motive of pride or of patriotism, from applying for a pension until after the five years' limit had expired; and that then they asked a pension because the hard times or misfortunes drove them to do it. Hence it was urged with much force that the honorable feeling which prompted this delay should not work to their disadvantage. In other cases, the carelessness of the young soldier may have led him to refrain from looking after his pecuniary rights until the statute period had run against him. In still other cases, the degree of disability, especially from disease, which would entitle the claimant to relief, might not have developed itself until after the five years had passed, and yet be traceable to the injury received in service. In still other cases, ignorance that a valid claim existed, or a shrinking from going through the claim agent machinery, and, above all, inability to get at the required evidence, may have caused the delay. Still another argument attacked the five years' limitation as one that never had any basis of reason; for it must be admitted that, if intended to guard against frauds in trumping up pretended wounds or diseases, the real point for meeting this danger is not on arrears of pension, but on granting a pension at all. If the evidence is not satisfactory, the pension must not be given; if it is satisfactory, why not allow the pension to accrue from the time the injury was received? Finally, it is argued that if the discrimination in the law of 1873 is unjust, the amount of money required for righting it ought not to stand in the way, in view of the vastly greater amounts already paid and to be paid for pensions.

Against this measure it has been urged that, even admitting that the right to a pension is a contract right instead of a gratuity, the power and duty of Congress to prescribe some limitation of time in regard to applications, and to effectuate it by discriminations, have never until of late been disputed. In fact, we find that in 1862, under the first pension, there was a one-year limitation—the date being fixed at discharge, but if the application was delayed a year, then the pension "shall commence on the day of the filing of the application." In 1864 we find this limit extended to three years; and in 1873 the five years' limit was fixed upon, without, apparently, any question of its liberality and equity. It is urged that during this long interval, such restrictions operated as a kind of notice to claimants, and that subsequent claimants could hardly complain of injustice. Besides, it appears from the records that an enormous majority of the cases now to be affected by the bill have been those of applications perfected since 1873; and at this point comes in the question how far they have been multiplied by the industry of claim agents, purchasing the accruing benefit for small amounts—a branch of the subject, however, which we need not discuss. Still another argument, which caused almost all the debate in the Senate on the day the bill was passed, is that the new measure may, in some cases, give a pension for years during which disabilities were not developed or suspected, and that for such intervening time pensions are not designed. Finally, it was argued that so large a sum should not be taken out of the Treasury on a revocation of conditions long ago imposed.

But, after all, the strongest practical argument in favor of the measure was, doubtless, that it was "a soldier bill"; for on no other ground can we account for a bill appropriating so much money sweeping the House by storm, and the Senate by a vote of 44 to 4; while to this same peculiarity we must, doubtless, ascribe the prolonged deliberation of Mr. Hayes and his Cabinet, as to whether the bill should be signed or vetoed. Meanwhile, the not very abstruse and yet somewhat important calculation, whether the measure is likely to call for eighteen millions, or three or five times eighteen millions, still keeps modestly in the background.

ABORTIVE PROJECTS IN CONGRESS.

It seems that members of Congress learn little by experience or observation regarding the limitations imposed by a short session. It is perfectly well known that, with the exception of the period of the war, when legislation was absolutely necessary, very few measures of importance, other than the appropriation bills, have ever been carried through at the second session of a Congress. In the first place, the total number of working days in the session cannot exceed 80. From these must be deducted a fortnight for the holiday recess, and, with the interruptions which invariably occur, the available time is reduced to not more than ten weeks. Yet, year after year, members and committees force upon the two bodies of Congress propositions literally by the thousand. Congress has during the present session sat somewhat less than six weeks, yet there have been introduced in the House nearly a thousand bills, and in the Senate nearly one-fourth that number, in all about 1,200 bills, and the process still goes on. In the two houses, the bills of the present Congress number very nearly 8,000.

Among these proposed bills some are of general importance, on which much time is expended, for the most part, for nothing. Thus, an elaborate examination has been made into the question of the sugar duties. The Treasury Department, after a pretty thorough investigation, made certain definite recommendations. The Committee of Ways and Means of the House took the business in hand, and heard many witnesses, at considerable expense, and occupying a great deal of time. It is now announced that nothing will come of it. The committee cannot agree on any measure, and if they could, it is extremely improbable that anything they should recommend could obtain the approval of the House. The same committee has had before it the subject of free ships. It has gone through the same process, and with the same result. A good deal of time has been devoted to hearing arguments and taking "testimony," as it is curiously called. It is not probable that we shall ever have the benefit of a report on either question, or of the publication of the testimony. A measure has also been set on foot to regulate inter-State commerce, a subject of sufficient importance, certainly, and one which has attracted a great deal of attention. Hearing is now being given to the representatives of the various railroad lines to be affected by the bill; but it is certain that no legislation will follow, and probably no report will be made.

On the other hand, in the Senate, by the greatest promptness and energy on the part of Mr. Edmunds, having the advantage of previous consideration of the subject by his committee, a bill has been passed providing a partial remedy for the confusion which exists regarding the counting of the Electoral votes. But the bill is opposed in the House; a counter-proposition, of the most extreme and remarkable character, has been brought forward, and it is not likely that any bill whatever will become a law. Such measures as are completed in the meantime are rushed through with indecent haste, no sufficient time is allowed for mature deliberation, and millions are wasted for want of method and responsibility in legislation. Congress, beset with innumerable projects, does very little thoroughly, and does nothing at all in regard to the great body of bills which are submitted to it.

It would be a great deal better for the country if the attention of Congress could be confined during the short session to the appropriation bills, and to the uncompleted work of the preceding session. Of course, no hard and fast rule could be embodied either in the Constitution or in the statutes regulating this matter, but a little practical common sense on the part of members would go a great way toward settling the difficulty. If they would refrain from crowding the files of the two houses with propositions for which there is no earthly hope of even consideration, to say nothing of favorable action, time would be left to do with reasonable leisure and thoroughness the work that must be done. But so long as the great majority of Congressmen guide their conduct, not by the public interests, but by what they think will render them popular in their limited constituencies, we are not likely to see much improvement. At present things are going from bad to worse at each short session.
